Mr. BRADFORD. I am informed that the first amendment was made in 1870, and it was the second amendment that was approved on the 20th of June, 1874, as shown in the Statutes at Large of that year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what was the effect of that law, and in what condition did it leave that institution? Just here there occurred a most anomalous thing, an unprecedented thing in legislation of this sort; that, at a time when this institution had control of millions of money, application was made, as I have already stated, to enlarge the field of its investment, and, sir, the very law made in pursuance of such application, foreshadowing the doom that has overtaken this company, provided that it should go into liquidation, and in a short while thereafter it did go into liquidation. This remarkable law is the bone of contention between the members of the committee in reference to the needed legislation in this case.

But before I read the section, which is section 7 of the amended charter——

Mr. DOUGLAS. My colleague on the committee has inadvertently fallen into a mistake, and unless it be corrected his remarks will necessarily be somewhat confused and his argument not as intelligible as it should be. The fifth section of the act of 1865, under which this savings and trust company was incorporated, has been correctly stated. The first amendment to that act was approved May 6, 1870; and it was under that provision of the amendment of the charter that the trustees proceeded to invest in real-estate securities, instead of confining themselves, as previously, to United States securities. Then the next amendment was in 1874, which provided for the institution going into liquidation.

Mr. BRADFORD. My recollection was that they were all incorporated into one act. But it does not matter, so far as the argument is concerned. I hold that it is competent for this Congress now to remove by direct enactment the three commissioners who have charge of this institution, and to replace them by a single commissioner.

The third section of the act approved June 20, 1874, contains this language:

> And whenever it may be deemed advisable, or when so ordered by Congress, the general business and affairs of the corporation shall in like manner be closed up by the trustees of the corporation, as provided in section 7 herein.

Now, the previous part of the third section provides for winding up the affairs of certain branch banks that were established all over the country. Then this part of the same section declares that whenever Congress may so order, or whenever the trustees themselves shall deem it advisable, the whole institution shall be put into liquidation and placed in charge of commissioners, as provided for in the seventh section of the same act. The seventh section provides that three persons, to be selected by the trustees and nominated to the Secretary of the Treasury, I believe, and approved by him, shall take charge of all the assets of the institution, upon the execution of a bond by them in the sum of $100,000, duly secured, and on the taking of an oath faithfully to discharge the duties of their office.

Now, sir, if that act was constitutional itself, if it was binding, why then the control over the affairs of this institution at that time determined so far as the trustees themselves were concerned. I doubt myself, if the trustees had never assented to the act, whether it would have been binding upon the corporation, because there is a provision of that seventh section which says that all title to the property, rights, credits, and assets of that institution shall vest absolutely in the commissioners. Now, direct legislative enactment taking out of one person title to property and vesting it in another of course would be unconstitutional. But, sir, the trustees assented to the act. They nominated the persons who were to be commissioners, and therefore accepted this amendment to the charter, and it became binding upon them just as if incorporated in the original charter. Therefore, the very moment they nominated to the Secretary of the Treasury three persons as commissioners of that institution, that moment they became felo de se. They decreed their own death, and turned over the affairs of this institution to these three commissioners, who were mere agents and employés of the Government to wind up its affairs. Here are men acting by and with the consent of the trustees or original corporators, acting I say by and with their consent, the mere agents of the Government, acting under a bond payable to the United States, and upon which no power can sue except the United States. And I am sure, sir, it would not be competent, in any event, for any court of equity to give relief to the numerous creditors of this institution upon any proceeding instituted in reference to this bond. It has a good and important purpose, but does not compass such a thing as general indemnity in the premises.

But why may not Congress remove these commissioners? Gentlemen who hold opinions adverse to mine say the law would affect the vested right to hold office on the part of each one of the commissioners, and that inasmuch as it would do this it would be objectionable constitutionally. Now what right do the commissioners hold to be affected by law; what interest in property that is theirs, or interest in office that is theirs? What vested right of property of theirs is to be divested by the amendment I have proposed to this bill? The property is said to pass to them by the very terms of the act, "for the purposes of this act;" that is, they are mere commissioners in liquidation. They stand as assignees in bankruptcy. They took charge of these assets, and entered into bond with the United States to discharge their debts faithfully.

Now, I say that office is not property. In this country I cannot conceive that any office can be property. No doubt there are adjudications, some of them plain, distinct, and emphatic, declaring that office is property. But I see a tendency on the part of recent adjudications to abandon this theory altogether, and to declare that public office is a trust held for the benefit of the people. Chancellor Kent says that no such thing as a private office, such as was known at the common law as an incorporeal hereditament, does or can exist in this country. This relation created in this statute is not an office in any sense of the word. These commissioners are mere employés holding no office, and I say they have no beneficial interest whatever in the land, rights, credits, privileges, or franchises of the original corporation, and therefore they have nothing of which they are divested by this act. True they have a duty to perform; true they have a power to execute; but the commission of this duty can be revoked at any time, and this power to do certain things can be withdrawn at any time. That is the very thing I propose in this amendment to do. I propose to withdraw this power and relieve them of their duty, and their obligation upon their bond. I propose to divest them of nothing more than a power, and to vest it in others, and to have another bond upon which these freedmen can rely with greater security. Now what is a retroactive law? Mr. Sedgwick, in his treatise on constitutional law, says:

> A statute which takes away or impairs any vested right acquired under existing law, or creates a new obligation, or imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability in respect to transactions or considerations, already past, is to be deemed retrospective or retroactive. * * * And we have already noticed that the obligation of contracts does not include the remedy. With these modifications, however, the power of the Federal tribunals has been steadily exercised, and State laws of a criminal nature having a retroactive effect, or laws in any way impairing the obligation of contracts, are held to be void, and their operation arrested by the Government of the United States. It is, however, equally well settled, that a law is not unconstitutional under the Constitution merely because it is retrospective in its terms. A conflict arose in the State of Pennsylvania as to lands held under what were called Connecticut titles; and in 1825, on a case growing out of this question, the supreme court of Pennsylvania held that the relations between landlord and tenant could not exist between persons holding under such a title. Immediately after this decision the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed an act by which it was enacted that the relation of landlord and tenant should exist, and be held as fully between Connecticut settlers and Pennsylvania claimants as between other citizens of the Commonwealth; and this act the supreme court, in a subsequent case, held to be retrospective in its effect. A writ of error was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States; but the judgment was affirmed, the court saying that the act did not impair the obligation of the contract. "It is said to be retrospective. Be it so; but retrospective laws which do not impair the obligation of contracts or partake of the character of ex post facto laws, are not condemned or forbidden by any part of the Constitution."

Now, to the same effect, I will read a clause from the first volume of Kent's Commentaries:

> A retrospective statute, affecting and changing vested rights, is very generally considered in this country as founded on unconstitutional principles, and consequently inoperative and void. But this doctrine is not understood to apply to remedial statutes which may be of a retrospective nature, provided they do not impair contracts or disturb absolute vested rights, and only go to confirm rights already existing, and in furtherance of the remedy by curing defects and adding to the means of enforcing existing obligations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I contend that the law which I propose is simply remedial in its nature; that its object is to enforce more fully a duty already imposed. Its object is to afford a remedy for a numerous class of creditors that have not now under the law an adequate remedy. It does not come within the purview of such a decision, for instance, as that which was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Dartmouth College vs. Woodward, in 4 Wheaton. There the State of New Hampshire undertook to change altogether the name and character of a corporation. It transferred all the rights, powers, and privileges of the old corporation to a totally new one, and made provision for the substitution of new trustees for the old. In other words, it was a decision as if on quo warranto, forfeiting all the rights of the old corporation and vesting them in an entirely new and distinct one. All the law bearing upon this branch of the subject is exhaustively stated in that opinion; but that opinion does not controvert my view of this case; on the contrary, it tends to strengthen the position I have taken.

As I stated a while ago, the corporation is now defunct. It has no longer an existence; but this Congress has declared these commissioners shall hold together and keep in esse the rights of the creditors, because these commissioners are empowered to sue and be sued.

Now, have we not the right to remove these commissioners and substitute one commissioner instead of three? It may be said, why not have the three that are there now instead of the one I propose; would it not be just as beneficial to the interests of these colored creditors of this institution? I answer no, and I say that the report of the commissioners themselves, when it is read in the light of the circumstances and the history of this banking institution, declares that they cannot enforce the proper remedies on behalf of those for whom they act. Why, these commissioners have been in existence a year and a half, and have already expended about $150,000 in winding up the affairs of this concern, while they have declared a dividend of only 20 per cent. There are three commissioners to take charge of the affairs of this Freedman's Bank on behalf of these poor people, and yet, Mr. Chairman, two of these commissioners discharge no duty whatever. I am informed that two of them pay out of their share of the salary $500 apiece to Mr. Leipold, the acting commissioner. He is the man who discharges all the duties of the three commissioners, and to his conduct in the premises I shall presently invite the attention of the committee. If Congress should not interpose on behalf of these poor colored people in the way I propose, they are not likely to realize more than half of that to which they are entitled.

Now, what is the history of this institution? At the time this bank was organized—so it was stated by one of the witnesses, one of its principal projectors, before the committee—it was known that the colored soldiers of the Union were receiving pay which they were not competent to take care of, and out of which they were swindled by speculators and other evil-disposed persons. It was said this institution was organized for the purpose of gathering together and hoarding the payments made to these Union soldiers; and also that it was incidentally intended and designed that such others of the colored population as desired might put their little savings into the coffers of this bank and have them preserved. Now I say that since 1865, when the colored people were emancipated, there never has been an institution which might have been made so beneficial as this might have been. It was the very contrivance that was needed by these people above all others. And if, sir, an intelligent philanthropy had given birth to this thing and presided over it from that time down, it would have been a tribute to the memory of every single man who had any connection with its original establishment; it could have been made so useful, so beneficent to these people, who had so recently been liberated from slavery, who knew not how to take care of their little earnings and were encouraged to deposit them in the coffers of this bank. And although one would be led to suppose from the language of the charter upon its face that it was instituted for such a purpose as this, the history of the bank from its organization down to the present time forbids that we take any such view of the matter. I make this assertion upon the facts and history of the case, that since this Government was organized no such stupendous fraud has ever existed under its protection. And, sir, it seems to me wonderful that such a fraud should or could have existed in the District of Columbia and city of Washington and pass unchallenged by the authorities, and especially by those who had taken the colored man under their especial supervision and care.

The first witness brought before the committee was Aaron M. Sperry, the inspector of the Freedman's Bank and its branches. When called upon to testify he made such disclosures as I will proceed to read to this committee. He says:

It is proper for me to state that I was an employé of the company as an agent for the colored Twenty-fifth Army Corps until 1867, and after that as a cashier of the company until I was made inspector.

* * * * * * *

Question. Did you, upon your inspections, cause the accounts to be checked with the ledgers, and were the records sent to the principal office, showing the errors and omissions?

Answer. So far as possible I sent them.

Q. Were these duties omitted anywhere where inspections were made?

A. Yes, so far as it was possible. It was not possible literally to comply with these instructions, because I had come into the business three or four years behind time, and to carry out literally the instructions was almost an impossibility. I caused the ledger balances to be taken off, and it was to this point that I referred just now. In many cases, finding the ledger widely different from the original entries as returned to the principal office, I made improvements. To illustrate, take the case of the Washington branch, where in 1870 I found a difference between the ledgers and the general account of some $80,000, and by our best endeavors and the employment of additional expert force, we were never able to reduce this difference below, say, $40,000. I speak from memory.

It was to this point I referred just now. Then the witness, proceeding to tell something about the general management of the institution, further deposes:

Now, as to the want of conformity to law, or to the violation of prudent commercial usage, I confess that I hardly know what to say—

Remember, this is a statement in regard to the character of the management of that institution by one of its original foster-fathers, by its inspector, by one who remained close by the institution from the time it was founded down to the present time. By attention to his testimony you can form some idea of the peculiar character of this remarkable banking institution—

Now, as to the want of conformity to law, or to the violation of prudent commercial usage, I confess that I hardly know what to say. There is no branch where loans were made, that I am aware of, where those principles were not violated more or less. At Jacksonville, Florida, where I cannot charge fraud, I am sure that I never knew a grosser or more ingenious violation of prudent commercial usage. But I mean by fraud a case of a man stealing or sharing in the profits. There is a thousand-dollar item at Jacksonville which I cannot prove to be fraudulent, but which looks wonderfully like a steal, and is carefully covered into the books. This case illustrates the difficulty of bank inspection. It is the work of months to check off the accounts. In that case (where I suspect fraud, but am not able to prove it) the day's work had been extended, $1,000 short. The thing was very simple, but very ingenious. For instance: from Tom, Dick, and Harry, say that $3,300 had been received during the day and extended on to the margin, which went into the cash-book and then into the ledger; but, instead of extending it as $3 300, it was extended $2,300. That enabled $1,000 cash to be disposed of and no questions asked; and it was impossible to discover it except by going over the original footing, which involved a work of months. We struck it accidentally. In that case I always supposed fraud. The cashier was responsible under his bonds, but they were good for nothing. Then, again, loans in defiance of the authority of the principal office were made to wholly irresponsible parties. The cashier, W. L. Coan, was particularly reckless. The latest report from the commissioner's agent, Mr. Lockwood, is that at Jacksonville the company will probably lose $100,000 out of the $150,000 or $160,000 that was put out there. Coan was removed and that was all that could be done; his bond was good for nothing. At Beaufort, in addition to the frauds above mentioned, for which Mr. Seavel was prosecuted, he had made loans to a large extent, most of them without the knowledge of the principal office, and he had made false statements with reference thereto. The amount of loans, I think, was between $135,000 and $145,000, of which $100,000 may safely be set down as lost. At Memphis, the cashier, acting on his own responsibility, made loans involving some $60,000. His doing so did not involve any fraud, for it does not appear that he was to profit personally by them; but it certainly cannot be called much in accordance with prudent commercial usage, nor do I think it was in conformity with law.

I will now read further extracts from the testimony of this same witness before the committee. Here is a statement in regard to the management of the affairs of the bank in this city:

Q. Do you know anything of this deficit or fraud of $40,000 in the Washington branch?

A. That there is fraud in it I do not know. The thing simply cannot be explained. There have been so many blunders in the accounts; so many duplications of balances; so many wrong postings in the ledgers that the books are utterly and wholly unreliable. If that be fraud then it is fraud. When you find the book-keeping so bad that the debits and the credits are not always distinguished, and that, when the account is carried forward, the reference marks are left off, and so a number of duplications have crept in, what are you going to do about it? It may be fraud, and if the man was smarter I should say it was fraud, but I think that he was too dull for fraud. Still, when you come to a plain statement, I am unable to explain it, and I do not know anybody who is able. I never have had any reason to believe that there was stealing in the Washington branch office. I am the only man, too, who has ever preferred charges against the officers of the branch, but it was in confidence.

I now call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to another signal fact. These statements made by this witness have reference simply to the general management of the affairs of the bank and the condition of its books. He was asked with regard to a particular transaction:

Q. Do you know of any case occurring at the principal office here in Washington where there was an attempt to cover up the real nature of a previous transaction for the purpose of concealing it?

A. The Seneca Stone Company was undoubtedly such a case.

Q. Give us a history of the transaction.

A. I never knew anything about it until after the bank was closed. It was a concealed transaction.

Q. I see your name signed as witness to the transaction.

A. No, sir; my name is simply attesting the original papers; simply for the commissioners.

Q. I took it for granted that you knew something about the transaction.

A. Never, in the least. Those papers were merely copies of papers sent to my house, and were attested by me as true copies only.

Q. What state of facts do those papers disclose?

A. They disclose this: that a loan of $50,000 was made to Hallet Kilbourn and John O. Evans at a certain time, with certain collaterals attached—which are described in the agreement—and that a secret agreement was drawn up between the actuary, the finance committee, and these gentlemen, that, in case the note was not paid at maturity, the note and all the securities, except the bonds of the Maryland Mining and Manufacturing Company, should be surrendered to the makers of the note, and that the bonds in question—that is, the Seneca Stone Company bonds—should be taken in full payment of the note.

Q. Was not that agreement, between Kilbourn and Evans on the one hand, and the officers of the bank on the other, (with a secret article stipulating that on certain contingencies Kilbourn and Evans were to have their note returned and all the other securities except the Seneca Stone bonds,) an expedient to cover up a transaction between the actuary and the Seneca Stone Company of a date prior to that agreement?

A. No; I think it was something better than that. It was an effort to pay an old loan by a new loan which was larger. In other words, there had been on the books of the company a previous loan for some $35,000 to the parties representing the Seneca Stone Company. This loan was ordered paid, and so far as the books of the company show, it was paid.

Q. Ordered by whom?

A. By the board of trustees. Mr. Edgar Ketchum, of New York, who is an honest and faithful trustee, told me that he stuck to that until he got that loan paid.

Q. What loan?

A. The first loan to the Seneca Stone Company, $35,000. You will find it in the minute-book ordered paid, and that it was paid, so far as the books showed. About that time a loan of $50,000 was made to Kilbourn and Evans, the gentlemen referred to before. Among the collaterals was $75,000 of the Seneca Stone bonds, but there were other collaterals to make it pecuniarily a good loan.

Q. What was the worth of the other collaterals, with the stipulation that all the collaterals, except the Seneca Stone bonds, should be surrendered?

A. There were enough other collaterals with the loan to make it a good one, besides the names of the parties. The note did not mature, say for a year. When it did mature and was not paid, the then actuary demanded payment; and the parties stuck at him this secret agreement. He refused to give up the papers and was threatened with suits, and there was some wrangling about it; and finally the note and the other papers were given up and the Seneca Stone bonds retained.

By Mr. FARWELL:

Q. Who was the actuary who made this agreement?

A. Colonel Eaton. This thing did not come to light of course, because the agreement was in the nature of a secret agreement, till the maturity of the loan, when the actuary then in charge, Mr. Stickney, informed them that they had to pay the note or sacrifice their collaterals, and then they came forward with that secret agreement.

To a question by the chairman he says:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do I understand you to say that the return of the note of Kilbourn and Evans, and of the securities (other than the Seneca Stone bonds deposited by them) was not made till twelve months after the transaction?

A. It was not made until after the note matured, and until payment was demanded.

Q. Did you not say that that was twelve months afterward?

A. I think so. It was after the maturity of the note.

Q. That is what you mean to say?

A. It was not till the maturity of the note, whatever time that may have been, and until payment had been repeatedly demanded.

Q. And you think that that was twelve months after the date of the secret agreement?

A. Yes; I think so, or whatever may have been the term of the note. I say twelve months, because a year is the usual time.

Q. Do you now say that the transaction with Kilbourn and Evans had no relation whatever to the old transaction with the Seneca Stone Company, but that it was a new and good loan, as of the date when it was made?

A. So far as appearances went, it was; in other words, so far as the books of the company showed; and until the secret agreement was brought to light, there was no reason to suppose otherwise. In my opinion it was an attempt to foist the Seneca Stone bonds on the company.

Q. I read from the report of the commissioners of December 11, 1874, the following:

"Received, Washington, D. C., November 15, 1873, of the actuary of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, the within-mentioned securities, with the exception of the $75,000 bonds of the Maryland Freestone Manufacturing and Mining Company, with the understanding that our note for $50,000 is to be returned to us on or before the 18th instant.

"HALLET KILBOURN.
"JOHN O. EVANS."

Then—

"Received note as agreed upon.

"JNO. O. EVANS."

What is this transaction? The same thing is in the report of the commissioners and is also a part of the public records. The Seneca Sandstone Company, a Maryland mining and manufacturing company, was a bogus institution so far as the testimony discloses. The property was put in as part of the stock, say $500,000, and what money was invested by the stockholders was secured by a first mortgage on the property, which prevented the second-mortgage bonds from having any value whatever. They issued $100,000 of the second-mortgage bonds. And these are the bonds referred to in the testimony of Sperry as being the bonds in reference to which the trade was made with Kilbourn & Latta. I would like to know if this transaction is not one of the most fraudulent that ever occurred in connection with an institution of this character? And yet it occurred in a high place and between gentlemen who had the management of millions of money, the property of others. Kilbourn gives his own statement in regard to it. I would be willing to take his own evidence, without reference to anything else said in this whole testimony, to show what was the character of this transaction. This bogus company, of which distinguished gentlemen of the United States were the stockholders, beginning with the President of the United States and ending with Caleb Cushing, I believe—I say these distinguished gentlemen constituted this Maryland mining and manufacturing company, and it was contrived that this company should have so much money belonging to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. It was loaned upon the securities that have been referred to by Sperry. About that time the fact transpired publicly, and it was made known in a newspaper published in Savannah that this loan had been made and that it was an imposition upon the creditors and depositors of the bank. Now Mr. Kilbourn says that the actuary of the bank told him (and I give but the substance of this testimony fairly interpreted, as I think) that the company were in a close place and that the public must be deceived in regard to this transaction; that it must appear upon the face of the books, lest the company should be further involved in trouble, that that loan had actually been paid and that the note of Kilbourn and Evans was held and owned by the company, so that they might challenge the inspection of the public and that upon such inspection it might appear that the story which had been told upon them by the Savannah newspaper was wrong; that they had never done any such thing as was charged and that this money was properly secured by the promissory note of Kilbourn and Evans and by collaterals deposited at the same time the note was given. But here is a secret agreement—secret, as two of the witnesses declare, between the parties which in legal effect says on its face that Kilbourn and Evans were indebted to the company in the sum of $50,000—in which they state that they pledge and deposit with that company a certain number of collaterals, enumerating them, and these collaterals are deposited here for the protection of the company in order that they may recover this $50,000. But that secret agreement goes on to say further that at the time of the maturity of the note Kilbourn and Evans shall have—what privilege? The privilege of taking up the note by which the loan was secured and also the solvent collaterals, and leaving with the company only the $75,000 of the second-mortgage bonds of the Seneca Sandstone Company, which, according to the testimony, were not worth four cents a bushel at that time. That was the transaction between these parties.

Now, I think this is about of a piece with all the other transactions of this company from the beginning down to the close of its career. This is but a sample. Those high in authority here, those owning a vast amount of real estate in Washington—respectable gentlemen, putatively, and standing high in the republican party, the professed guardians and protectors of the colored people—those are the men who were the beneficiaries of this unfortunate concern, the Freedmau's Bank.

Now, I desire to call attention to further testimony of this same witness. When he comes to speak of the various branches of this bank (and it should be remembered that there were thirty-four of these scattered all over the land) he says:

At Atlanta, where the defalcation occurred of which I spoke in my last testimony——

The CHAIRMAN. Was that one of the banks authorized to grant loans?

The WITNESS. No, sir; this is a clean steal, not an error of judgment. It is the case where the cashier was convicted of embezzlement.

Then he comes to testify about the Lexington branch:

The CHAIRMAN. Is Lexington the point where this pious young man, this missionary from Oberlin, acted as cashier?

The WITNESS. Yes; that is a good description, I think. His name is Hamilton; he graduated, and became an Indian agent. It is a singular coincidence that the man who robbed us at Atlanta begged off that he might accept an Indian agency, whereby he could pay us the sooner, and that Mr. Hamilton went off from the bank and took an Indian agency. He is an Indian agent now.

He had been stealing from the Freedman's Bank, and he wanted to be put in the employ of the Government that he might steal enough from the Government to pay back these unfortunate colored people whom he had robbed at the branch bank at Lexington.

As to the deficit referred to at Lexington, the entries on the books were so successfully managed as to have defied detection by any ordinary inspection. It would only have been by good fortune, in striking the particular pass-books, that any differences would have been discovered. To illustrate: the ledger showed that we owed a man $200, but when we got hold of his pass-book we found that we owed him $1,600. Hamilton picked his men, the men who would not come near the bank for a year perhaps. The man at Atlanta did better than that, for he ran duplicate pass-books.

These were the pass-books given to depositors. At one of the branches, one of the cashiers selected his depositors from away off, thinking they would never get home again; but the Atlanta man beat him; he had duplicate pass-books. He manipulated one pass-book while the colored man had the other.

Says the witness further:

I should be very loath to reflect upon the clergy, and certainly not upon religion, but I must say that Mr. Corey, at Atlanta, was also a Congregational minister.

Now those who are curious in regard to the history of this Freedman's Bank may wish to know what the opinion of this witness is as to the causes, proximate and remote, that led to the failure of the Bank. He gives in a nutshell the causes which gentlemen have perhaps been able to gather from the statements I have been compelled to make hurriedly in these extemporaneous remarks in regard to the transactions of the bank.

Hear what the witness says on this subject:

Q. State in a general way all the causes, proximate or remote, which appear to have been the most prominent in bringing about the failure of the bank, as far as you have been able to form an opinion from such examination as you have given to its affairs.

A. Had there been scrupulous conformity to law in every particular, and carefulness in selecting investments, such as men fully conscious of the sacred nataré of their trusts ought to have exercised, I do not think the company would have failed, for the reason that its franchises were most valuable. It had, as it were, carte blanche in reaching four millions of persons who were prudent, industrious, and ever-increasing economical depositors, so that whatever the expenses might have been in originating the company, its increase in depositors would have been in greater ratio than its expenses, and ought, before the time the company failed, to have brought it into a condition of solvency, even supposing that the current rate of expenses actually incurred had been kept up. I regard the first fatal departure from sound policy to have been the erection of the banking-house in Washington. For whatever may be said of the amendment of the charter, judicious investments in real estate are as good securities as such a savings-bank need to have in part. There got to be around the principal office of the company an unwholesome savor of connection with what is popularly known as the Washington "ring," of the existence of which ring I have no knowledge. At any rate, the management was first opened to criticism by the politicians. In addition to that, there were violent and unjustifiable partisan attacks on the bank. The immediate causes of the failure of the institution were undoubtedly the panic of 1873, and the ostensible, though not the real, connection of the bank with the house of Jay Cooke & Co. This led to such a reduction of the balances held by depositors that, even if nothing further had transpired, the institution would have been closed by its expense account.

Q. Was the unwholesome savor which hung around the skirts of the bank a cause of the partisan attacks upon it of which you have spoken, or were the attacks the result of the knowledge that such savor existed?

A. It was the immediate cause. I believe that had the bank been as immaculate as it ought to have been it would have suffered these same attacks.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a mere assumption.

The WITNESS. Then I will say that had the bank been as immaculate as it ought to have been and had suffered these same attacks, it could have resisted them without loss. I could have gone to our depositors, and simply said, "These things are not so," and I would have been believed.

Mr. RIDDLE. But you could not say that.

The WITNESS. No, sir; I had to make so much of a clean breast of it that I spoiled all that I said. I have been waiting two years, Mr. Chairman, to say this. I can prove to you that for two years I have been working to get a congressional investigation.

Here is this witness who for two years knew that this colossal banking institution was robbing nearly a hundred thousand of the colored population of the country; for two years he had pronounced against it in the councils of this corporation; for two years he had sought congressional investigation. Yet nothing was ever done so far as the protection of these people was concerned except amending the charter, the result of which was not to benefit them but to injure them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the characterization of the conduct of this concern and of the individuals connected with it by a colored man, C. B. Purvis, one of the most intelligent and cultivated colored men I have ever met in my life. He is a physician, practicing his profession in this city. He was one of the original trustees. He is devoted to his race. He did what he could, I have no doubt, to protect his people from the spoliation and robbery committed in this bank; but he was unable to accomplish his good wishes in the premises.

Question. State your residence and profession.

Answer. I reside at 1118 Thirteenth street, Washington City. I am a physician, and am a professor at the medical school of the Howard University.

Q. State what connection you had, if any, with the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

A. I have been trustee of that bank since March, 1868. Just before it closed I was its first vice-president and a member of the finance committee. I was for one week, I believe, a member of the finance committee. I was put in on the day of the resignation of Cooke, Huntington, and Brodhead, and I resigned at the next meeting of the committee, I believe.

* * * * * * *

Q. And at that time—

Witness had just spoken of a particular time in reference to which he had been questioned—

Q. And at that time there had been an investment in the bonds of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to the extent of $50,000.

A. Yes. Jay Cooke & Co. wanted the Freedman's Bank to take an agency to sell some of these bonds, and they also had borrowed $50,000 from the bank and had given some of these bonds as collateral security, giving us their guarantee to take them back on five days' notice. Both these cases came up at the same meeting of the trustees, and that was my first knowledge of irregularities in the bank. Henry D. Cooke was a member of the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., and was chairman of the finance committee of the Freedman's Bank, and was permitted at that time to exercise unlimited control of its finances.

This man occupied the double position, I believe, as was stated by this witness, of chief manager of the Freedman's Bank and chief manager of a bank in this city that was the property of Jay Cooke & Co. Besides that, this remarkable fact is disclosed in the testimony that this Henry D. Cooke was a stockholder in that Seneca Sandstone Company which obtained so much of the money of this banking institution upon the flimsy security of $75,000 of its second-mortgage bonds.

The question is further asked of Purvis:

Q. The second-mortgage bonds of the Maryland Freestone Mining and Manufacturing Company were given to the bank as collateral security for certain loans?

A. Yes. The first loan to the Seneca Stone Company was given on first-mortgage bonds as collateral. That was a comparatively small loan, and it was afterward increased from $20,000 to $50,000; and how the securities were converted from first-mortgage into second-mortgage bonds I never found the mortal being who knew anything about. The trustees always supposed that that loan was called in until after the bank closed, and we did not know what had become of the first-mortgage bonds until Kilbourn and Evans sent their attorney, Mr. E. L. Stanton, to us to prosecute us for certain securities which they had given us. Then Mr. Stickney, the actuary, or Mr. Alvord, the president, laid before the trustees the nature of this demand, which was that we return to Kilbourn and Evans their note and securities. None of the trustees had ever heard of the circumstances before, unless it may have been the members of the finance committee, and they never let on that they knew it; they all denied emphatically that they knew it, at least those of them who were present. Messrs. Cooke, Huntington, and Brodhead were out of the finance committee at that time. Kilbourn and Evans demanded the return of their securities and that our guarantee to them be carried out, which was that, if the Seneca Stone Company did not pay the loan within a certain time, (I think ninety days,) we would remit as security for it $95,000 of second-mortgage bonds, (which bonds were already in the possession of the bank.) That was the first I ever heard of the Seneca Stone Company's loan not having been paid; and it came up in that form. We were a good many months considering that matter.

Now I want to call attention to the manner in which this concern was induced to do what Mr. Cooke wanted to have done in the premises, to make that exchange of good for insufficient securities. This witness explains, so far as it was possible for him to do so, the circumstances under which the secret agreement was entered into:

Q. Did the board authorize this to be done?

A. We allowed them to take back the note and securities. The securities were worthless things. They were the stock of the Metropolis Paving Company, I think. There was a good deal of dispute in the board about the matter, but it was carried by a majority vote.

Q. Was there any paper or any order signed by any person authorizing the exchange of first-mortgage bonds to second-mortgage bonds?

A. Never. Mr. Tuttle says that Mr. Cooke had a hand in getting them exchanged; that he came to him one day when he was busy signing bonds and said, "I wish you would sign this paper in reference to the Seneca Stone Company." Cooke said that it was carrying out the wish of the board of trustees. Tuttle didn't know what it was, and he said, "Mr. Cooke, I have not time to read it. I am busy now signing bonds." Cooke asked him whether he would not believe what he said. "Well," said Tuttle, "you have been the financial agent of the Government and have had a great many millions pass through your hands. I have no doubt of what you say, and I will take your word. So he just signed his name to the paper, and Cooke went away with it. And that is the way Tuttle says that the first-mortgage bonds were exchanged for second-mortgage bonds. I met Mr. Tuttle on the street yesterday and he told me this story and says that Cooke will not deny it.

Q. Then it was done by the order of Tuttle, on the representations of Cooke?

A. Yes. When the actuary laid before us the demand of Mr. Stanton, we learned tha this agreement had been signed and hidden away by Mr. Eaton, the actuary, and by the finance committee, Cooke, Huntington, Clephane, Tuttle, and Brodhead. It seems they had all signed it, but had never reported it to the board of trustees. The only reason why we returned the note to Kilbourn and Evans was that there was a considerable run on the bank at that time, and we did not want it to go out to the public that the bank had been sued. Mr. Langston was appointed to investigate the matter, and he unearthed the facts after a long investigation of some weeks; and yet the members of the finance committee who were present when the thing was first reported denied emphatically having ever signed that agreement or having had anything to do with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BRADFORD] has expired.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope that by unanimous consent of the committee the gentleman will be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair has often ruled that the Committee of the Whole, under the rules, has no power to extend the time of any gentleman. Still the Chair does not feel himself bound arbitrarily to cut the gentleman off if he wishes to proceed and no one makes objection. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman about how much time he desires?

Mr. BRADFORD. Half an hour, I think, will be enough.

Now I wish to call attention to another statement of this witness, showing the loose and careless manner in which the affairs of this bank were administered. Loans were made at the request of individuals whom the managers met upon the street; but these, we are bound to infer from the testimony, were that class of individuals who generally controlled the financial affairs of the bank. Throughout the testimony you will find that a few individuals, some of whose names I have already mentioned, were the real personages who controlled this institution and who, so far as we are able to discover, were large beneficiaries by their manipulation of the bank.

Q. Was there not another loan made on the representations of Mr. Alexander R. Shepherd?

A. It appears in the report of the commissioners that Mr. Vandenburgh owes a large amount. These loans never came directly before the board of trustees, or, at least, a very few of them did. The actuary, in reading his report to the board, would say, "City securities, (naming the class,) so much invested." Some members of the finance committee, including Moses Kelly, the sinking-fund commissioner, were very earnest in the defense of these securities, and Mr. Kelly invested largely in that kind of security for his own bank, (the National Bank of the Metropolis.) I was very much opposed to it, as I was opposed to everything connected with the board of public works.

Well, he was sensible.

Stickney staid at my house, and, talking with me one day, he said that he had never done a wrong thing in the bank except letting Vandenburgh have a large sum of money one night. I asked him how much. I think he said $30,000. That perfectly astonished me, so I "went into" him and questioned him very closely, thinking that I would have occasion to recollect it and use it. He said that Vandenburgh came to him wanting some money to pay off his hands that night, and that Shepherd said, "Vandenburgh's accounts are approved, but look what a crowd. (This was on Saturday night.) I will pay you on Monday, if you let him have the money."

There were the employés on the outside, hungering and clamoring for their money. It was after bank hours; and this hungry crowd were desiring to have their pay.

Stickney said that he would let him have the money, and he did let him have it. Afterward he went day after day to see Mr. Shepherd, and could not see him. When he did see him, Shepherd was more forcible than polite, and told him that he was in a damned hurry to get that money. Subsequently Shepherd said to him, "If you do business in that kind of a loose way, you are a damned fool;" and that time he told the truth. This is what Mr. Stickney says about the matter, and I presume he is to be believed on that point.

Now, inasmuch as I propose by the amendment which I design to offer to remove these commissioners, I shall read what this witness says about the conduct of Mr. Leipold as a reason why he should be removed. Remember he is the acting commissioner, the man who manages the affairs of the bank. The other two commissioners have turned the matter over to him, and allow him, I am informed, a part of their salaries, respectively.

This man, Leipold, is the custodian of all the property these 70,000 creditors of this institution have as security for their deposits. Now, this man I want to remove and put another in his stead, a man selected by the Secretary of the Treasury, a man over whose conduct the Secretary of the Treasury shall keep and maintain supervision, with the power of removing him and putting another in his stead whenever he detects any failure to comply with the law or prudent commercial usage. But let me read again from the testimony:

Q. Had you a conversation with Mr. Leipold, in presence of the other two commissioners, in reference to the employment of a Mr. Cook?

A. Yes. Mr. Leipold was recommended to us as a trustee by Mr. Ela, the Fifth Auditor, and by some others, as being a very fine accountant, and we elected him on that recommendation. He was then a clerk in the Treasury, getting just as much salary as he gets as commissioner of the bank; that is, $3,000. The other two commissioners were Mr. Creswell, who was elected because he had been a Cabinet officer, &c., and my father. Just before the bank went into liquidation, Mr. Cook, a young colored lawyer, a young man of marked ability, was employed by us as our solicitor, and when we went into liquidation he still wanted to retain the position. I told him that if he would write a letter I would take it to the commissioners and would tell them all about him. He wrote the application, and I went in with it and with an application from another young man who wanted to be an auctioneer for the bank. The commissioners read Mr. Cook's application, and I instantly saw Leipold get angry. I went on and gave my reasons why I thought that he should get the appointment. I said that this was a bank for the colored people, and that, as they would have had a large number of deeds of release executed and as this young man was a notary public, it would be well to let him have the appointment. Leipold got up and said, "We will not do it." His manner was very offensive. He said, "I came here, not for this paltry $3,000 a year, but for my reputation. I intended to do all this legal work myself; to go into the court and to make a reputation as a lawyer. I want to get out of this Government employment, and I want to receive the fees in these cases myself. I do not see any reason why I should not take these deeds of trust and release and make them out myself at home, and receive the extra fee for the business." To which I replied, in a very straightforward way, "If I had known for one minute that you came here to make this a stepping-stone out of which you could make money, I would not have voted for you." Some compliments passed between us, and I retired.

Now then I come to another statement of this same witness in regard to other officers of this banking institution:

The commissioners had been in existence some two months or more, and we had turned over to them everything belonging to the bank, but Mr. Stickney had not turned over this note until it was discovered in this way.

That is a particular note which had been hid away by this man Stickney for a long time and only became known to the officers of the bank in the way described in this testimony, but which I will not now take time to read. I read again from the testimony:

The affairs of the Freedman's Bank ought to have been wound up long before, because it was a very unwieldy and unmanageable institution, and I had been trying for a year or two to have it wound up. The cashiers at most of the branches were a set of scoundrels and thieves; I mean particularly those at Beaufort, Jacksonville, Florida, Mobile, and Vicksburgh. These fellows were all thieves and scoundrels, and made no bones about it. The cashier at Jacksonville took $6 000 from the bank and loaned it to his son-in-law, without security, in order to make up a deficit which the son-in-law had in his account as tax-collector in one of the counties.

This man's son-in-law had been a tax-collector in the State of Florida and had stolen a sum of money from the people of that State. And when he was appointed an officer of the branch bank at Jacksonville he got into the institution and stole money enough from the poor negroes to refund what his son-in-law had stolen from the people of Florida; and to this he was driven because he was afraid his son-in-law would otherwise be punished. I will read further:

They were all thieves and scoundrels, but they were all pious men and some of them were ministers. The cashier at Jacksonville is a minister, and to-day he has a large Sunday-school; almost all of them are ministers. I think that Mr. Beecher, the cashier at Montgomery, acted dishonestly. He may pay every dollar of it back, but he took the money of the bank without authority.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is shown by this testimony that there was as cashier of the bank in the city of Washington a man by the name of Boston, who was not only guilty of the general practices of his fellows upon which the testimony I have read throws so much light, but he was also guilty of the mean transaction of fraudulently appropriating the money deposited in the bank by a colored man who lived in the city of Alexandria. When this colored man went to the bank and asked him about the transaction, he began to shed tears and owned he had forged the colored man's name and drawn out his money. This man was the cashier, as I have stated; one of the trusted officers of the bank. Now, why was it that in this large banking institution in the city of Washington—the parent institution, located here, controlling all these branch banks—why was it, I say, that in all the ramifications of this bank, with thirty-odd branches scattered throughout the whole southern country, there were employed, without a single exception, none but dishonest and incompetent men? It was never contemplated, perhaps, at the outset that this parent bank in the city of Washington should extend itself throughout the country through the agency of branch banks. But this contrivance was adopted in order that all the money which could be hoarded by the colored people of the South might be gradually drained into the city of Washington and into the parent bank, so that it might be manipulated and controlled by this particular ring alluded to by Mr. Sperry. Why, they went out as missionaries all over the land, and declared to the colored people of the southern country that this bank would take care of their funds for them; that this bank was solvent, well and ably managed, and that it not only had the support and countenance of the General Government but the General Government guaranteed the full and faithful repayment of every single dollar deposited by them. These things were printed on the pass-books which were handed to these poor and deluded colored people of this country.

By this sort of contrivance all this money was collected from the various banks, and not one single set of books, not a single set of books at any branch bank, not one set of books at Washington, not any books anywhere could give you any more than an imperfect idea in regard to the transactions either of the parent bank or any of its branches. Somewhere about $60,000,000 of the hard earnings of this poor people passed at one time or another into the hands of such men as I have alluded to and such men as have been alluded to in the testimony of Mr. Sperry and Mr. Purvis. They would not select competent men; they would not select honest men, because, I suppose, they believed that such men would protect these innocent depositors. They got men into office as tools in order that they might manipulate them.

And the rest of the testimony, Mr. Chairman, is in keeping with that which I have already detailed. I will not undertake to analyze it at all. I do not pretend to have done more than to call the attention of the House to the salient facts in the history of this most nefarious business.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I know that it is an unpleasant task for one occupying the position I do to bring such a matter as this to the attention of the country. It will not be believed that I, coming from the particular region from which I do come, am really a friend to the colored people; that I have any desire to protect them in the premises. But I would put the conduct of myself and of the committee who have been charged with this investigation into comparison with the conduct of those who have been deputed as guardians of the colored people and who have managed the finances of this great banking institution. Sir, the administration of this bank has been like the administration of everything connected with the Government since 1868 in the southern country. All the affairs of this Government have been administered in the South, or at least in the State in which I reside, in the same way in which the affairs of this bank have been managed. A desire has existed simply to get hold of and control the political power of the country. It was expected that the South would be tied and fastened to the republican chariot. Since 1868, since the so-called rehabilitation of the State of Alabama, there never has been a time when the laws of this country were enforced there according to the Constitution and the law of the land; there never has been a time when justice was judicially administered in that country; there never has been a time when the liberty of the citizen of that country was safe from molestation on the part of those who assumed to be officers of the Government. It is to bring this matter, in connection with what has been revealed in the testimony in regard to the affairs of the Freedman's Bank, to the attention of the country, that I say what I do on this occasion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I for one hope that this state of things will not longer continue. I can see no reason why justice should not be done in this particular case to the immense number of colored people whose all may be involved in the settlement of the affairs of this bank. I do not see any good reason why a wholesome administration should not prevail in the country from which I happen to come. Since 1868, as I have already stated, we of the South have been brought in contact with just such persons as those who have managed the Freedman's Bank, and whose characters have been unfolded to you, not by democratic witnesses, not by men who have come from the South, but by republicans, by men who have been intimately associated with the republican party and with the control of the colored people of the country. Now, just as these people are are all the employés and agents of the Government with whom the people in my country come in contact daily. And this fact I think cannot be recognized fully in the country, else I believe an effort would be made on the part of the people of the North to rescue their southern brethren from the tyranny under which they are groaning.

Affairs have improved a little in our country, but I say they must improve wonderfully before we can get into a condition in which it can be said that civil liberty prevails in that land. The circuit and the district courts of the United States in and for the State of Alabama have absolute control almost of all the conduct of the people of Alabama, or at least have exercised that control until a comparatively recent period, when the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States was delivered in reference to certain acts under which they claimed the right to control these people. Now, sir, in these courts there was not that regard for the liberty of the citizen, there was not that regard for the property and rights of the citizen, that you see exemplified or rather illustrated in other tribunals of the land. I myself have been a witness, Mr. Chairman, of the manner in which the people of that country have been controlled and tyrannized over by these judges, until their conduct calls aloud for the condemnation of Congress and for the reprobation of all the people of this country.

I do not, sir, come here to complain of the Government of the United States, because I believe that the Government of the United States is beneficent and means protection for these people. I do not here to-day say aught of complaint about any of the measures which have been inaugurated in this country for the purpose of re-organizing the Union and restoring to the South its political privileges in the Union. These measures are now historical measures. They are approved by the people from whom I come, and I stand here myself to-day to approve them. We have been reviled in Congress and out of it and charged with rebellious sentiments and a desire to injure the Government. I say we entertain no such desire to-day and have never entertained any such desire. It is the wish of our people to be as faithful to the Union and as true to every obligation to this Government—and it is our purpose so to be—as the citizens of any other part of the country. Alarms are spread all over the country that it is the purpose of the South to do something wrong with reference to the great obligations imposed upon them growing out of the late unfortunate struggle between the two sections of the country.

There lurks not in the breast of any single man south of Mason and Dixon's line any such purpose as has been charged upon our people. We have pledged ourselves solemnly, we have pledged in every way that it is possible for us to do so, that we will abide by the adjustment of 1868, or at least so far as the people of Alabama are concerned. I know we have promised and pledged ourselves to abide by the adjustment of 1868, whereby a constitution was framed and put upon the people of the State of Alabama and a new civilization instituted there. We expect to discharge all our duties to this Government, no matter what they may be; and, no matter whether some persons may consider that they are onerous or not, we will discharge them all faithfully.

There is a great debt hanging over this country, and we know it. How far we have been responsible for it is a matter which pertains to history alone, and is not now and here to be discussed. But I say here, in the presence of the House, that the southern people desire and intend to pay and to contribute to the utmost of their ability to pay every single dollar of the national debt according to the tenor of the bond, not in such money as might be made by Congress, but in such money as is the legal money of the commercial world. No party harbors any intent or purpose to do anything but that. That debt to-day is a national debt; it is the debt of the North, the debt of the South, the debt of the whole nation. It is slanderous to say that southern people contemplate in any conceivable way the impairing of the obligation of that debt or contemplate paying it in any other way than that contemplated by the people of the North.

In addition to that, there is an obligation resting upon the whole country to take care of and make provision for the soldiers of the late war. The southern people, as the conduct of their Representatives on this floor has demonstrated, will be as forward as the people of any section of this Union in providing for the maimed soldier. They regard it as the highest obligation of the Government, an obligation higher and greater than that of the public debt, to pay to the soldier any bounty or any compensation that was promised him when he enlisted and became a soldier of the United States.

No dislike exists anywhere in the mind of any single man who belongs to my party I believe in the South—certainly in the State in which I reside—of any other man simply because he was a Union soldier and fought to maintain the Union. We regard him as a soldier of the Union of which we are now members. We are no longer confederate citizens, the confederacy is dead, long ago dead, and nobody ever thinks about it except as something that is connected with an unfortunate portion of the history of the United States. And I renew what I have already stated to be the pledge of the people of the South, to do justice to the soldier as fully I will say—yes, we will go further, for fear of a suspicion attaching to us in this case, than the people of the North—in providing the soldiers with such support as may be found in the pension laws of the United States.

It is said, too, that we want the rebel debt paid, or some other debt or obligation of some sort, I hardly know what, to which it is said we lay some sort of claim, There is nothing more ungenerous than the charge that there lurks in the mind of any of the southern people any desire that any obligation assumed by the Confederate States, or by any of the Southern States during the war, shall be discharged in whole or in part by the United States, by any means whatever.

Ah! it is said, however, that while we cannot do these things, for they would be flagrant violations of our duty and would meet the universal condemnation of the people of the North, yet we seek to accomplish by indirection that which we do not desire to do directly. What is that? It is that we mean to get even for the losses incurred during the war and immediately after the war, and for the imposition of the tax of three cents a pound upon cotton by reprisals upon the Government of the United States in the form of claims for spoliation. I say that the people of the South have never been and cannot to-day be considered hypocritical in any respect whatever. They do not expect to be paid any of these losses, and no more think of them now than if they had occurred a hundred years ago. The fact that a few southern people have presented claims to this House for its consideration is no evidence of a concentrated attempt on the part of the people or their representatives to press the allowance of these claims or of any others that might be set up by these same people. These claims have never yet been considered by this House as a body. What action may have been taken in regard to them by the committees of the House I do not know and the character of them I do not know. But this I say, that these claims, growing out of spoliations that occurred during the war or immediately afterward by acts of soldiers of the Union, never will be supported by democratic members upon this floor from the South.

If cases of severe hardship shall receive the favorable consideration of this Congress, no matter what may be the views of particular members, those individual instances will be rare and extraordinary, and there will be no system of claims, no concentrated action, no desire to get even for losses by any form of reprisals whatever.

This it seems to me ought to set matters right everywhere in this country, so far as we are concerned. There is an effort being made now on the part of the republican party to gain power, by saying that such are the unhallowed purposes of southern members in this Hall, and of the southern people generally. But I do not believe that the American people as a mass, or even a majority of the republican party, will ever give credence to any such unfounded insinuations against us.

The republican party themselves cannot afford to trust to such people as I have alluded to already the management of this Government even in the South. They cannot afford to trust the management of this Government to such people as have been the cashiers, the actuaries, the managers of the Freedman's Bank in the South. It would require a despotism in this country to keep up such a Government as this. It would require such a strain upon the country, such an onerous taxation to maintain the internal-revenue system conducted by such people, that this people could not stand it. But the effort is being made to frighten them by these bugaboos and scarecrows in reference to the purposes and conduct of the southern people.

I am satisfied that the true republicans of the North will no longer regard these things. I am satisfied that the republican party of the North, at least the most of them, will no longer believe that such is the purpose of any democrat upon this floor, whether he come from the North or the South, simply because of charges of fraud such as have been made in the newspapers of the day, and at the other end of the Capitol, by men prominently connected with the Government. I cannot persuade myself that the people will believe this.

The CHAIRMAN. The additional half hour given the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for fifteen minutes.

Mr. DUNNELL. When the time of the gentleman was before extended for a half an hour, there was no objection, for he was still engaged in the legitimate discussion of the bill before the committee. But he has evidently run out of that matter, and is now making a general political speech.

Mr. RANDALL. And a very good one, too.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman for fifteen minutes?

There was no objection, and the additional time was granted accordingly.

Mr. BRADFORD. The gentleman says I have got off the legitimate line of my argument. In reply to that I say that the administration of the affairs of this Freedman's Bank is so intimately connected, as I have been able to show by the testimony which I have read, with the administration of public affairs in the city of Washington and all over the South, that I cannot avoid alluding to the particular subjects to which I was calling the attention of the Committee of the Whole when my time expired. It is all one vast concern.

The character of the administration of the affairs of this Freedman's Bank is the character of Federal administration in many parts of the United States; I will not say "Federal administration;" I mean republican administration. It is not worse here in the Freedman's Bank than in the internal-revenue service in Saint Louis. It is not worse in this bank than it is in the internal-revenue service or the administration of justice in the South. Therefore I say that they are all of the same character, and so intimately connected that a discussion of one involves the discussion of all.

And I believe it is not the deliberate purpose of all the members of any party in the North longer to keep the southern people in bondage; I believe that the almost universal desire of the people is to have a perfectly restored Union and an honest and economical administration of public affairs. I think they are now satisfied that it is impossible to keep the Government incorrupt and pure in one part while it is absolutely corrupt and impure in another part; that the impure part will finally infect the other, and general and universal corruption will ensue.

I appeal to those who may hear me now, and to everybody who may hear anything in regard to the matters which have been discussed here to-day, to do justice to the South, and no longer to believe that we are the outlaws and the hypocrites our enemies may please to term us, may charge us with being.

Give us good government at home, give us a wholesome administration of justice, and we shall be, as we declared and pledged ourselves we would be, as true friends to the colored people as any that are to be found on this continent, and as fast and never-failing friends of the Union.

Sir, I have felt myself called upon to make these statements in regard to these matters by charges and accusations that were made not long ago by a Senator from Massachusetts, I believe, in the other end of the Capitol. I believe it was said by him that it was not right to trust those who had been bred in slavery times with the care of the colored people or with any part of the political power of this country; and I might say he went so far as to declare that it would be perilous to trust them with seats in Congress, and branded them with the very things to which I have alluded. Hence I have felt called upon to review these charges and answer them as well as I could.

But I repeat, Mr. Chairman, there can be no higher, no more solemn assurances of our devotion to the Union and our purpose to keep in good faith all the obligations that now rest upon us than have been given in a thousand ways by the people of the South. We have had what some people have regarded as sufficient provocation to arouse what would have been declared a rebellious spirit on our part; and I have no doubt that these acts were intended to provoke us to a display of such rebellious spirit. But in the years that have intervened since 1868 there has never been, except in single sporadic cases here and there, any display by the people of the South of any such sentiment. And making this avowal as I do, making this appeal as I do to the sense of justice of the people of the North, I declare that I have confidence in those people; I have confidence even in the mass of the republican party. I do not believe that it is the deliberate purpose of any considerable portion of that party to perpetuate either upon the whole country or upon the South their rule as it has existed since 1868. It would be a catastrophe for the whole country; it would be, I confess, an especial calamity to the unfortunate and in some sense unhappy South for another administration of the same sort to control this Government for four years to come. A distinguished gentleman of Massachusetts, in alluding to this Administration more than a year ago, in a published letter addressed by him to the Harvard club of the city of San Francisco, declared in substance that the leading spirits of the dominant faction of this country had lost their moral polarity, and no longer steered their course with reference to the great cardinal principles of public virtue. He then conjured the alumni of Harvard to come forth from their classic retreats and rescue the imperiled honor of their country. Sir, when these sentiments are uttered by distinguished members of the republican party, (and this was the language of no other than Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts,) I cannot but believe that there is a leaven of patriotism at work in the ranks of that party which will to some extent purify it, and prevent such a visitation as a third advent to power of the Administration which has controlled this Government for eight years.

This is the centennial year; and I believe the great American people mean to make it the lustral year. I believe they are resolved that all the departments of their great Government shall be swept clean of fraud and peculation and the purity of their earlier administration restored; and when the material contributions of their genius and enterprise shall have passed under review of the nations at the commemorative exhibition soon to open at Philadelphia, I believe that next November they will close the grand ceremonial by a display of conservative electoral power that will repress all the agencies of evil that now menace the life of the Republic, and vindicate the divine wisdom that intrusted them with the sovereignty of this country.

Mr. DOUGLAS. There are other gentlemen, I am informed, how desire to participate in the general debate on this bill; and as it is now late I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HOSKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill (H. R. No. 2828) to amend the act entited "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ELECTION CONTEST—LEE VS. RAINEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House testimony in the contested-election case of Lee vs. Rainey, from the first congressional district of South Carolina; which was referred to the Committee of Elections.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BEEBE for one week; to Mr. TURNEY for four days, on account of important business; to Mr. EGBERT for one week from Tuesday next; to Mr. MILLS for two weeks; and to Mr. CABELL for one week from Monday next.

DISTRICT BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. STEVENSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3194) to abolish the present and to establish a new board of health for the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCHRANE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee: The petition of the officers of the lodge of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows of Trenton, Tennessee, for compensation for the building belonging to said lodge destroyed by fire while occupied by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CANDLER: The petition of M. H. Dooly and others, against changing the tariff laws, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. EGBERT: Remonstrance of workingmen of Erie County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. HOAR: The petition of G. Henry Whitcomb and others, envelope manufacturers, for relief against injurious competition by the Government, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HOLMAN: The petition of Albert Grant, preferring additional charges against Andrew Wylie, an associate justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, to the Committee on the Judicary.

By Mr. KETCHUM: The petition of citizens of Danville, Pennsylvania, that aid be granted to a southern Pacific railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Also, the petition of citizens of Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, for the retirement of national-bank circulation and the substitution therefor of greenbacks, receivable for all dues and convertible into Government bonds, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the petition of citizens of White Haven, for the release of Edward O'M. Condon, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MAGINNIS: A paper relating to the establishment of post-routes from Boulder to Butte City, from Fort Shaw to Camp Baker, and from Old Agency to New Agency, Montana Territory, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MAISH: Papers relating to the petition of Mary Wade for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLIVER: The petition of citizens of Northwestern Iowa, for the law to be so changed as to permit the McGregor and Missouri River Railroad to make its junction with the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railroad on the forty-third parallel north latitude, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. POTTER: The petition of citizens of Washington City and Maryland, for a change in the license laws of the District of Columbia, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SAMPSON: The petition of E. S. Sampson, for the extension of a post-route from Webster to Williamsburgh, Iowa, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WALKER, of Virginia: Memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Richmond, Virginia, relative to the metric system of weights and measures, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. WALDRON: The petition of Samuel Andrews, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. WELLS, of Missouri: The petition of merchants and wholesale dealers in distilled spirits of Saint Louis, for the definition of the powers and duties of officers of the internal revenue, and to further provide for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WHITE: Papers relating to the petition of Sarah Maynard, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana: The petition of citizens of Indianopolis, Indiana, for the release from an English prison of E. O'M. Condon, an American citizen, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, April 24, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant, a copy of a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with chapters 5, 6, and 7 of the final report of the exploration of the Black Hills country made by Professor Jenney; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department;

A bill (H. R. No. 2954) concerning corporations engaged in the business of distilling; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3192) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbell.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 760) to protect the public property, turf, and grass of the Capitol grounds from injury.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 1052) to correct an error in the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1345) revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 700) to incorporate the Mutual Protection Life-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 1052) to correct an error in the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 726) to change the name of the steamboat Charles W. Mead; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 85) to authorize the Secretary of War to issue certain arms to the Washington Light Infantry of Charleston, South Carolina, and the Clinch Rifles, of Augusta, Georgia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of physicians and dealers in drugs in the city of Atchison, Kansas, praying that quinine may be placed upon the free list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY presented resolutions of the Michigan State board of health, in favor of the permanent organization of the United States Signal Service Bureau, and increasing its efficiency; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MAXEY. I present the petition of C. M. Wilcox, of Maryland, praying for the removal of his political disabilities. I will state that Mr. Wilcox was my class-mate at West Point, and I have known him for thirty-odd years. He is an honorable gentleman and a worthy citizen. I move the reference of his petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented a memorial of citizens of Schenectady, New York, remonstrating against the passage of any law granting an American register to foreign-built vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Daniel Houlihan, late sergeant Company I, Eighty-second Regiment, New York Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, department of Pennsylvania, in favor of the enactment of a law giving the same pension to soldiers of the Army and Marine Corps who have lost an arm below the elbow or a leg below the knee as is now given to soldiers who lost an arm above the elbow or a leg above the knee; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John Willett, H. Patterson, and 250 others, of Casco, Michigan, praying Congress to legislate in favor of Treasury notes as the sole currency, receivable for all purposes, interchangeable for interest-bearing Government bonds, and the withdrawal of 25 per cent. of bank currency annually until all is replaced by greenbacks; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WEST presented the petition of the Union Bank of Louisiana, praying to be relieved from losses entailed upon it by a certain general order of General BANKS, dated August 17, 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN presented three memorials of citizens of Toledo, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of any law Americanizing vessels on the northern lakes built out of the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of workingmen, citizens of Columbiana, Ohio, remonstrating against any change in the tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE presented a petition of a portion of the Oneida tribe of Indians of Wisconsin, praying for a partition of their lands, and that they be allowed to become citizens of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. THURMAN presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, printers, book-sellers, &c., praying the discontinuance of the printing and sale by the Government of stamped envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and postal cards; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

RESERVED GALLERIES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Rules, who were directed by a resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant to inquire and report what further provision, if any, is necessary in order to secure the use of the reserved portions of the galleries to those for whom they are designed, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the gallery set apart for the use of the families of Senators and Representatives during the impeachment trial shall be occupied only and exclusively by the families of Senators and Representatives.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Duane M. Greene, late captain Company E, Sixth Regiment California Volunteers, praying compensation for services rendered between the date of his commission and the date of his being mustered into the United States service, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 63) concerning the Centennial Autographic Registers of F. B. Taylor and E. W. Bixby, reported adversely thereon, and the joint resolution was postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. KELLY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 768) to provide for the occupancy of missionary stations upon Indian reservations; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MERRIMON. The law regulating the times for holding the circuit courts in the fourth circuit provides in such a way as that the times conflict in two or three instances, so that it is practically impossible for the circuit judge to attend the courts at the beginning of the terms. By request I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to regulate that matter, and I also ask to have referred with the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary a letter which I have received on the subject.

By unanimous consent leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 769) to alter and appoint the times for holding the circuit court of the United States for the fourth judicial circuit, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, late disbursing officer of the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 771) regulating the accountability for clothing and other property in the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Marine Corps; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 772) to facilitate the sale of public documents; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

CAPITAL AND DEPOSITS OF SAVINGS INSTITUTIONS.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to inform the Senate of the amount in each case of the average and of taxable capital and of the average and of taxable deposits on May 31, 1875, in the savings institutions having a capital stock or bond of the respective States and Territories, together with amount of tax collected upon said capital and upon said deposits in each of said States and Territories during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1875. Also the amount of average and of taxable deposits in savings institutions having no capital stock on May 31, 1875, together with the amount of tax collected upon said deposits in each of said States and Territories during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1875.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FERRY, and Mr. JONES of Florida, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

OFFICERS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. WEST. As there does not seem to be any further resolutions, I will ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 92.

Mr. SARGENT. I will take it as a special favor if the Senator from Louisiana will yield to me for the purpose of taking up and making remarks upon another bill. I propose to make the remarks this morning, and will probably not occupy over fifteen minutes. I do this at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] who reported the bill.

Mr. WEST. I will yield as the Senator desires.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from California is going to occupy any length of time, I will ask——

Mr. SARGENT. I think not more than fifteen minutes.

Mr. DAWES. I wanted to ask the favor of the Senate to pass a bill to which I thought there would be no objection.

Mr. SARGENT. I think there will be plenty of time after I get through. I move that the Senate take up House bill No. 1585.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1585) to authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to designate and fix the points at which collectors and supervisors of the revenue shall hold their offices.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, the bill before the Senate proposes to abolish the office of supervisor of internal revenue, and devolve the principal duties of the office upon special agents. With some exceptions, the experience of the country has not been favorable to either kind of officers, but a better class of men can probably be secured by the permanent functions and more adequate pay of supervisors than the average special agent. By a vicious system the latter often gets his place for a short time to enable him to travel at public expense, and has not the motive which local and permanent connection with the service may give. He has not time to be thorough. He is apt to be sensational to justify his employment; is often intentionally unjust, and necessarily superficial. Another kind of special agent is drawn from the ranks of detectives and has all the vices of his class, whose highest skill is often exercised to put up jobs with the dangerous classes of society, to ruin the reputation of better men or plunder them.

If the purpose or effect of this bill is to promote the employment of either of these classes of men it ought not to be passed.

My attention has been drawn to this subject of late by reading in the newspapers statements as coming from special agents sent to San Francisco during the present fiscal year, alleging gross dereliction in duty of revenue officers in that city. If I had been a stranger to the regular officers of the revenue in the first California district and had not had a general idea that collections of internal revenue there are fully up to the average elsewhere, I might have been led to suppose that these reiterated, though general and loose, statements had solid foundation. When, added to my impression of the fidelity of the public officers there, I find by actual examination of public records that the amount of collections in California is extraordinarily large, and has received the recent and warm approbation of the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I can find no motive consistent with the good of the service for these constant attacks on the officers and business men of California. That officers of the Government should lend themselves to misrepresentation is a matter of regret. Yet the facts which I shall lay before the Senate, and which could not fail to be within the knowledge of these special agents, seem to prove that this has been done, and done systematically.

The total collections of internal-revenue tax in the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, (see Commissioner's report, page 95,) was $103,599,488.68. The collections in California for the same period, by the same authority, were $2,983,595.19. The collections in California were thus one-thirty-fifth of the total collections in the United States, while the population of the State is but one-sixty-fifth of that of the United States, estimating the population of the State at 700,000 and of the United States at 45,000,000.

The same fact, an excessive collection of internal revenue in California, is shown by the comparative collections of gallonage tax. Thus the total gallonage tax collected in the United States for the last fiscal year (see Commissioner's report, page 82) was $46,877,938.10. The gallonage tax collected in California for the same period, by the report, was $1,346,259.15. That is, the amount collected in California on spirits equals one-thirty-fourth of the total collected in the United States, while its population is one-sixty-fifth only; and this is true of the very last fiscal year. Such figures will not lie, and furnish a natural corrective to sensational reporting.

But I prefer to press this examination further. I have looked into the figures of the fiscal year 1875 for the amount of tax-paid spirits, tobacco, &c., taken into California from the Eastern States and the amount sent out from California, finding them in the Commercial Herald and Market Review of San Francisco, of January 13, 1876. The following were brought to California:

	Gallons.
Twenty-three hundred and nine barrels pure spirits, average proof 160, making 72 proof gallons to the barrel, total proof gallons	166,248
New England rum, 22 puncheons, 100 proof gallons each	2,200
New England rum, 403 barrels, 100 proof, 45 gallons each	18,135
Whisky, 8 puncheons, 100 proof, 100 gallons each	800
Whisky, 104 casks, 100 proof, 50 gallons each	5,200
Whisky, 15,089 barrels, 100 proof, 45 gallons each	679,005
Whisky, 835 cases, 100 proof, 3 gallons each	2,505
Alcohol, 169 barrels, 188 proof, 84 gallons each	14,196
Alcohol, 1,441 cases, 188 proof, 19 gallons each	27,379
New England gin, about	10,000
		925,668
Per contra.
Brandy sent East:
7 hogsheads, 150 gallons each	1,050
8 pipes, 100 proof, 100 gallons each	800
62 quarter-pipes, 100 proof, 35 gallons each	2,170
131 octaves	2,620
438 barrels, 100 proof, 45 gallons each	19,710
173 kegs	3,460
5,689 cases, 3 gallons each	17,069
In other shapes	46,816
Excess of spirits paying tax brought from East over amount sent out		831,975
Tax on two-thirds of this up to March, 1875, 70 cents per gallon; tax on one-third of this up to March, 1875, 90 cents per gallon, making the tax in excess of spirits brought from the East and sold in California over amount sent East		$637,847 50
To this add tax on spirits collected in California for same period		1,346,259 15
Total amount of tax on spirits sold for use in California markets		1,984,106 65

The figures show that California paid between one twenty-third and one twenty-fourth of the total tax on spirits ($46,877,938.10) consumed during the same period in the United States. California has no market, except its own, Nevada, Oregon, Washington Territory, Idaho, and Arizona; the total population of which States and Territories is less than a million out of 45,000,000 in the United States, or one-forty-fifth of the population of the country; showing nearly double the average amount per capita of tax-paid spirits legitimately accounted for.

But these facts do not stand alone. The rule applies to all articles paying internal-revenue duties. By the same authority I find that there were 33,534 packages of plug-tobacco taken from the East to California, while but 2,068 packages were sent from California to the East during the past fiscal year, being an excesss of 31,466 packages, paying tax in the East, consumed in the California market. These packages will average fifty pounds each, making 1,573,000 pounds of eastern tax-paid tobacco consumed in California.

Two-thirds of which tax (up to March, 1875) at 20 cents per pound	$209,773 20
One-third of which tax (up to March, 1875) at 24 cents per pound	124,853 92
Excess sold in California, paying tax in the East, amounts to	334,627 12
While the tax paid in California on cigars manufactured there and sent to eastern markets (see Commercial Review) is (estimated) less than one-half of this amount, say at the utmost $167,313.56, leaving an excess of taxes paid East on tobacco and cigars consumed in California	167,313 56
To this add amount of taxes paid on spirits in the East but sold in California over amount manufactured in California and sent East.	637,874 50
Excess goods consumed in California paying taxes East over amount paying taxes in California and sent East, for fiscal year 1875	805,188 06
Add to this collections in California, fiscal year 1875, as per Commissioner's report, page 95	2,983,595 19
Total	3,788,783 25

The figures I have given show that California alone, with a population of one sixty-fifth of the population of the United States, has paid internal-revenue taxes of one thirty-fifth of the total collection; and, including the excess of goods brought in from the East, paying taxes there, over the amount paying taxes in California and sent East, with a total population not exceeding 700,000 and a market of not exceeding 1,000,000 people, that State has paid the last fiscal year and consumed of goods tax-paid there and elsewhere $3,788,783.25, out of a total in the United States of $103,599,488.68. In other words, with but one sixty-fifth population in the State, and one forty-fifth population for a market, California has paid, consumed, and sold on the coast of tax-paid goods one twenty-seventh of the total in the United States; and on distilled spirits between one twenty-fourth and one twenty-third the total taxes on such spirits in the United States, or nearly double per capita to the average in the United States.

I might rest on these figures as a sufficient vindication of those concerned in the collection of internal revenue in California. But I prefer to go a step further and show that the particular collector aspersed, Mr. Sedgwick, collector of the first California district, has produced results highly beneficial to the revenue, only consistent with an able and faithful discharge of duty. I know no other rule by which to judge public officers. The efficiency of tax-collectors is determined by the amount of their collections, other circumstances being equal.

Mr. Sedgwick was appointed collector of the first California district in 1874. His predecessor had collected from all sources, in 1873, $2,088,608.82. In 1874 Sedgwick increased the collections to $2,259,375.51, and the next and last fiscal year carried the amount up to $2,726,149.20, or nearly three-fourths of a million, though internal-revenue taxes fell off elsewhere in the United States, as I am informed, during both years. I have here a table that shows the work he has performed in detail, which is worth careful study, and which will explain my reasons for thinking him honest and able, even against the random assertions of fugitive special agents:

Statement showing the total collections of revenue in the two districts as now comprising the first district of California, for fiscal years ending June 30, 1872–1875.

Showing an increase in gallonage of grain spirits paying tax during the fiscal years 1874 and 1875, under this abused officer, over that paying tax during the two preceding years by his predecessor, for whose appointment to or continuance in office I was in no degree responsible, of 975,554 gallons, equaling 47⅞ percentage increase on gallonage and about 35 per cent. increase in dollars of taxes collected during the same length of time, while there has been no perceptible difference in the amount of spirits and whisky brought into that market from the East. Deducting the amount collected on tobacco from bonded warehouses, from income, gas, dividends, and undistributed profits and special taxes lapping over from 1871 to 1872—which sources of revenue did not exist in 1874 and 1875, and which explains the figures of 1872—from the total collections of 1872 and 1873, shows a percentage of increase on collections from all sources during the fiscal years of 1874 and 1875 (Sedgwick's term) over collections during 1872 and 1873 of upward of 40 per cent.

The raid upon Collector Sedgwick commenced in August, 1875, and has been kept up ever since. During that month extra special agents arrived in San Francisco, and announced immediately through the press that great frauds were to be discovered at once, Sedgwick, removed, &c.; and these announcements were telegraphed East, and have been periodically repeated ever since. As no showing has been made except gossiping reports and loose generalities, the figures I have given may stand as conclusive answer. They do to my mind. So far as I have responsibility in the matter, which only amounts to an obligation to give conscientious advice to the Executive if he consults me, I feel easy in standing by an officer who by his ability and zeal has brought up the collections in his district the past two years so much, that if all the collectors in the United States had done as well the receipts of internal revenue instead of being $103,000,000 would be $145,000,000.

I have given the figures of collections in the first California district up to the close of the last fiscal year. The raid against its principal officer commenced in August. To show that there had been no change for the worse, but rather a still greater percentage of increase for July and August of this fiscal year, I have obtained the official figures for those months as compared with the corresponding months of the preceding year, and the result is an increase of $125,109.14 of collections; that is, the collections of these two months, July and August, show an increase of 27 per cent. over the collections of the same months during the previous fiscal year, as follows:

It would seem that an officer less open to attack could scarcely be found and a time less opportune could scarcely be chosen. I am confirmed in this and in my deductions from the figures I have given by the correspondence of the Internal Revenue Bureau, which I will ask the Secretary to read. The first is a letter from Supervisor L. M. Foulke, than whom a more upright man does not exist.

The Secretary read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, July 21, 1875.

SIR: I inclose herewith tabular statement, showing the collections from each source of revenue in the collection districts embraced within my supervisory district for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1874 and 1875, and the total collections from each respective district, and the percentage of increase in 1875 over 1874, or decrease as the case may be, together with the total increase in collections in my supervisory district ($500,943.63) in fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, over fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, the percentage of such increase in the entire district being 18.73 per cent.

The decrease in Utah is owing to the failure in many mining localities of success in their operations and the general stagnation of business in the Territory; in Arizona, to Indian troubles, which happily are now settled, and not, so far as I have been able to ascertain, to any lack of vigilance on the part of the collectors.

The increase on spirits, cigars, and fermented liquors in first district California has been large, especially so when it is remembered that there was even a greater percentage of increase the previous fiscal year (the first fiscal year of Collector Sedgwick's administration) over the last fiscal year of his predecessor, Collector Cary.

Very respectfully,

L. M. FOUKLE, Supervisor.

Hon. D. D. PRATT,
Commissioner, Washington, D. C.

Mr. SARGENT. The Secretary will now please read the reply of Commissioner Pratt.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE, TREASURY DEPARTMENT
Washington, July 31, 1875.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 21st instant, in which you inclosed a statement showing an increase of $500,000 in collections of the districts in your supervisory district during the fiscal year 1875, as compared with total of collections in the same districts in the fiscal year 1874, you are advised that the showing made as above stated is exceedingly gratifying to this Office.

It is hoped that the current fiscal year will show an equally satisfactory increase over the receipts of the last one.

Respectfully,

D. D. PRATT, Commissioner.

L. M. FOULKE, Esq.,
Supervisor of Internal Revenue.

Mr. SARGENT. I have illustrated the principle of this bill by reference to my own constituents and the manner in which the internal-revenue service is performed among them. There must be something wrong where faithful officers are selected for assault, and a community is abused which is shown by public records to pay nearly double its share of taxes. That wrong can be corrected by a more careful selection of special agents, refusing to employ as such men who seek such employment for their own temporary personal ends, and discouraging instead of encouraging a system of coarse abuse in advance of the discovery of matter even for criticism.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it be the pleasure of the Senate I should like to have this bill disposed of. It might as well be disposed of now as at any other time, because it is in charge of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] who I suppose will be going away in a few days. Therefore, if it is the pleasure of the Senate, I should like to have the bill disposed of now.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Has the letter of the Commissioner been read?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. I was about to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance is to strike out, in line 5 of section 1, the words "and supervisors of the," and insert "the internal;" so as to read: "and fix the points at which the collectors of internal revenue shall establish and maintain their several offices."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert as an additional section:

That the office of supervisor of internal revenue is hereby abolished from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, and the powers and duties conferred upon supervisors by existing law, excepting the power to suspend collectors and other officers, are hereby conferred upon the agents authorized by section 3152 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; but this section shall not be held to increase the pay or allowances of such agents.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the office of supervisor of internal revenue was first created, I think, about the year 1867. The supervisors were created for the purpose of furnishing to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue agents of a superior character to aid him in the collection of the revenue. At that time the internal revenue was from two hundred to two hundred and fifty or three hundred millions of dollars, embracing a great multitude of articles which are now relieved from taxation. In process of time our taxes were reduced simply to whisky and tobacco and a few stamp taxes, greatly reducing the duties of the officers of internal revenue. Of late years the office of supervisor of internal revenue has been made a quasi-political office, the incumbent being appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and latterly various propositions have been made to abolish the office of supervisor of internal revenue. The substance of the argument in favor of this amendment is contained in a letter of Mr. Commissioner Pratt, who is the head of this Bureau; and that letter probably will give the Senate more information than I could. I do not wish to go into details.

I may say here that the remarks made by the Senator from California do not relate to the office of supervisor of internal revenue; they go to the abolition of the office of special agent. I desire now, before the letter of Mr. Pratt is read, to state that if I were Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and a special agent was traveling around through the country giving his first information to the newspapers, thus disabling him from performing the duties of his office, I would remove him the moment I received the intelligence. I see very often articles in the newspapers saying that special agent such a body has appeared at such a place and has unearthed monstrous frauds, and giving some outline, vague and confused, just enough to put guilty men on their guard and to injure or affect the character of innocent men. These special agents are nothing but detectives; and it is clear that a detective who discloses his operations until he has secured his prey is totally unfit for his office, and ought to be removed the very moment these accounts appear in the newspapers. Therefore the remarks made by the Senator from California are rather against the character of the agents themselves than against the merits of the proposition now pending before us.

It was the intention of the law in creating these agents and supervisors of internal revenue to organize detectives; it was a detective force, the purpose being to enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have trusted agents selected by him, entirely removed from all political connections, even independent of the Secretary of the Treasury—trusted agents to watch over the officers of the Government engaged in the collection of internal revenue. So far as these offices have been perverted for other purposes, it is a contradiction and violation of their duties. It seems to me that the case made by the Senator from California of special agents going out to San Francisco and publishing beforehand what they were going to do, and then after they had probably made a few inquiries publishing what they had done, only shows that those particular persons ought to be removed and some sensible men sent out to see if there has been any wrong done in San Francisco. As a matter of course, the proposition before us has nothing to do with the conduct of Mr. Sedgwick, whose conduct I never heard called in question; I never indeed heard anything about him; but from the statement now made he seems to be a very meritorious officer. But because a special agent goes out there and plays the fool, that is no reason for repealing the office of special agent, but is a reason for repealing him and selecting a more competent agent.

The office of supervisor of internal revenue has of late years been of no practical use. I think that the experience of every one connected with the legislation of Congress or with the practical enforcement of the law would lead him to the conviction that the office of supervisor of internal revenue might now properly be dispensed with. These officers cost us $137,000 a year, or on an average $13,700, and according to the testimony contained in the Commissioner's letter, which concurs with the reports of all the officers on the subject, they may be dispensed with. Whether or not the powers of the supervisors ought to be conferred on another class of officers called revenue agents may be a question of some doubt; but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is of opinion that certain powers now conferred on the supervisors ought to be retained and conferred on these other agents of the Department without increasing their number. This would increase their efficiency without increasing their cost, their compensation, or their number.

I will now close what I have to say on this bill by requesting that the letter may be read and asking Senators to listen to the argument contained in the letter as they would to any other statement made to convince their judgment.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, April 15, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 11th instant, asking for my opinion as to the propriety and expediency of abolishing the office of supervisor of internal revenue, and would reply as follows:

The office was created by act of July 20, 1868, which authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint twenty-five supervisors, whose salaries were to be fixed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at not to exceed $3,000 and to be allowed their necessary expenses. Their duties as prescribed by law were to see that all laws and regulations in regard to the collection of internal taxes were faithfully executed and complied with, to aid in the prevention, detection, and punishment of any frauds in relation thereto, and to examine into the efficiency of all officers of internal revenue. The very nature of such duties requires that a supervisor should frequently visit every portion of his district, thus precluding a local habitation and the delegating of his powers to subordinates. It appears, however, that the words "expenses necessarily incurred" were construed to include office-rent, furniture, clerk hire, and the like, thus localizing the office, making a costly establishment, and, in my judgment, perverting the intention of Congress. The system thus inaugurated not only rendered the services of supervisors during the time spent at their office (except in the large cities) of little value, but subjected the Government to an expense far beyond what the good accomplished would justify. During the year ending June 30, 1875, the amount allowed for salaries and expenses of ten supervisors was $137,752.52, or an average of $13,775.52 each.

By act of June 6, 1872, the number of supervisors was reduced to ten, and the appointment of such officers given to the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. This reduction greatly increased the territory over which each officer was required to keep a supervision, and rendered the necessity for constant travel all the greater. There were then assigned to each supervisor two revenue agents, who were to perform their duties under his direction, entirely independent of the Commissioner, and thus leaving only five agents over whose movements this Office exercised any control. The effects of such a system are strongly illustrated by the disclosures in the late trials at Chicago, Milwaukee, and Saint Louis, where it was shown that supervisors and their agents entered into conspiracies with the distillers to defraud the Government, and acted as police officers to protect them from detection by the few agents under control of this Office. It would seem to have been clearly the intention of Congress that supervisors should be frequently transferred, in order that such corrupt combinations could not exist; but this wise provision of law has been practically a dead letter until within the few past months. A supervisor regarded the district from which he was appointed as the one in which he was entitled to serve, and resisted every attempt to make transfers with protests and sometimes with threats of resignation.

If I am reminded that the expenses referred to may be corrected by regulations established by the Commissioner, I reply that supervisors, shorn of all the privileges enumerated, and required to perform their duties, as I construe those duties to be under the law, became what revenue agents practically are, and I can see no propriety in having two classes of officers performing the same duties.

After all, a supervisor is but a revenue agent on a larger scale, given a larger salary, and invested with some special powers. He performs, or should perform, just what the revenue agent is required to do, and it is not too much to say that in the main their duties are identical. He does not collect a dollar of revenue, but supervises those who make the collections, the collectors and their deputies, and, like the revenue agent, supervises officers of less degree, the gauger, store-keeper, and inspector, and sees to it that they are efficient and faithful. His principal business is with the tax-payers, the classes from whom the internal revenues are collected, and in their cases it is his duty to prevent, detect, and punish frauds. But the field of his operations is too large for a single vision, his district frequently including several States and vast Territories. The real work must here be performed by revenue agents, whose principal duty, as in his case, is to look after the fidelity of tax-payers, by visiting every part of the district from which the revenues should come.

What is really valuable in the office of supervisor is the power conferred upon him to examine persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to summon persons to produce books and papers or to appear and testify under oath before him, and to compel compliance with the summons, a power which the supervisor shares with the collector. Confer the same powers upon revenue agents, to be exercised under the direction of the Commissioner, and the office of supervisor may be abolished without loss to the service and with considerable saving to the Treasury.

Very respectfully,

D. D. PRATT, Commissioner.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman Finance Committee.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to have the pending amendment reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to insert, as section 2, the following:

That the office of supervisor of internal revenue is hereby abolished from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, and the powers and duties conferred upon supervisors by existing law, excepting the power to suspend collectors and other officers, are hereby conferred upon the agents authorized by section 3152 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; but this section shall not be held to increase the pay or allowances of such agents.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to amend the amendment by adding:

And the number of such agents is hereby limited to twenty.

Mr. BOUTWELL. There are now twenty-five.

Mr. SARGENT. I think twenty is an ample number.

Mr. BOUTWELL. In assenting to this bill I have followed the opinion given by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, supported by the Secretary of the Treasury in a conversation which I had with him before I reported the bill. There is, however, nothing on file from the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to it. But in view of the recommendation to abolish this office, which carries with it an expense of nearly $140,000, I thought the committee could not refuse its assent to a proposition in the line of economy by the Department itself. For a kindred reason I should object to the reduction of special agents from twenty-five to twenty. I think the Department would have made that recommendation if it had been consistent with their view of the true interests of the public service; and, if we follow the Department in the reduction proposed, I thought we ought also to accept what manifestly is the conclusion of the Department, that the services of twenty-five special agents will be needed, and from my knowledge of the business I should say that that number was not too great. I therefore hope the amendment to the amendment will not be agreed to, unless it is first referred to the Department for an opinion.

Mr. SARGENT. If the bill itself were referred to the Department, that would be a reasonable proposition; but it is not proposed to refer the bill again. My experience of all the Departments of the Government and of every Bureau of the Government is that they never can dispense with a single employé. That is the rule universally. The cry is rather "Give, give." Your appropriation bills would be swelled enormously if we listened to those cries. During the last four or five years we should not have been able to reduce a single person employed by the Government if we had listened to the positive assurances of those whose offices are magnified by the number of people under them. A man likes to be a centurion, to have command over a hundred men. It calls attention to his grandeur. A man likes to go into a room under his control and, instead of finding a dozen men, find there a hundred, or one hundred women, and say, "These are those that I direct; I am responsible for these persons; they do my bidding, and my recommendation can turn out any of them and substitute somebody else." Their power and importance vanish when the number is reduced, and consequently they continually resist it.

I can appeal to any member of the Committee on Appropriations now present if in all the reforms in this direction we have worked we have not had to do it in spite of tears, prayers, and prophecies on the part of Government officers and those having charge of these men? It is the most difficult thing in the world to do. If we were to judge of the necessity for these officers by the quality of their work, as I have exhibited it here this morning, we could do better with fifteen than with twenty, and with ten better than fifteen. I must insist that these men are not, a large number of them, usefully employed, and we had better eliminate them; give more pay to the office and try to get a better class of men for it.

Why is it that these men are found so universally in the immediate employ of the press? Why is it that they give their suspicions for facts, and these are circulated all over the country to poison the reputation of the administration and everybody who stands by it and of public officers? I ask Senators why it is? Either because they have no legitimate employment for their functions and therefore do mischief on the principle that—or else you by this bill take a wrong step by abolishing the higher-paid offices, where you can presumably get men of greater respectability, and you devolve all these delicate duties on men who are underpaid; and, as they are not paid enough, they, to make their own way, have to accept money from the press and furnish the food which is asked for by sensational newspapers. In either hypothesis—and one of them must be true—it seems to me we have too many of these men.

Satan finds some mischief still
For idle hands to do,

I believe in a faithful collection of the revenue. In my own State or elsewhere, if I knew that any official was derelict in his duty or was even careless in his duty, I would be the first to recommend his discharge; but I do say that when special agents go to my coast and bespatter all over with mud the men who are there striving to do their duty, and by the records of the Government do it honestly and well, something is wrong, and I feel disposed myself to limit the number of men who can perform this nefarious work. Without any special agents there they went on increasing the revenue year by year, increasing it the first year 20 per cent. and the second year 40 per cent. after we got a change of officers who would give the Government a chance. There were no special agents sent to look after the old officers who were careless in their duty or worse; but now, at the present time, special agents are sent out for the very purpose, or at any rate with the effect, of going after the men and smutting them, who are doing their duty so well that the figures I present here are a monument to their excellence in that particular; and these facts are taken from the official records and cannot be disputed. Who shall stand up here and say that a system of special agents that produces these misrepresentations and mischiefs is a beneficial one and ought not to be curtailed?

The Senator from Massachusetts, who reports the bill, unquestionably can answer a question which is put to me sotto voce by the Senator from Indiana, "What is the salary of these special agents?"

Mr. SHERMAN. I will read the law, which covers the agents and supervisors, for the benefit of Senators who have not looked at it. It is the law which regulates the appointment of agents:

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, whenever in his judgment the necessities of the service so require, employ competent agents, not exceeding at any time twenty-five in number, to be paid such compensation as he may deem proper, not exceeding, in aggregate, any appropriation made for that purpose, and he may, at his discretion, assign any such agent to duty under the direction of any officer of internal revenue, or to such other special duty as he may deem necessary; and no general or special agent or inspector, by whatever designation he may be known, of the Treasury Department in connection with internal revenue, except inspectors of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, and except as provided for in this title, shall be appointed, commissioned, employed, or continued in office.

That is all the law in regard to the agents. Now this is the law in regard to supervisors of internal revenue which will be repealed if this bill pass:

SEC. 3159. The President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may appoint not exceeding ten officers, to be called supervisors of internal revenue, each of whom shall be assigned by the Secretary of the Treasury, on the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to duty in any part of the United States, and may be transferred from place to place, according to the exigency of the public service.

SEC. 3160. Every supervisor shall be entitled to receive, in addition to expenses necessarily incurred by him and allowed and certified by the Commissioner, such salary, not exceeding $3,000 a year, as the Commissioner may deem reasonable.

I am told, although I am not certain about this, that they allow an agent $6 a day and $5 for expenses.

Mr. BOUTWELL. From $8 to $12 a day.

Mr. ALLISON. I had occasion only a day or two ago to examine into that matter. The agents are paid from $5 to $8 a day, and their actual expenses; and one of the agents received $12 a day, the chief of the bureau of agents.

Mr. HOWE. And some receive $10.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the number could be reduced from twenty-five to twenty for another reason. The Senator from Massachusetts certainly must know—if not he can be assured that it is true—that the resources of the Department for special agents are not confined to these twenty or twenty-five. Persons are sent temporarily on this duty, traveling anywhere they please, or rather where they are sent and desire to go on their private business. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] shakes his head. A man by the name of Phillips recently went to the Pacific coast, temporarily employed for two or three months, and he has just returned and made a report, which I have seen in the papers, especially aimed at Mr. Sedgwick.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Was he not within the twenty-five—one of the twenty-five?

Mr. SARGENT. No, sir; not one of the twenty-five.

Mr. SHERMAN. This law expressly prohibits that.

Mr. SARGENT. I am not responsible for the fact, but the fact exists nevertheless. It was under some law or no law (and perhaps it might be well for Congress to understand which) which allows special agents to be sent, they arrogating more importance than the ordinary special agents, all over the country. If a person wants to travel to San Francisco, he gets his expenses paid by the Treasury and writes an abusive editorial subsequently in the way of a report. So I think we can reduce the number, and decency and integrity will be the gainer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired and the Chair will call up the unfinished business.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BOGY to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, addressed the Senate. Having spoken two hours and a half he yielded to Mr. WINDOM, on whose motion (at three o'clock and thirty-one minutes) the Senate adjourned.

The speech of Mr. JONES, of Nevada, will be found in full in the Appendix.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 24, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Before the regular order is proceeded with the Chair will state that on Monday last, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that this day after two o'clock should be under the control of the Committee for the District of Columbia, with the same rights and privileges which would have belonged to that committee on last Monday, on which day the committee yielded their rights in order that the then pending question of privilege might be concluded. The Chair mentions this so that gentlemen may know what business will come up after the morning hour.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent to present a joint resolution from the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, is not the first thing in order the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I object. I dislike very much to do so, but I must. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by several members; and the morning hour now begins at thirteen minutes after twelve o'clock. This being Monday, the first business in order during the morning hour is the calling of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back into the House by motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for printing and reference.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope there will be no objection to completing the call of States and Territories without reference to the expiration of the hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection that this call shall continue until gentlemen from all the States and Territories shall have had an opportunity to introduce bills and resolutions?

Mr. HENDEE. Provided that such business does not extend beyond two o'clock.

The SPEAKER. That will be understood, of course.

Mr. RANDALL. I have a suggestion to make. I understand that the business of the District committee will not take up the entire day. I would suggest therefore that the House permit that business to commence immediately after the call of States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions has been concluded; so that I may have the opportunity, when the District business is finished, to make a motion to proceed with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. I feel it my duty to again press upon the House the importance of proceeding with that bill. The arrangement I suggest will not obstruct, but facilitate the business of the District committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires that the House shall first determine whether there be objection that the call of States and Territories shall continue this morning until it is completed, without reference to the termination of the hour.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. RANDALL. I now suggest that the Committee for the District of Columbia be allowed to proceed with their business immediately after the call of States and Territories is concluded, without waiting for the hour of two o'clock. I think there will be no objection to that.

Mr. BUCKNER. There is no objection, so far as we are concerned.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to get up the legislative appropriation bill if possible to-day.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I have no objection to the Committee for the District of Columbia proceeding after the business of the morning hour; but when that business is finished I may perhaps ask some other action than that suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman that when the time arrives he can raise the question of consideration between the legislative appropriation bill and reports from the Committee of Elections.

The SPEAKER. That question will have to be raised when the time arrives. The present question is, Will the House order that the Committee for the District of Columbia shall have possession of the floor immediately after the conclusion of the call of States and Territories?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MARY ANN AND BRIDGET HACKETT.

Mr. FRYE (for Mr. ROSS, of Pennsylvania, necessarily absent from the House) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3195) granting a pension to Mary Ann and Bridget Hackett, minor children of James Hackett, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

M. G. EMERY.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (H. R No. 3196) for the relief of M. G. Emery, of Washington, District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM GUNTON.

Mr. HENDEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3197) for the relief of William Gunton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

DOMINION STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. CRAPO introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3198) for the relief of the Dominion Steamship Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH REESE.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The call of States and Territories is now completed.

Mr. WILLIS. I have some bills which I wish to introduce and have referred. I was not in my seat when the State of New York was called.

The SPEAKER. Under the order made this morning it is the duty of the Chair to receive for reference bills from gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

DUTIES ON GLASS.

Mr. WILLIS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3249) to simplify the sixteenth subdivision of Schedule B, section 2504 of the Revised Statutes, relating to glass; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

WYANDOTT INDIANS.

Mr. GOODIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3255) for the relief of the Wyandott tribe of Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. If there are no other bills for reference, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] if the proposition he desires to submit gives rise to no discussion.

EDWARD O'M. CONDON.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to ask the unanimous consent of the House to report at this time for consideration and action the preamble and joint resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The preamble recites that Edward O'M. Condon, a citizen of the United States, is now and has been for some time closely confined in prison under the sentence of a British court, and that an earnest and profound desire, evidenced by resolutions of State Legislatures and petitions numerously signed and addressed to Congress, is entertained by a large and respectable portion of the people of the United States that he should be speedily released.

The joint resolution requests the President of the United States to take such steps as in his judgment may tend to obtain the early release of the said Edward O'M. Condon from imprisonment.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) was received, read three times, and passed.

Mr. FAULKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. I yield now to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON.]

INVESTIGATION OF AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration and adoption at this time the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that certain Federal officers in New Orleans, Louisiana, have been guilty of malfeasance, abuse of power, and corruption: Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of nine members be appointed by the Speaker with instructions to make a thorough examination into the conduct and management of the custom-house at the port of New Orleans and of the offices of the marshal, district attorney, postmaster, assessor and collector of internal revenue, and of such other Federal officers as they may discover to be implicated in wrong-doing and violations of the laws, and to suggest such changes and reforms as they may deem necessary, with power to employ a stenographer, send for persons and papers, to sit in New Orleans and during the recess, and to report by bill or otherwise at any time.

Mr. HURLBUT. I object to that resolution. I have no objection to the inquiry going to a regular committee of the House; but I object to raising a special committee with the powers contemplated in that resolution.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order. I submit that the order made this morning by which the business of the Committee for the District of Columbia was transferred from two o'clock to-day to one o'clock must be now operating, and that no other business is in order except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, orders of this kind should be strictly enforced; but in cases similar to this a very liberal practice prevails. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] yielded to the gentleman from West Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER;] the House assented to his action and enacted a joint resolution. The gentleman from Missouri afterward yielded to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. GIBSON.] In the judgment of the Chair, objection now, under the circumstances, comes too late.

Mr. HALE. I understood that the gentleman from West Virginia asked unanimous consent of the House, which was granted, no one objecting, and he then submitted his resolution. I suppose that a single objection, if anybody had raised it, would have prevented the introduction of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the request to be of that kind. The Chair will take the sense of the House on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HURLBUT. I ask that the resolution be again read. It contains special matter which I think the House may not understand.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to ask whether the proceedings of this committee are to be conducted publicly?

Mr. GIBSON. I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment of that kind.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman whether he will not let this investigation go to one of the regular committees of the House, and also strike out that remarkable provision for sitting during the recess? With these modifications the resolution would pass without objection.

Mr. GIBSON. No, sir; I cannot consent to those modifications.

Mr. HALE. Then I must call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GIBSON. I will second the call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Can the resolution be divided, so that the part which relates to the committee sitting after the adjournment of Congress can be voted upon by itself? That is the only objectionable part, I believe.

The SPEAKER. No question of division can arise upon a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HALE. Then the resolution must be taken all in all?

The SPEAKER. It must be taken as a unit.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 147, nays 77, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Walker, Ward, Whitehouse, James Williams, Benjamin Wilson, and Alan Wood, jr.—66.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

Mr. HALE. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GIBSON. Why not say the Committee of Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] as chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia, is entitled to the floor absolutely. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] that the resolution of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] is not before the House, the rules not having been suspended.

JOHN F. SUTHERLIN AND BROTHER.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HANCOCK,] a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, was instructed to report a bill (H. R. No. 3256) for the relief of John F. Sutherlin & Brother, of Polk County, Indiana, but he has left the city and has requested me to do it for him. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, to submit the report on behalf of the gentleman from Texas and to move that the bill and report be printed and recommitted.

There was no objection; and the bill was received, read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed and recommitted.

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The amendments were read, as follows:

On page 9, at the end of the forty-eighth line, insert "the taxes hereby assessed and the penalties imposed by this act shall be a lien on the real estate on which the same are assessed from the 1st day of June of the year in which the assessment is made."

In line 263, on page 20, strike out "tax" and insert "license."

In line 296, on page 22, strike out the words "capital or."

In line 297, on page 22, strike out the words "under existing laws."

In line 296, on page 21, after the word "Columbia" insert "illuminating-gas companies shall pay $1.50 on each $100 of the assessed value of their pipes under ground."

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX in the chair.) There being no objection, the question will be taken on the amendments in gross.

There was no objection, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BUCKNER. This bill to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, is a very long bill, covering some thirty-three pages of print, and as it will occupy some time in its reading, if the House has no objection I ask that its reading be dispensed with, as I propose to make a full explanation of the provisions of the bill so the House will comprehend what they are.

Mr. WALLING. This is a very important bill, and in order to properly understand the explanation I think the bill ought to be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to dispensing with the reading of the bill?

Mr. WALLING. I do.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. WALLING. As the bill has been printed and copies are now being circulated through the House, I withdraw my objection so the gentleman from Missouri may go on with his explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There being no further objection, the reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for an assessment of the real property and for the taxation of all visible property of the District of Columbia, either directly or indirectly. It does not—and I desire to state so the House may understand what the question presented to them will be after a while—propose to tax what may be called trades or money loaned on mortgage or deeds of trust. But gentlemen near me ask whether it taxes personal property. It taxes all visible personal property in one form or another.

But, sir, before I go into that question I desire to state to the House that the commissioners of this District have been called on by the Committee for the District of Columbia to state to us what amount of money will be necessary to carry on the government of this District, and according to their showing they want the sum of $1,513,180 to pay the necessary expenses in carrying on the District affairs. In addition to that there is the interest upon the old funded debt, including the premium on gold interest of $564,569, to be met in some form. They ask for an appropriation amounting to $2,077,000, not including the semi-annual interest or the interest on the 3.65 bonds, amounting to $250,278. The committee are of the opinion so far as the expenditures of the District are concerned they may be reduced two or three hundred thousand dollars. It is fair and just, however, to say that the commissioners have reduced expenditures under the late government very largely, but other reductions may be made I think without any inconvenience to the management of the affairs of this District.

We propose to raise by this bill by taxation of personal property, directly as well as indirectly, the sum of $400,000. Of course that is only an estimate, merely conjectural; but I have the opinion of a large number of tax-payers of the city—the opinion of real-estate tax-payers, as well as the opinion of the commissioners of the District themselves, that this bill will raise the sum at least of $400,000 by the taxation of personal property, either directly or indirectly, including licenses. Then, sir, the assessment last year in the District of Columbia, or rather in the city of Washington, was $78,818,000. In addition to that there is shown by a report before us there have been upward of $3,000,000 invested in buildings during the last year; so that we have in the city of Washington, on the basis of $1.50 on every hundred, $81,818,000 of real estate, upon which a tax of $1,218,170 can be collected. In Georgetown we have $58,470, and in the county $71,600, making, with the $400,000 on personal property, the sum of $1,748,260.

This bill does not attempt to innovate on the established legislation of this District. Heretofore $175,000 had been raised by licenses and taxes on all kinds of trades. We have extended this system, increased the amount of license, so as to bring it to the sum of $275,000.

In addition to that, all furniture over $300 in value is taxed in this District, which it is estimated will realize $175,000. That will produce the sum I have mentioned, and it is as little as the District, in my judgment or in the judgment of the committee, can get along with, and yet as much taxation as can be afforded.

There was an assessment last year of the real estate in this District. There have been some complaints about it, and I have no doubt there were some reasons to complain; but upon the whole, from the information I have, it is about as good an assessment as can be made. This bill proposes, in order to provide any additional expense, that the additional expense shall be made to it to the extent of three or four millions of dollars. So that we save the large expense necessary to re-assess this District, and we do not take any risk as to whether the assessment might be reduced or not in these hard, stringent times.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have taxed what is termed money on loan, and I do not hesitate to say, aside from any principle involved in it, whatever my views are in the abstract upon that question, that I have been governed in this by what I have believed to be the wish of nine-tenths of the real-estate tax-payers in this District. We have the right, it is true, to tax these people as we wish. There is no limit upon our powers. We have exclusive jurisdiction in that matter; but that is no reason why we should disregard the wishes of these people in this respect. If we ask that they shall contribute so much money and they are willing to do it upon terms equal and just to all the interests of the District, it occurs to me their views on this subject ought to be consulted.

There are two questions on which, so far as I have been able to ascertain the views of the people of the District, of the tax-payers and real-estate owners, I believe without reference to their political complexion, there is one almost universal and according sentiment. One is that they shall have no more popular government in this District; the other is that bonds and mortgages, secured upon real estate here, shall not be taxed. What reason do they give for desiring that taxation shall not extend to bonds and mortgages on real estate? They tell me—whether it be true or false I do not pretend to say—that this District has been robbed and plundered for the past six or seven years to an extent that no other people has been; and that almost every man here has been compelled to borrow money from New York, or Baltimore, and elsewhere to meet the high rate of taxation; and that if you compel them to pay taxes on these mortgages you only affect the people here; you do not reach anybody but the residents; you do not reach the loan companies and capitalists in the North, but only the residents who have loaned money in this way; and the effect of that is to put an additional tax upon their real estate.

These were the views that influenced the majority of the committee in this matter, and they agreed to report a bill which taxes all the visible property in this District according to the system heretofore in vogue, and also requires licenses to be paid, making no other change than to increase, enlarge, and expand the system so as to produce the amount of money that we think ought to be raised.

But the committee are perfectly aware that on this subject gentlemen of this House will probably want to give effect to their own ideas and their own views of taxation; that Ohio gentlemen and Maryland gentlemen, and others here, will want to introduce their peculiar views as to systems of taxation into this District. Therefore, in order to accommodate their theories upon that subject, the committee have permitted a substitute to be introduced, and I will give place in a few moments to my friend from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] to introduce a substitute for this bill, that only makes the one material change of taxing everything in the shape of credits, requiring every man to give a statement of the value of his personal property, to give an account of his credits deducting what he owes, and then to make oath to the correctness of that statement; and upon that he pays a tax. So far as the license system is concerned, with all its objectionable features, if there are any, they belong to both bills. They are in force here now, except in this particular, that the license system in this District has always been based upon the amount of capital stock alone, and has not required the payment of any particular sum for the purpose of carrying on any particular trade.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, while we have power here, while we can exercise exclusive jurisdiction and do exercise exclusive jurisdiction over this District, I can see no reason why the House should not respect the opinions and sentiments of these people—why we should make this District a theater for trying experiments either in government or taxation, or putting in force any particular theory that we may have in this bill. The people are willing to pay whatever amount of money Congress shall say they ought to provide, but they insist that they shall have some right to say how they shall pay it. And I speak, I will not say the universal sentiment, but the sentiment of nine out of ten tax-payers—real-estate tax-payers—so far as I have had an opportunity of meeting with them, when I say that they object to paying this proposed tax on merchandise and securities for the reason I have given.

I do not propose to go into any discussion of the question which has been mooted lately in the country by the decision of a very learned court in California, that the tax on a mortgage is really unconstitutional in a State where the provision of the constitution was that taxation should be uniform. I do not propose to go into that question at all, or to examine the questions relating to this subject, which have been lately illustrated and explained by Hon. David A. Wells, lately a candidate for Congress from Connecticut. I do not propose to discuss that matter at all. The ground the committee put this bill upon is that it is a bill in accordance with the sentiment of the people of this District, though it may not be in accordance with our own theories or opinions. It will raise all the money that they can afford to pay, and it is very obvious that there is good ground for this view. The objection to imposing a tax upon mortgages and loan bills is that it will affect the residents here alone, while a large amount of these securities owned elsewhere will not be reached by the bill. It will be a tax simply on the persons who have borrowed money to pay for these improvements.

I say this, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, that when you shall be called to vote between this bill and the bill proposed by the minority of the committee, which will be reported by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL,] you will have in both the license system, to which he may object, and others may object, but that his bill will not raise as much money as the bill we propose will do. His bill will collect only $117,500, and we propose to collect $275,000. We propose also instead of having your horse and carriage taxed at its value, every man who owns a carriage that is used here, whether it be a hack or a private carriage, shall be taxed at a certain rate, and we will raise a much larger amount than the tax now in force.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUCKNER. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I desire to ask the chairman one or two questions before he sits down. I observe a provision in this bill, which is a very long one, that the commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to appoint commissioners whose duty it will be to levy and collect these special taxes.

Mr. BUCKNER. No, sir; they are assessors only.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. There is no distinction. They are to assess or levy the several taxes; the tax upon real property, the tax upon personalty, and the tax upon trades and professions.

Mr. BUCKNER. Which are fixed by the bill.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. But there is no provision in the bill, so far as I can ascertain, by which any error in any tax may be corrected by the party taxed.

Mr. BUCKNER. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Will the gentleman then refer me to that part of the bill?

Mr. BUCKNER. I refer the gentleman to the provision on page 8 of the bill, section 8, which provides—

That it shall be the duty of the board of assessors to inform themselves, by all proper and lawful means, at all times, of all taxable property in the District of Columbia which may have escaped valuation at previous assessments, and for this purpose, all buildings in process of erection, enlargement, or improvement, the work whereon, either by contract or by good management, should be completed on or before the 1st day of July then next ensuing, shall be assessed or re-assessed as though such work was already completed. It shall be their duty to assess and value, and make returns, on or before the 1st day of June of each and every year, of all and every species of property by this act made taxable and not before assessed and valued; to reduce the assessment and valuation of any property before assessed and valued which may have been lessened in value by means of fire or other casualty; to increase the assessment and valuation of any property which may have been enhanced in value by reason of any addition thereto or improvement thereof; and to make such corrections and alterations in previous assessments and valuations as may, according to their judgment and best information, be just and proper, having in view the actual cash value of the property. Said assessors shall, between the 1st and 20th day of June, 1876, of which notice shall be given by said assessors, hold daily sessions for the purpose of equalizing the assessments heretofore made by them, and for the purpose of hearing and determining any and all appeals from the valuation theretofore made by them.

I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL.]

Mr. NEAL. I shall want more time than that. I offer as a substitute for the bill what I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the substitute offered for the bill.

Mr. NEAL. With the consent of the House I will simply have read at this time the first section of the bill. That will, I think, clearly show the difference between the two branches of the committee.

The Clerk read the first section of the substitute, as follows:

That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia there shall be levied, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for each and every year thereafter, upon all property of whatsoever kind, whether real or personal, in said District; upon all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies, or otherwise of persons residing therein; and upon the property of all corporations, banks, or banking companies now existing or hereafter created therein, excepting only such property as is hereinafter expressly exempted, a tax of $1.50 on each $100 of the assessed value of the same within the city of Washington; of $1 on each $100 of the assessed value of the same within the city of Georgetown; and of seventy-five cents on each $100 of the assessed value of the same in that part of said District outside of said cities of Washington and Georgetown.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, in offering this bill as a substitute for the one presented by the majority of the committee, I am actuated by no spirit of hostility to them, but by a simple desire to distribute more equally than they propose the burden of taxation in this District. There is no essential difference between the bill of the committee and my own in so far as they relate to or provide for the taxation of real estate. The rate of taxation is the same in both, and whatever difference there is between them consists in the fact that the former provides for the assessment of real estate upon the valuation of last year, subject to revision only in certain enumerated cases, while the latter provides for a new valuation and assessment of such property. The real question therefore to be decided in choosing between the two bills is whether or not personal property shall be made to bear its fair proportion of the taxes to be levied and collected for the support of the District government.

Equality in the imposition of taxes is one of the cardinal principles of every just system of taxation. Perfect equality is of course not attainable in any case. Every system, let it be ever so correct in theory or wise in its character, must be necessarily more or less imperfect when we come to execute it. There will always be insurmountable obstacles in the way of equal and exact justice in the assessment and collection of taxes. But while this is true, we, as practical men, can adhere to that system which approaches most nearly the standard of equality and can at the same time be executed, and which does not purposely make wrongful, unjust, and odious distinctions or discriminations between one class of citizens and another, or between one species of property and another. And we ought to do it. It is our duty, our imperative duty as legislators, to do it. If the bill of the committee had been drawn in the especial interest of the capitalists of this District it could not have been made to answer their purposes more completely than it now does. It seems to be based upon and is clearly an attempt to enforce and carry out by law the idea so prevalent here, that this capital must be made the grandest and most beautiful city upon the continent, and that in furtherance of this project men of wealth from all parts of the country must be induced to come and take up their residence here by exempting their moneys, credits, and personal property of almost every kind from taxation. And I desire to enter my emphatic protest against any such legislation. Even though I shall stand here solitary and alone in opposition to it, I will resist to the utmost of my feeble powers all efforts to ingraft upon our statute-books any law which under any pretext whatever strikes from the tax-lists property in the hands of those who receive the greatest benefit from the protection of the Government. The objections urged against the taxation of personal property, moneys, credits, and investments, under cover of which immunity is proposed to the wealth and capital of this District, are not at all new. They have gone hand in hand with the taxation of such property at all times and under all governments where the system of taxing it has been adopted. But in spite of all such objections, notwithstanding the fact that theorists are ever ready to oppose it and on all occasions pronounce against it, the practical good sense and judgment of the people have always approved of the justice of taxing personal property, and the practice has steadily grown in popular favor until there is scarcely a State in the Union in which it does not prevail.

Besides, whatever objection can be urged against the taxation of personal property, as proposed by my substitute, can be urged with just as much force against the bill of the majority of the committee. What is termed the inquisitorial process is, I believe, always brought forward as one of the most important objections to the taxation of personal property. On all occasions the plea is urged that in order to tax personal property, and to collect the taxes assessed upon it, you must pry into the private business and the family circles of the citizens. Yet if members of this House will take the pains to examine the bill of the majority of this committee, they will find that whatever strength there is in that objection applies with greater force to that bill than it does to my substitute. Under the guise or form of a license tax the bill of the majority requires that the merchants, manufacturers, bankers, and business men of this city and of this District shall make just the same kind of an exhibit that will be required by the substitute I have proposed.

In fact there is nothing in the substitute that is inquisitorial in its nature, because in order to effectually and completely carry out the provisions of the bill the individual citizen is required simply to make and return to the assessor who is chosen for that purpose a statement under oath of his personal property and credits of all kinds liable to taxation. What his liabilities are, whether they be great or small, will not appear from that exhibit thus returned, because he will be required to list the value of his credits only after deducting his indebtedness. But the bill of the majority goes much further in that direction than will be required by the substitute. Besides, by reference to the fourteenth section of the bill of the committee it will be found that every person liable to tax who fails to pay the same before engaging in business will be subject to a penalty, and that in the cases of commercial agents, dealers or traders and their agents, or of the managers of theatrical performances, or exhibitions, or concerts for gain, circuses, &c., the aid of the informer and spy is invoked, and one-half of the penalty made to inure to his use and benefit. The bill of the committee, therefore, instead of obviating, as they suggest, this odious feature of the taxation of personal property, extends it much further than it need be extended under any fair or just system of taxation.

Mr. BUCKNER. Is not the same rule applied in your bill?

Mr. NEAL. I will attend to that in due time. Another objection put forward by the gentleman from Missouri is that the people of this District are opposed to the taxation of personal property. I ask the gentleman who are the people of this District?

Mr. BUCKNER. The tax-payers.

Mr. NEAL. The tax-payers?

Mr. BUCKNER. On real estate.

Mr. NEAL. If a few wealthy gentlemen who claim to carry in their breeches-pockets the entire city of Washington and District of Columbia are the only tax-payers, then I will assent to the proposition of the gentleman that the people are opposed to this system of taxation, but otherwise I will not. But suppose that the people of the District of Columbia are opposed to the taxation of personal property, other people than those residing here are interested in the question of the taxes to be levied in this District. If it was proposed by a tax on real estate alone to levy and collect all the money that might be required for the support and expenses of the District government, then perhaps there might be more force in the suggestion that the real-estate owners, or the tax-payers, are opposed to the taxation of personal property.

But in the present state of the case whatever deficiency there may be in the amount required for the support of the District government must be made up by the Government of the United States. Therefore your constituents and mine are required, out of their hard earnings, to contribute to the support of this District government, be it little or be it much. When you exempt personal property in this District from taxation, the amount that the owners of personal property would otherwise be required to pay upon it for the support of the government will be left in their hands, and the Government of the United States will pay it for them. The fact that personal property is exempted will not increase the amount that the real estate will have to pay.

There will be no change in the rate of taxation by reason of the fact that personal property will be exempt, none whatever. The case is entirely different from what it would be if a given sum was required to be raised; for then the rate of taxation would increase or diminish just in proportion to the increase or diminution of the value of the property to be taxed. That is not all; not only will the tax-payers in other parts of the United States be required to contribute of their property to make good any deficiency here, but if you carry out the scheme in effect proposed by the bill of the committee, while you are putting this additional burden upon the citizens of the States you are at the same time taking away from them a portion of the property out of which they will have to collect this sum of money. By exempting the moneys, credits, and investments of the capitalists of this District from taxation, you invite immigration into the District from the States; and every time that a man worth one million or two millions of dollars leaves my county or yours and comes into this District he lessens the amount of taxable property in that county just so much, and thereby increases to that extent the tax upon the remaining property in that county. Therefore this thing affects us in more ways than one.

But let us look for a few moments at some of the provisions of the bill of the committee, and see what kind of justice the majority of this committee propose to deal out to the people of this District.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] has expired.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I am occupying my own time, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] to yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL.] The Chair would gladly have recognized the gentleman from Ohio for an hour had it been so understood.

Mr. NEAL. I expressly told the gentleman from Missouri——

Mr. BUCKNER. I supposed the understanding was as stated by the Chair; but let the gentleman occupy his hour if he desires.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio will be regarded as entitled to the floor for an hour.

Mr. NEAL. There is, Mr. Speaker, a gross inequality in the taxes imposed by the bill of the committee if we recognize the principle upon which it is framed by them as a correct one. The only kind or description of personal property upon which a direct tax is levied in the usual way is furniture and some wharf improvements upon the Potomac River. All the other taxes that will be levied and collected under it will be in the shape of a license tax. And how near do they approach equality even under that system? Why, sir, insurance companies of all kinds are required to pay the small sum of $2 on each $1,000 of their capital invested, or twenty cents on the one hundred dollars, or to bring it down to a still finer point, the pitiful sum of two mills upon the dollar. Banks are required to pay $200 license and $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. upon their average deposits for the six months immediately preceding the time when the assessment shall be made.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That is by the committee's bill.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir. Now mark the difference between the tax imposed upon corporations and the tax which merchants and manufacturers of this city are required to pay. The merchant or manufacturer will be required to pay $5 on each thousand dollars of capital invested, or fifty cents on the hundred dollars; two and one-half times as much as the banker, with the exception of the license of $200.

Turn now to the fourteenth clause of the tenth section, on page 15, and you will find that the wagon which the poor man uses in his daily labor is required to pay $5 a year, a sum equal to not less than 2½ or 3 per cent. upon its cash value; a cart or dray, $2.50 a year; and that these poor creatures whom we see day after day trundling their push-carts through the streets in their hard efforts to earn a scanty subsistence for themselves are required to pay $2 a year for the privilege of doing it. Then, in striking contrast with this, turn to the forty-fifth clause of this same section, where you will find that the lordly owner of a handsome carriage, worth, it may be, $5,000, with his blooded steeds, worth twice that sum, is called upon to pay the paltry sum of $12, or only $6 in case he shall drive but one horse. And when you have done this, ask yourselves whether anything could be more unjust, any discrimination more odious and outrageous in its character.

Then again the majority of the committee propose to tax gold watches $1 each indiscriminately, $1 each without regard to their valuation. A watch may be set with jewels and be worth $3,000 or $4,000; another gold watch may be worth not more than $50; yet the owner of the latter pays into the public treasury for the support of the District government the same amount as the man who owns the $3,000 or $4,000 watch.

Again, silver watches of all kinds are utterly and entirely exempted by the provisions of the bill, so that while the owner of a gold watch worth $50 will be required to pay one dollar upon that watch the owner of a silver watch which may be worth $150 or $200 will not be required to pay a single farthing.

This substitute of mine proposes that all moneys and credits, personal property of every kind, tangible and intangible, belonging to those who are residents of this District shall be taxed; that all, rich and poor, shall be required to contribute according to the value of their property for the support of the District government; while the bill of the committee declares that property of this kind, with the exceptions I have named, shall be entirely exempt.

The gentleman from Missouri tells us that under the system proposed by the bill which the majority of the committee present to the House for its approval, all the money that the people of this District are able to pay will be levied and collected; that the money necessary for us to raise from the property of this District can be realized under their bill, and that the substitute supported by myself and two of my colleagues upon the committee is a mere experiment, although it proposes to inaugurate a system which has been put into practical effect and operation in nearly every State of this Union.

Now let us compare for a moment the probable amounts that will be realized under the bill of the majority of the committee and the substitute respectively. Under their bill tax will be levied in the first place upon the real estate of this District. According to the assessment of last year the entire value of the real property in the cities of Washington and Georgetown and in the county of Washington, outside of those cities, was $93,452,684, as follows: Washington City, $78,818,934; Georgetown, $5,849,317; Washington County, $8,784,433.

Under the bill of the committee, therefore, the District government will be enabled to realize from real property in the city of Washington $1,182,284; on real property in Georgetown, $58,493; on real estate in Washington County, $65,883. Then the gentleman estimates that he will be enabled to derive from the license provisions of this bill $275,000, and from the tax upon furniture $125,000, making the gross aggregate $1,706,660; or, if we allow a discount or reduction of 10 per cent. for delinquencies, except from the $275,000 for licences, the amount realized will be $1,563,494—$513,254 less than the estimated expenditures of the District for the coming year for all purposes, exclusive of interest on the 3.65 bonds, which, as stated by the commissioners, will be $2,077,749.

Now let us turn to the substitute proposed by the minority of the committee. Under this substitute the receipts from real estate will be the same as under the bill of the majority. Then, sir—and to this I wish to direct the attention of my colleagues upon the committee—under the license law passed by the legislative assembly of this District in 1871, most of which is left in full force by the substitute, $117,956 will be realized from licenses.

The amount realized from personal property, if we estimate the personalty to be equal to 40 per cent. of the realty in value, will be $522,664, making the gross aggregate then that will be collectable under my substitute $1,947,281. Or, allowing the discount of 10 per cent. for delinquencies, as in the case of the majority bill, it will leave as the net amount $1,764,348, thus showing that we will collect, in excess of the amount collected by the committee under their bill, $200,754. Or, if we estimate the personal property in this District to be equal in value to 50 per cent. of the realty, which I think I can show by statistics to be more accurate than the 40 per cent. estimate, the amount realized will be $2,077,947, or $1,881,948, allowing a discount of 10 per cent. for delinquencies as before, being $318,453 more than can be collected by the committee under their bill.

For the purpose, Mr. Speaker, of satisfying this House that the estimates which I have made in regard to the value of personal property are not exaggerated, I will call attention for a few moments to one or two facts upon which they can base their estimates. In 1870, the last year in which I was able to get at the fact, the assessed value of the personal property in the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, was 51¼ per cent. of that of the real estate. The real estate in that city at that time, as assessed for taxation, was valued at $111,588,029, while the personal property was valued at $57,370,754, being a difference of $54,217,275, so that the ratio of personal to real property in that city at that time was as 1 to 1.8. In the city of Boston, on the 1st of May, 1874, the personal property was 44.1 per cent. of that of real property. The realty was valued at $554,200,150, while the personalty was valued at $244,544,900, showing a difference in value between the two kinds of property of $309,645,250, and the ratio of personalty to real property to be as 1 to 2.26.

Why, sir, in the State of Ohio at large, taking country and town alike, the value of real estate and personal property as compared in 1874 showed the personalty to be 33.4 per cent. in value of that of the realty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we take the estimate of the commissioners of this District themselves in regard to one kind of personal property, as they have returned it to the committee, as a basis for computation, it will show that in making my calculation upon the basis of 50 per cent. I am short of what the truth will actually prove to be, because, according to one calculation contained in their written statement to the chairman of our committee, the estimated value of furniture alone in this city is $12,000,000. And I submit it to any fair-minded man that, if the furniture in the private houses in this District is worth $12,000,000, the entire personal property of the District, including money, merchandise, and manufactured goods of all kinds, must be equal in value to $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 and therefore it is much more than 50 per cent. in value of the real estate.

Let me direct the attention of the distinguished chairman of my committee to another fact. He says we are entering upon an untried field in the taxation of personal property in this District, that we are trying an experiment. Can I get his attention? If he will listen to me for one moment I will show him that at any rate we cannot lose much by our experiment. I had a table but I have now mislaid it, and I must go on without it. Taking his own bill as the standard by which we are to be governed in ascertaining the amount collectable, I shall be able to show that under the personal and license features of my bill I will be able to realize within $43,926 of the entire amount collectable under his bill and then have all of the personal property of every kind in this District to go upon, outside of furniture and this wharf property of which I have spoken, because, as stated by me awhile ago, after we shall have repealed the clauses in the old license law of the Legislative Assembly of 1871, which will be repealed by the substitute, we will still be able to realize from licenses $117,976, or nearly $118,000. Taking the gentleman's own estimate we will be able to realize $125,000 upon furniture, because that tax is to be collected in the same way under his bill and under the substitute. According to the statement given to me by the collector of this District, the amount collected from merchants under the old license law of the Legislative Assembly during the last year was $30,165 upon the rate of $4 on each $1,000 of capital invested, or of four mills to the dollar; and when the tax upon property of that kind is increased, as it will be by the substitute, from four to fifteen mills on the dollar, or $1.50 on the hundred, we will be able to raise the sum of $113,118 from the tax upon merchandise.

The amount realized from these three sources which confessedly can be collected—the gentleman himself admits they collected it last year under their license law from merchants, and we can collect it this year in the same manner, because the same statement will be required in the one case as was required in the other, the increase from four mills to 1½ per cent. or fifteen mills being the only difference between the two years—I say from these three sources alone we can safely and confidently count upon $356,074, which brings us within $43,926 of the entire amount which the gentleman claims can be collected under his bill exclusive of the sum that will be collected upon real estate.

We shall then have left all of the banks and bankers, all moneys, investments, securities, and credits of all kinds—indeed, all the personal property of the District, tangible and intangible, except furniture and merchandise—out of which to get the $43,926 necessary to make our collection upon personal property equal in amount to that of his bill. And who will contend that this cannot be done? I think the honorable chairman of the committee himself will not venture to stand up here in the presence of this House and of the country to claim that the little sum of $43,926 cannot be collected off of the aggregate wealth of this District, when he admits, or rather insists, that $125,000 will be collected from the furniture alone. Hence, I maintain that it is clearly and conclusively established that more revenue can and will be raised under the substitute than under the bill of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I have been unable for want of time to discuss in detail the provisions of either of the bills now before the House. I hope, however, that I have said enough to give to its members some knowledge of the questions at issue between the majority of my colleagues upon the committee and myself.

I will only say in conclusion that if there is any discrimination to be made in this matter of taxation it ought to be made in favor of the poorer class of citizens, not in favor of those who are rolling in wealth and luxury and are best able and are most bound by every rule of common honesty and justice to contribute of their wealth to the support of the government which protects them.

I yield now to my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. WILLARD.]

Mr. WILLARD. I rise for the purpose of expressing my full and hearty accord with the bill presented by the minority of the committee, and which has just now been supported by the very able and elaborate speech of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL.] I do so, Mr. Speaker, because I believe that in almost any part of this country excepting here in the District of Columbia the bill of the majority would be regarded as a most startling proposition.

The proposal is to tax the real property and the visible personal property of the District of Columbia and to make an exemption of another class of property now held by the most wealthy inhabitants of this community. It is, as I regard it, nothing more than a subsidy to a portion of the people of this District; for, Mr. Speaker, you cannot make any exemption whatever of property from taxation unless that exemption shall practically have the effect of subsidizing the property so exempted; and if we should grant subsidies to any class of people in this District, I think it should not be to those who withhold their property from real-estate investments and industrial enterprises; for it must be granted that the description of property exempted from taxation by the bill of the majority is not that property which is calculated to build up the industrial, manufacturing, and commercial interests of the national capital.

In support of this view I desire to call attention to an opinion upon this question which is expressed in so much better language than I can use that I venture to present it to the House.

I read from Palgrave on Local Taxation of Great Britain:

A particular and unlooked-for pressure of local taxation on one form of investment alone, such as an investment in agricultural improvements, would be a peculiarly objectionable impost. If the burden of taxation of any improvement of what is technically termed real property, whether that consists of lands or tenements, becomes, or is, so onerous as to amount to a real bar to the improvement of that description of property, it is the duty of the government to inquire into the matter, and to adjust the local taxation in such a manner as to prevent this from occurring. Otherwise the general prosperity of the country, so far as it depends on such improvements, will receive a check which may be prejudicial to it in the highest degree. It would be an evil day for the country should the small capitalist—the owner of, say, from £3,000 to £5,000—find that it answered his purpose better to keep his money in some foreign stock and content himself with drawing the dividends as they became due, and living on the proceeds, instead of investing the capital in some occupation which would offer the ordinary profits of trade, being deterred by the pressure of local taxation on the industrial occupations of the country.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, in that doctrine. I believe that it would be an evil day if in this country we should impose the chief burden of taxation upon that class of persons who are engaged in building up the great enterprises which tend to develop the resources of this country and of our people. For that reason, sir, I do not accept this new-fangled notion which is put forth by some men eminent in this day, that the burden of taxation should be laid upon the real property of the country. I notice that in some portions of our land this notion is advocated with the express purpose of inviting capital; in other words, it is proposed that communities should purchase wealthy men to come among them by being permitted to hold their capital aloof from the industrial interests of the country, free from tax, thus encouraging capitalists rather to invest their property in foreign stocks, in bonds, and investments of that sort, instead of improving the country, building up manufactures, and carrying forward those great enterprises which promote the real interests of the country in every part and portion. I hope, therefore, that we shall not continue in this District an experiment which I believe to be destructive to its interests. We should rather encourage men to lay out their means, to place their capital in those investments which are identified with the real prosperity of the District, which tend to develop its manufactures, to build up its commerce, to revive its industries, and to prepare the people of the District of Columbia for that day which is soon to come, when the United States Government will cease to give them that aid which it has done in the past; when the people of this country will say to the people of the District of Columbia, you must take care of yourselves, you must tax your own property, you must build up your own schools, you must provide for the improvement of your own streets, you must in great part take care of your own interests, as the people of other parts of the country take care of their interests.

Mr. Speaker, the debt which now rests upon the people of this District by reason of the management and policy which have prevailed in the past has now nearly reached a volume equal to that of one-third of the indebtedness of this entire Republic when Alexander Hamilton funded the public debt. We must devise some system of taxation which will place the burden equally upon all the citizens of the District, so that every man who has property will feel that he is a police officer, whose particular duty it is to see that the affairs of the District are administered so economically that his property shall not be entirely taken from him by the imposition of taxes. I say, sir, that I shall vote for this bill of the minority especially upon this account, because it is a step in the right direction; it is a step in the direction of imposing the burden of taxation of this District equally upon the property of the District. Mr. Gladstone has well said that indirect taxes are always a burden upon the poor and the laboring-man, while, on the other hand, direct taxation imposes the principal burden, as it ought, upon the middle and wealthy classes. For this additional reason I am in favor of the bill proposed by the minority of the committee, which imposes direct taxation instead of indirect taxation, which liberates industry by diminishing rather than increasing the onerous and multiplied licenses that already burden nearly every enterprise in which the industrious poor may desire to engage. Let us adopt a plan of taxation which emancipates labor, encourages business energy, promotes economy and thrift, and not a plan which shall forever crush out all hope of the commercial and industrial prosperity of this city and District.

Mr. BUCKNER. I now yield to my colleague on the committee from Vermont, [Mr. HENDEE.]

Mr. HENDEE. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to entertain or undertake to interest the House a very great length of time. I have, with the majority of the committee, thought that the bill presented by the chairman was the best bill. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the bill of the majority will reach the personal property of this city and bring it within taxation to a much greater extent than will the bill of the minority. I believe that the bill of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] is so loosely and so carelessly drawn up in many of its particulars that it would be an utter impossibility for any board of assessors to reach, for the purposes of taxation, one-tenth part of the personal property of the District, perhaps I ought to say, to be safe, one-fifth part, while I believe that the bill of the majority will reach at least seven or eight tenths of all the personal property within this District that should be taxed. Now I will venture this assertion, that my good friend from Michigan [Mr. WILLARD] and colleague on the committee who has just preceded me, never has read what is known as the Neal bill in detail since it came before the committee or before this House. If he had he would not have failed to see those defects in it which would render it, in his judgment, a very imperfect bill. I will speak of those defects more in detail hereafter.

And I wish to say here that I am not wedded to either bill, provided that the bill of the minority can be so perfected as to be just in its provisions and at the same time accomplish the object we all desire: equal taxation and the raising of the necessary revenues for District purposes.

Now, there is this simple difference between the bill of the majority and the bill of the minority: The majority propose to tax personal property in the District, with one or two exceptions, by direct taxation—that is, by a license in the first instance and then by so much percentage on the sales of property or goods or whatever is dealt in by persons in the District liable to taxation. In this way no man who does any business in the District, no man who owns any personal property, can possibly escape taxation on that property, because he is not allowed to enter into any business whatever until he first pays a license tax, and then he must monthly or semi-annually make a return of the gross sales of goods or property made by him, upon which he pays a certain percentage as taxes. In that way the taxes can be levied and more justly and certainly collected than otherwise or than can be done under the provisions of the bill of the minority.

Now the bill of the minority proposes to reach this personal property by nine assessors who shall go into every house, store, grog-shop, nook, and corner of this entire District and make an inventory of all the property of all its citizens. Now what an idea! They provide that certain schedules or blank schedules shall be issued to the tax-payers and that they shall fill up those schedules in the first place and return them to the assessors without any valuation whatever. This puts the matter in this position, that the assessors, in order to know the value of that personal property, must go to the property itself and make full investigation and appraisement. The gentleman proposes by the terms of his bill that this shall be done within so many days, probably not more than twenty or thirty days after the passage of the bill. I maintain that it would be utterly impossible to bring the personal property of the District under taxation within that time, and that was the reason why personal property was not taxed here a year ago, for want of time.

It was found impossible under the law of last year to make the assessment required within the time limited in the law, and hence no assessment was made upon personal property.

Now I say that the system by which the personal property of the District shall be taxed constitutes the only variance or difference in fact between the minority and the majority bills now before the House. The revenues of the District have been raised here for a great many years in the exact way and form proposed by the majority of the committee, while the minority propose an entire new system of taxation. Now I think, while this District is burdened with that debt of which we hear and read so much and while everything is so uncertain as to what the District debt is and how much the District ought to pay and how much the Government of the United States ought to pay of it, we should allow the people here to have some voice as to the manner in which they shall be taxed and what of their property shall be taxed.

I wish now to state one or two facts. The large majority of the real-estate owners in this District, I might say nine-tenths of all the citizens in the District of Columbia who own real estate here, and a large majority of those gentlemen do not own personal property to any extent, are willing to submit to the simple rule of taxation which has been adopted in the District for the last seven or eight years, and that is a tax of so much on real property and so much from licenses and on sales of property in the District as will raise the revenue necessary to carry on the government. Sir, we have taken, and have a right to take, by the Constitution of the United States, all right to rule matters in this District from the citizens of the District. Congress is supreme over the people of the District; they have no voice and they can have no voice in the legislation had here which affects their interests. They have had a territorial government heretofore and a legislature, which had the power to devise ways and means and determine the mode and extent of taxation, but now that that territorial government is abolished it is but just that we should let the people themselves say how they desire to be taxed and to what extent, if not directly, certainly by petition.

But by legislation we have taken away all such power from the people of this District; they are simply our wards. As was said at an early day, this District is simply the child of the United States. I believe that, instead of a tax bill, inquisitorial and oppressive as it may be, according to the terms of the minority bill, we ought, to some extent at least, to listen to the wishes and desires of the citizens who are to pay the taxes required in this District. This is a good principle. It strikes me, if a man must pay money for any purpose, public or personal, we should give him the right, if not by direct vote at least by petition, to say how and when he will pay that money if his plan meets the object in view.

If that is good doctrine, let us apply it to this case. As I have said, the people of this District have almost unanimously agreed that the bill which has been reported by the majority of this committee is entirely satisfactory to them. If that be so, and the bill will raise the amount of revenue required to carry on this government, why should Congress interfere and say that that revenue shall not be raised in accordance with the wishes of the people who will be required to pay it?

From the report of the commissioners of this District it seems that no more will be required in order to carry on the government of the District for the next fiscal year than the sum of $1,902,749. This estimate does not include the interest on what are known as the 3.65 bonds and does not include that part of the expense the Government of the United States should pay in reference to the police force of the District, and perhaps one or two other items of expenditure. But the estimates of the commissioners will show that the sum of $2,500,000 will carry on this District government as defined by the commissioners and also pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds, which will be about $500,000.

The Government of the United States, as a matter of course, has a great property interest in this District, and it should not shirk nor shrink from bearing its proper share of the burdens of the District government. The area of real estate owned by the United States is 54 per cent. of the entire area of the District, and it ought to pay its just share of the taxes. The bill of the majority of the committee will raise from $1,700,000 to $1,800,000. If the United States Government will pay by direct appropriation 33⅓ or, say, 30 per cent. of the amount necessary to carry on this government for the next fiscal year, that will be sufficient, with what will be realized under this bill, for the purpose.

I think this is just to the Government, and perhaps more than just, as I believe the United States should pay a greater proportion than one-third. I do not think we should oppress the people of this District. I know there is a sentiment abroad among the people that a great deal of fraud has been committed in this District. I believe that sentiment to be well founded. But that fraud has been committed by perhaps a very few men. The result of that fraud has been visited upon the poor of this District and not upon the rich. I believe many have been charged with great wrongs here who are innocent, and that many may have escaped who are guilty.

Now, whom do we propose to tax by the bill of the majority of the committee? Not the poor people but the rich people of this District. When you talk about reaching the bonds held in this District, I can say to you that there are substantially no bonds owned by private individuals in this District that are subject to taxation. It is almost an impossibility to find many bonds and mortgages owned in this District. To be sure a great deal of the real estate of this District is encumbered, but the mortgages upon it are held by people in Maryland, New York, New England, and elsewhere. And those mortgages, if they are taken care of in their own States, are taxed there, and of course cannot be reached here.

My friend from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] says he wants to reach the rich men of the District. I want to say that there are no men in this District, or but very few, subject to taxation under this bill who are wealthy in money, but they are wealthy in real estate, and those men we reach directly by this bill. Some of the most wealthy men who do business in this District, men who have the most money, are not liable to taxation here. Why? Because they live in Virginia, in Maryland, or elsewhere. They take particular pains to get outside of this District where taxation is less, where they cannot be reached by the taxation here, for they prefer to be taxed at home and at a less rate. I say that by our bill we will reach directly the property of the rich men of this District, as their wealth is made up of the real estate here. I might give you the names of twenty or thirty of the wealthiest men of this District. What is their property? Not bonds and mortgages; it may be United States bonds, but those you cannot touch. It is real estate, to which they hold the title, and upon which they must pay the taxes if the majority bill passes, and thus assume mainly the burdens of the District.

Having made these general remarks, I will now show the looseness with which the so-called Neal bill has been drawn. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] says he is in favor of equal taxation. So am I. Let us look at his bill. He starts out with providing that the tax on real estate in this District shall be at the following rates: In the city of Washington, $1.50 on each $100 of valuation; in the city of Georgetown, $1 per $100; and on real estate outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown seventy-five cents per $100 of valuation. So far that may be right; that is the provision of the bill of the majority. It is right for this reason: The greater part of the money expended in this District for improvements has been expended within the limits of the city of Washington. Very little has been expended in Georgetown, and still less in that portion of the District outside of the limits of Georgetown and Washington.

Hence it may be said that the real estate which directly receives the benefit to be derived from those expenditures in improvements should be taxed differently, or more than that which is less benefited; that is, the real estate which has received the greatest benefit should bear the greatest part of the burden. But when you undertake to apply that idea or rule to personal property I think it will be found to be unjust, and one cannot fail, if he will study the question, to observe the remarkable result. A horse in the city of Washington is taxed $1.50 if he is worth $100; but over the boundary, within ten rods perhaps of the city limits, a horse of the same value is taxed only seventy-five cents; or, suppose I happen to live in Georgetown, you tax me $1 on my horse, when in fact I do every single dollar's worth of my business within the city of Washington. Now, one-fourth or perhaps nearly one-half of all the horses, carts, drays, and other vehicles that are to be taxed in this bill are owned beyond the limits of the city, but their owners do all their business in the city. You propose to tax these at the rate of only seventy-five cents if owned in the county, or $1 if owned in Georgetown, while if owned in Washington you tax them at the rate of $1.50. This is wrong. Why? Because a difference of ten rods in the location of a man's residence gives him the benefit of 50 or 100 per cent. on his tax. I say that this is wholly unwise and wholly unjust, because the tax is on the same kind of property and the revenue to be derived is to be used for the same general purposes.

That is the very first provision of the bill of the minority; a provision for three rates of taxes upon the same property occupied and owned in the same District and to be taxed for the same purposes. This is not equal taxation. The inequality applies not only to horses and wagons, but to everything else. Many men doing business in this District live just across what is known as Boundary street. Some of them are among the rich men of this District. A man of that description owning $10,000 of personal property, money, stocks, notes, or anything of that kind, if he owns them aboveboard, pays on each $100 valuation of that property seventy-five cents; while the poor man or rich man either, living within five rods of him perhaps, but on this side of an imaginary line, pays at the rate of $1.50 upon property of the same description.

Is there any man in this House who would dare to stand up in his own Legislature or in a town meeting before his constituents and advocate this kind of discrimination? Certainly not. It is unjust, it is unfair; and in any State having a constitution it would be unconstitutional. This objection I say applies to the taxation of every kind of property proposed to be taxed under the minority bill and ought of itself to be sufficient to defeat it.

But this is not all. The very first section of that bill provides that all the real estate in the District shall be taxed at a certain rate; and it also provides that all the personal property in the District shall be taxed at a certain rate—property found within the District between the 1st day of April and the 1st day of June, in each year—a term of sixty days. It makes no exemption whatever. Whoever may be the citizen, wherever he may come from, if he happens to drop into this District between the 1st day of April and the 1st day of June, is liable to taxation under this bill for every species of property he may bring into the District with him. If he drives his carriage here, if he brings his clothing here, if he has his watch in his pocket, everything of that kind is subjected to tax. In this respect the provision of the bill is indiscriminate. Instead of providing that personal property owned by residents of this District shall be taxed, it provides for taxing all property of all kinds, real and personal, found in the District between particular days. Now, at the first session of every Congress, this city between the dates named is full of members of Congress and other citizens not residents, with their families; and under this substitute every one of them is liable to taxation even for the very clothes that he and his family wear or bring with them. The laws of every State, so far as I have examined them, make in respect to taxation some reasonable exemptions. This bill does not. This bill allows no exemption of personal property beyond $250. In my State the personal wearing-apparel and ornaments of a man and his family are exempted. The bill of the gentleman from Ohio proposes to tax every article of wearing-apparel, personal ornaments, all beds, bedding, bedsteads, and everything of that kind, or that can be called property; it does not allow the benefit of any deduction except the small sum of $250; and there is hardly any citizen of any standing in this District who has not clothing alone exceeding in value $250. It strikes me that that is very unjust, to say the least, and that other and reasonable exemptions should be allowed.

The bill which passed this House last year contained a clause for a personal tax; but it was provided in so many words that "the goods, chattels, and other personal property owned by persons domiciled in said District, but whose legal residence is out of said District, shall be exempt from taxation." Now there are a great many people domiciled in this District who have a legal residence elsewhere, and who are taxed elsewhere. To say you will not exempt the property of those people is a great injustice to them, because it is double taxation—taxation at home and taxation abroad. If you would insert a provision that property taxed at the place of a man's residence should be exempt here, that might answer; but if you make no provision of that kind, this District will have more lawsuits, more contention and trouble for the next two years under this tax bill as proposed by the gentleman from Ohio than it has had for the last twenty years under all its tax laws.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that any gentleman in this House agrees to the doctrine that property should bear double and treble taxation. Now let us see how the bill of the gentleman from Ohio operates. A person owning stock in a horse-railroad company in this District is taxed at the rate of $1.50 on every $100 worth of stock. In the next place, the company itself is taxed upon all its property—horses, cars, tracks, stables, harness, and everything else it owns—at the rate of $1.50 on each $100. Then, in the third place, this company must pay a license of $10 for every car it runs. Now here is triple taxation according to the bill of the minority. It cannot be otherwise, because every single share of stock is to be taxed; also every article of property; and besides there is to be a license of $10 on every car that is run for the purpose of carrying passengers.

Is that just; is it fair? If he would say in his bill the property under this law in this District shall not pay double taxation, or shall not be taxed but once, then, of course, he would remove that difficulty. But his bill has no such provision in it whatever, and hence we have treble, certainly double taxation.

I have examined this bill very thoroughly for the purpose of discussing it in detail somewhat, because I saw the looseness and carelessness with which it was drawn.

Again, sir, you may take for instance a merchant, and go into his store on any day you see fit between the 1st day of April and the 1st day of June and you may find $10,000 in his safe. In the Neal bill this $10,000 in money must go into the tax-list and be taxed $1,500. So far that is well. Then, if he puts that money at any time during the year into property, he is compelled to return that property and pay $1.50 on each $100 in value of that property. So you tax his capital, you tax the money in his vault, and you tax the goods he buys with that money, if he buys at any time within the year.

Mr. NEAL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HENDEE. I will for a moment.

Mr. NEAL. I will call his attention to the fact that he is in error in regard to double taxation in case of persons who own property in incorporated companies. In that case my substitute, in section 11, provides that no person shall be required to include in the statement required by this section any share or portion of the capital stock or property of any company or corporation which is required to return its capital and property for taxation in this District.

Mr. HENDEE. How is it in regard to taxing the cars by license and at the same time taxing the property of a horse-car company on valuation?

Mr. NEAL. That is a tax under the license law for police purposes. That is a clear distinction and well defined. For the same reason a tax is imposed on cabs and omnibuses, for the purpose of bringing them within the control of the authorities of the District.

Mr. HENDEE. It is not at all necessary to have a license tax in order to bring property within police regulation. The law puts the control of that kind of property into the hands of the District authorities without requiring a license tax for the purpose. If that property is taxed in one way, it should not be taxed in another.

There is another objection to his bill. My State I think has a model system of taxation, and if you are going into the matter of taxing property to the extent Mr. NEAL'S substitute provides I think you should make the system as perfect as possible. The minority bill allows an individual to offset his debts against his credits. So far, so good; but I maintain if you go into this system of taxation you should allow a man to offset his honest, bona fide debts not only against his credits but against his personal property. That is, in short, take an exact inventory of every man's estate upon a certain day of each year, and upon whatever balance you find against him make up your taxation. But he does not propose to do this; and, while he will let an individual offset or apply his debts upon his credits, he does not allow that privilege to a corporation. I say the corporation should have the same right and should be treated in the same way in this regard as the individual. If a corporation is taxed on its credits, its notes, its money on hand, to the full extent, and owes debts, that corporation should have the right to offset to the same extent that an individual can. But he in express terms says nobody but an individual shall offset his debts against his credits. He does not apply the rule to a corporation at all. And while a corporation may be taxed on personal property, while a bank or any other corporation may have hundreds of thousands of dollars due it, and have as much owing, or a smaller amount, he taxes them on the entire credit and does not allow them any offset of the debts they may owe. I think he should amend his bill in that regard. He provides in section 3 that the amount of any valid and bona fide debt or debts which any person shall individually and absolutely owe shall be deducted from the assessed value of the credits of any such persons, but not otherwise, upon the same being established by the affidavit of such person claiming deductions as hereinafter provided. I think he should extend this right to all corporations as well as individuals, else it is not equal taxation.

Another objection I have to his bill—which is perhaps not so important, but it may become of some importance—is that it provides that before taxation is gone into in this District, or "listing," as he calls it, certain schedules or blanks shall be sent around, and that all property shall be returned in the schedule for taxation. He also provides, if anybody shall fail to make that return, a penalty of 50 per cent., in addition to the tax he would have paid, shall be added; and not only that, but imprisonment. It does not say, if the man shall knowingly or willfully fail to do it. I think these words should be inserted.

Again, there is not a single word in his bill, from one end of it to the other, which protects in the slightest degree the rights of non-resident tax-payers; not a single word. The word "non-resident" is not, I think, in his bill. Certainly it is not in any part of the bill where it ought to be. Now, there is a great deal of real estate and personal estate owned in this District by people who live without it, who live in New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and other portions of the country. If they fail to make this return, they are liable not only to 50 per cent. additional tax as a penalty, but they are liable to be imprisoned. If the gentleman would insert the words "knowingly and intentionally" fail to make that return, why then the penalty might be reasonable. But it strikes me that 50 per cent. additional to the tax is a sufficiently large penalty for failure to make the return, unless you show that the failure was intentional.

Now let me call attention to another feature of the minority bill. I wish the House to notice the language in the twelfth section. It is:

> That every person of full age and sound mind not a married woman shall list the real property of which he is the owner situate in this District, the personal property of which he is the owner, and all moneys in his possession; and he shall also list all moneys invested, loaned, or otherwise controlled by him.

Now, it strikes me that this is too broad. It is right that you should list the money and the stocks and the property that belong to residents of this District. But suppose a resident of this District, during the month named or between the days named in this bill, happens to have property put into his possession or under his control that belongs to some citizen of Maryland or New York which has been taxed there already and is only temporarily placed here. This bill taxes it simply because it is found here and when in fact it is owned elsewhere. I say the gentleman should strike out the words "possession" and "controlled by him" unless he qualifies them so as to include only the property brought here for permanent use and used here for profit or otherwise, so as to be properly subject to taxation. But to say that the mere fact that there is deposited in the hands of a resident here on the 10th day of April $10,000 to hold for somebody in New York or elsewhere, temporarily perhaps, or for any purpose not connected with any business of the holder, or the business of this District, shall give you the right to control and tax that property, seems to me to be wrong; it goes too far, and the words "possession" and "controlled by him" should be either stricken out of the bill, as I have said, or so modified that injustice shall not be done to the owner or holder of such property.

Again, all through this bill in regard to the taxing of checks, drafts, credits due or owing by any person, the gentleman from Ohio makes the same distinction of $1.50 in the city and only seventy-five cents in the county on the same kind of personal property. Now I think he should make the tax on this species of property uniform for the entire District.

I have another objection to this bill, and that is in regard to the matter of expense. The gentleman provides by his bill that there shall absolutely be an appraisal of real estate every twelve months. I do not think there are two States in the United States that require appraisals more than once in three, five, or seven years. Of real estate once in five years is often enough, as it seems to me. The gentleman proposes to have nine assessors, at a good salary, and every year they must make a re-appraisal of all the real estate in this District; while the majority bill only proposes a re-appraisal once in five years. That is the law in my State. I think it is the law in a majority of States; and it is often enough. It will take weeks and months for the appraisers to go through this District and make the assessments; and it is of no manner of use to require it annually. If a house is burned down or a new one built the appraisers every year could take that into account and make the necessary change on the list; but to go through an entirely new appraisal every year is unnecessary and must be very expensive. As to personal property it might be necessary, and undoubtedly would be; but it appears to me folly to have a new appraisal annually in regard to real estate.

Last year under the new law certain men were appointed appraisers. The entire real-estate appraisal of this District under that law has just been perfected. I think nine-tenths of the people of this District who own real estate here are entirely satisfied with that appraisal. Once in a while a man grumbles. I never knew an assessment or appraisal to be made but what somebody would grumble about it. But I never in all my experience saw a community more universally satisfied with an appraisal of their real estate than are the people who live in this District to-day. They are satisfied with its uniformity and its fairness; that is, when you compare the appraisals of the properties of different individuals. Now, that appraisal has been made and is now in existence, and I ask why this Congress should order nine new men to go out through this District and re-appraise this property when you have got an appraisal that is just and satisfactory to the people. There is a saving of expense of six or eight or ten thousand dollars annually in the majority bill over that in the minority bill, because in the majority bill we do not propose to re-appraise oftener than once in five years. It seems to me we should avoid this expense, as it will so much lessen the burdens of the people in the District and the government.

Now here is a curiosity. The bill of the gentleman from Ohio proposed to have every individual in this District make up a list—of what? His clothing, his furniture, his personal ornaments, his stock in trade, his notes, his credits, his checks, his drafts, everything, and return it to the assessors. But there is nothing in the bill which authorizes him to put any particular value upon it, and the bill does not provide whether the party making the schedule shall affix the price or whether the assessor shall do so. One or the other or both should have the privilege, and the man should have the right to appeal if he has been unreasonably assessed. This should certainly be made more definite. There is no right of appeal given in terms in the minority bill.

The bill says that the assessors shall sit and revise and regulate the list, but it does not give to any person taxed the right or power who feels himself to be aggrieved to come before the board and be heard or have a revision of this list. It also authorizes, in case no valuation of personal property of a party is made out, that the assessors shall take his notes, book-accounts, drafts, stocks, and evidences of debt of all kinds and place upon them themselves a value for the purpose of taxation. It involves inquiry into a man's entire business. If there be one note or a dozen found by the assessor he may inquire as to the value of the notes, whether the men are responsible who have signed the notes, and generally may go through his entire private affairs. Now, it seems to me that this proceeding might be dispensed with, and that it would be better to let the person taxed estimate the value of this class of property subject to revision by the assessor. If the substitute passes as it now reads I do not believe there is time between the passage of the bill and the time when it is to go into effect in which all this bnsiness could be transacted.

There is another thing, Mr. Speaker, to which I desire to call attention. I think it would be a great deal better to confine taxation to the property in existence in the District on a day certain. I think there would be a chance without such a provision in the bill for the practice of great frauds upon the tax-gatherers or assessors. The substitute proposes to give sixty days in which to appraise and assess the tax upon a man's property. The assessor simply sends him a schedule—and take my word for it that six men out of every ten in this District, or in any section of the country, would make that schedule out on the one day in those sixty days when he could show the least amount liable to taxation. But if you provide that the schedule shall be made out on a certain day and allow the assessor to examine the party under oath, it would be in the power of the assessors I believe to find out the amount for which he should be taxed; but where you give him sixty days to manipulate the list, I want to tell you the simple license system would furnish you double the amount of revenue you would get by taxing personal property in the manner proposed in this bill.

I may say here, Mr. Speaker, that this is really a District not of residents, but of non-residents. A large number of the merchants who do business in this city are non-residents. They come here from Baltimore, New York, Philadelphia, and from all parts of the country. When you fix the time when they are to be taxed on their personal property to be between the 1st of April and the 1st of June, do you suppose you will find any of those men here in those two months? It is not necessary for them to be here then, certainly not to have their goods here, in order to make their profits. The trading season of Washington is between the 1st of December and perhaps the 1st of February. The city is then filled with non-resident merchants who come here regularly, and they will easily escape taxation under such a law as this. The resident merchants will have to pay the entire tax on their property, while the men who really sell the goods here will escape your taxation. It would not reach them, for they have no business to do here in the months of April and May. The majority bill provides that no man shall open a store or do any kind of business until he shall first have obtained a license, and that license is in part his personal tax, and that thereafter he shall pay a certain percentage on all he sells; but the bill of the minority simply reaches a man's property who is here during a certain sixty days, from the 1st of April to the 1st of June. You may be sure that many parties will avoid taxation under this bill by either leaving the District with their goods just before the 1st of April, or by coming here just after the 1st of June. Under the bill of the majority there is no escape.

I find that the gentleman in his substitute uses the word "control" in several places. I will not stop to consider that point, because it is not necessary. I think every gentleman here will agree with me that because a citizen of the District of Columbia happens to control in a certain month a piece of property, that he should not for that reason alone be liable to taxation upon it.

There is another provision to which I wish to call attention, and it is this: that if anybody shall make a false affidavit touching the matters provided for in said section 11, he shall be considered as guilty of perjury. Now, a man might make a false affidavit in regard to his property or the schedule to be returned, and yet he might not have had any intention of making it so, and might not even have known that it was so. I think the gentleman should put in some qualifying expression, providing, for instance, that if a man "knowingly" or "intentionally" makes a false return he shall be punished as for perjury, &c.; but to say that a non-resident or a resident who has simply carried in a return shall be imprisoned because the affidavit attached proves to be false, whether he knew it or intended it should be so or not, and without showing there was an intent on his part to make a false affidavit, it seems to me is inflicting a punishment which the country has no right to inflict.

There are some other minor objections to the bill, but I will not notice them at length except to say, that it provides that the assessor shall take a certain oath. Now, I think that the oath ought to be appended to the list of the real and personal property, so that it should have something appended to it to show that it is the list upon which the taxes are to be assessed, something to identify it, something the people might know was absolutely a true list; but this bill simply requires that they shall take an oath, and that it shall be filed in the office, and does not require that it shall be attached to the list or any part of it.

I wish now, Mr. Speaker, to speak for a moment upon the majority bill. It taxes the real estate in the District in the same way that the minority bill does, but we have almost doubled and sometimes trebled the rates for licenses, and I feel confident in saying that under the majority bill we shall realize fully a sufficient amount to pay two-thirds of all the expenses of the District, together with the interest on the entire debt of the District, and it seems to me that that is all that ought to be required of the District. Let me say further that there is a nominal license, as I call it, upon certain practices of this District, certain kinds of business which it seems to me are entirely inadequate.

In the majority bill we have reached these cases. We propose to make circuses pay twice as much as they do now, or a certain proportion more. We propose to make these low rum-holes pay two or three times as much as they pay under the old law. We make billiard-tables pay more. We make bankers pay more on their deposits; and we have undertaken in every possible shape to reach that class of property known as luxuries, and make it pay a higher rate of taxation.

I think the old license-system of this District was very much too low in the rates it levied upon billiard-tables, liquor-saloons, circuses, &c. The bill of the minority leaves these matters just where they always have been; makes no change whatever. I think it is a good thing to impose such a rate of license-tax upon groggeries and similar places as will at least have a tendency to shut them up as far as possible. In the cities of Washington and Georgetown I understand there are between twelve and fifteen hundred such places in which liquor is openly sold, not for medicinal purposes, but for drink. They are conducted by men for purposes of profit, men who are inflicting upon this community a great deal of immorality. The majority bill puts a tax on these men which the committee think will tend to shut up more or less of their places of business.

As I said in the opening of my remarks, I believe the people of this District should have a voice in this matter. When I first came to Congress, three years ago, I felt almost a hatred toward the District of Columbia. Why I did not know. I had received information regarding this District by way of newspapers and otherwise that led me to believe that there was a great deal of rottenness here, a great deal of fraud and misappropriation of public money. I had made up my mind that that was true, and I have not the slightest doubt now that my conclusions were correct to some extent. While, however, that may be true, I do not desire that my hatred shall extend to the entire body of the citizens of the District. Let our enmity rest upon those who have committed the frauds. While there may be a hundred or more men in the District of Columbia who have done public wrong, who have appropriated to their own use money that belonged to the people, there are perhaps forty thousand men and tax-payers here who are entirely innocent.

The representatives of those 40,000 innocent men, not of the one hundred men who have committed these frauds, came to our committee and said: "How much money do you want the District to raise?" We replied that we thought from $1,700,000 to $2,000,000 would be required of the District. They said to us: "You shall have it; only give us the poor privilege of saying how the citizens of this District shall raise the amount of money you ask." We gave them that privilege. They took weeks, I was going to say months, to prepare a bill. They did prepare one, and submitted it to the entire District through the papers and in other ways, and nine-tenths of the entire population of this District, I believe, have expressed themselves entirely satisfied with the provisions of that bill, which is the one the majority of the committee now present to this House; and unless the substitute can be perfected in many of its provisions I hope it may not be adopted, but that the bill presented by the chairman may be passed.

Now, why should Congress interfere and say that the people who are to pay this money shall not pay it in their own way? I say we should give the people of this District the right of designating the manner in which they shall raise these taxes and upon what kind of property they shall be assessed.

If the House shall prefer the bill of the minority on account of the manner in which it reaches personal property, I certainly shall concur, only hoping it may be perfected before it shall become a law.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will now yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] for a personal explanation. After which I will call the previous question upon the pending bill and the substitute.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, with the leave of the House so kindly granted, I shall proceed to submit certain facts and correct certain errors personal to myself. The dates of the correspondence embraced in my statement will show that it was impossible for me to make it earlier. I shall be as brief as the circumstances will permit. For some months past a charge against me has been circulating in private and was recently made public—designing to show that I had in some indirect manner received the large sum of $64,000 from the Union Pacific Railroad Company in 1871—for what services or for what purpose has never been stated. The alleged proof of this serious accusation was based, according to the original story, upon the authority of E. H. Rollins, treasurer of the Union Pacific Company, who it was averred had full knowledge that I got the money, and also upon the authority of Morton, Bliss & Co., bankers of New York, through whom the draft for $64,000 was said to have been negotiated for my benefit as they confidentially knew. Hearing of this charge some weeks in advance of its publication, I procured the following statements from the two principal witnesses who were quoted as having such definite knowledge against me:

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
Boston, March 31, 1876.

DEAR SIR: In response to your inquiry, I beg leave to state that I have been treasurer of the Union Pacific Railroad Company since April 8, 1871, and have necessarily known of all disbursements made since that date. During that entire period, up to the present time, I am sure that no money has been paid in any way or to any person by the company in which you were interested in any manner whatever.

I make this statement in justice to the company, to you, and to myself.

Very respectfully yours,

E. H. ROLLINS.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE.

NEW YORK, April 6, 1876.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry we beg to say that no draft, note, or check, or other evidence of value has ever passed through our books in which you were known or supposed to have any interest of any kind, direct or indirect.

We remain, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

MORTON, BLISS & CO.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Washington, D. C.

Some persons on reading the letter of Morton, Bliss & Co. said that its denial seemed to be confined to any payment that had passed through their "books," whereas they might have paid a draft in which I was interested and yet no entry of it made on their "books." On this criticism being made known to the firm, they at once addressed me the following letter:

NEW YORK, April 13, 1876.

DEAR SIR: It has been suggested to us that our letter of the 6th instant was not sufficiently inclusive or exclusive. In that letter we stated "that no draft, note, or check, or other evidence of value has ever passed through our books in which you were known or supposed to have any interest, direct or indirect." It may be proper for us to add that nothing has been paid by us, in any form or at any time, to any person or any corporation, in which you were known, believed, or supposed to have any interest whatever.

We remain, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

MORTON, BLISS & CO.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE,
Washington, D. C.

The two witnesses quoted for the original charge having thus effectually disposed of it, the charge itself re-appeared in another form to this effect, namely: That a certain draft was negotiated at the house of Morton, Bliss & Co., in 1871, through Thomas A. Scott, then president of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, for the sum of $64,000, and that $75,000 of the bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company were pledged as collateral; that the Union Pacific Company paid the draft and took up the collateral; that the cash proceeds of it went to me, and that I had furnished, or sold, or in some way conveyed or transferred to Thomas A. Scott these Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds which had been used as collateral; that the bonds in reality had belonged to me or some friend or constituent of mine for whom I was acting. I endeavor to state the charge in its boldest form and in all its phases.

I desire here and now to declare that all and every part of this story that connects my name with it is absolutely untrue, without one particle of foundation in fact and without a tittle of evidence to substantiate it. I never had any transaction of any kind with Thomas A. Scott concerning bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Road or the bonds of any other railroad, or any business in any way connected with railroads, directly or indirectly, immediately or remotely. I never had any business transaction whatever with the Union Pacific Railroad Company or any of its officers or agents or representatives and never in any manner received from that company, directly or indirectly, a single dollar in money, or stocks, or bonds, or any other form of value. And as to the particular transaction referred to, I never so much as heard of it until nearly two years after its alleged occurrence, when it was talked of at the time of the Credit Mobilier investigation in 1873. But, while my denial ought to be conclusive, I should greatly regret to be compelled to leave the matter there. I am fortunately able to sustain my own declaration by the most conclusive evidence that the case admits of or that human testimony can supply. If any person or persons know the truth or falsity of these charges it must be the officers of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. I accordingly addressed a note to the president of that company, a gentleman who has been a director of the company from its organization I believe, and who has a more thorough acquaintance with its business transactions probably than any other man. The correspondence which I here submit will explain itself and leaves nothing to be said. I will read the letters in their proper order. They need no comment:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13, 1876.

DEAR SIR: You have doubtless observed the scandal now in circulation in regard to my having been interested in certain bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith road, alleged to have been purchased by your company in 1871.

It is due to me, I think, that some statement in regard to the subject should be made by yourself as the official head of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Very respectfully,

J. G. BLAINE.

SIDNEY DILLON, Esq.,
President Union Pacific Railroad Company.

OFFICE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
New York, April 15, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 13th instant, and in reply desire to say that I have this day written Colonel Thomas A. Scott, who was president of the Union Pacific Railroad Company at the time of the transaction referred to, a letter of which I send a copy herewith. On receipt of his reply I will inclose it to you.

Very respectfully,

SIDNEY DILLON, President.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
New York, April 15, 1876.

DEAR SIR: The press of the country are making allegations that certain bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad, purchased by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in 1871, were obtained from Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, of Maine, or that the avails in some form went to his benefit, and that the knowledge of these facts rests with the officers of the company and with yourself.

These statements are injurious both to Mr. BLAINE and to the Union Pacific Railroad Company. There were never any facts to warrant them, and I think that a statement to the public is due both from you and myself. I desire, as president of the company, to repel any such inference in the most emphatic manner, and would be glad to hear from you on the subject.

Very respectfully,

SIDNEY DILLON, President.

Colonel THOMAS A. SCOTT,
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

OFFICE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY,
New York, April 22, 1876.

DEAR SIR: As I advised you some days ago, I wrote Colonel Thomas A. Scott, and beg leave to inclose you his reply.

I desire further to say that I was a director of the company and a member of the executive committee in 1871, and to add my testimony to that of Colonel Scott's in verification of all that he has stated in the enclosed letter.

Truly yours,

SIDNEY DILLON, President.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Washington, D. C.

PHILADELPHIA, April 21, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter, under date New York, April 15, 1876, stating that the press of the country are making allegations that certain bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad purchased by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in 1871 were obtained from Hon. J. G. BLAINE, of Maine, or that the avails in some form went to his benefit; that there never were any facts to warrant them; that it is your desire as president of the company to repel any such inference in the most emphatic manner; and asking me to make a statement in regard to the matter.

In reply, I beg leave to say that, much as I dislike the idea of entering into any of the controversies that are before the public in these days of scandal, from which but few men in public life seem to be exempt, I feel it my duty to state:

That the Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds purchased by the Union Pacific Railroad Company in 1871 were not purchased or received from Mr. BLAINE, directly or indirectly, and that of the money paid by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or of the avails of said bonds, not one dollar went to Mr. BLAINE, or to any person for him, or for his benefit in any form.

All statements to the effect that Mr. BLAINE ever had any transaction with me directly or indirectly involving money or valuables of any kind, are absolutely without foundation in fact.

I take pleasure in making this statement to you, and you may use it in any manner you deem best for the interest of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS A. SCOTT.

SIDNEY DILLON, Esq.,
President Union Pacific Railroad Company, New York.

And this closes the testimony I have wished to offer.

Several newspapers—some of them, doubtless, from friendly motives—have urged that I should ask for a committee to investigate these charges. I might have done that and awaited the delay and slow progress that inevitably attend all congressional investigations. Three and a half years ago I moved a committee to investigate the Credit Mobilier charges, and though every particle of proof, in complete exculpation of myself, was before the committee in thirty-six hours after its first meeting, I was compelled to wait for more than two months, indeed seventy full days, before I got a public report exonerating and vindicating me from the charges. If I had asked for a committee to investigate the pending matter, I should have been compelled to wait its necessarily slow action with the charge all the while hanging over me, undenied and unanswered; and, pending the proceedings of an investigation which I had myself asked, propriety would have forbidden my collecting and publishing the decisive proofs which I have now submitted. For these reasons I have deemed that the shortest and most expeditious mode of vindication was the one which I was bound to choose by every consideration of myself personally and of my official relations. I have not omitted the testimony of a single material witness to the transaction on which the accusation against me is based, and unless I misapprehend the scope and force of the testimony it leaves no charge against me. In any and all events, I am ready to submit the whole matter to the candid judgment of the House and the country, and, if the House thinks the matter should be further inquired into, I beg to express my entire readiness to give all the assistance in my power to make the investigation as thorough, as rigid, and as impartial as possible.

To give a seeming corroboration or foundation to the story which I have disproved, the absurd rumor has lately appeared in certain newspapers that I was the owner of from $150,000 to $250,000 of the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad bonds, which I received without consideration, and that it was from these bonds that Thomas A. Scott received his $75,000. The statement is gratuitously and utterly false. No responsible author appears anywhere for this unfounded story, but in dismissing it I desire to make the following explicit statement: More than twenty-three years ago, in the closing days of Mr. Fillmore's administration, the Government granted to the State of Arkansas some public lands within its own limits to be applied to the construction of railroads in that State. The Legislature of Arkansas incorporated the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad Company the same year, and gave to the company a portion of the lands it had received from the General Government to aid in the construction of the road—about five thousand acres to the mile, I think. But the company were unable to raise any money for the enterprise, though they made the most strenuous efforts, and when the war broke out in 1861—eight years after the State had given the lands to the company—not a mile of the road was built. Of course nothing was done during the war. After the war all the grants of land previously made to the Southern States were renewed in gross in the session of 1865–'66. The Little Rock and Fort Smith company again received a grant from the State and again tried to raise money to build their road; but 1865, 1866, and 1867 passed without their getting a dollar. Finally toward the close of 1868 a company of Boston gentlemen, representing considerable capital, undertook its construction. In raising the requisite means they placed the bonds of the road on the New England market in the summer of 1869, offering them on terms which seemed very favorable to the purchaser, and offering them at a time when investments of this kind were fatally popular. In common with hundreds of other people in New England and other parts of the country, I bought some of these bonds—not a very large amount—paying for them at precisely the same rate that others paid. I never heard and do not believe that the Little Rock company—which I know is controlled by highly honorable men—ever parted with a bond to any person except at the regular price fixed for their sale. The enterprise, though apparently very promising, proved unsuccessful, as so many similar projects did about the same time. I lost a considerable sum of money (over $20,000) by my investment, and I presume New England made a net loss of $2,000,000 in completing that road for Arkansas, as she has lost over one hundred millions by similar ventures West and South within the last twelve years. In addition to my investment in the bonds, I united with others in raising some money for the company when it met its first financial troubles. Proceedings are now pending in the United States circuit court in Arkansas, to which I am a party of record, for the re-imbursement of the money so advanced. All the bonds which I ever purchased I continued to hold; and when the company was re-organized, in 1874, I exchanged them for stock and bonds in the new concern, which I still own. My whole connection with the road has been open as the day. If there had been anything to conceal about it I should never have touched it. Wherever concealment is desirable avoidance is advisable, and I do not know any better test to apply to the honor and fairness of a business transaction.

As to the question of propriety involved in a member of Congress holding an investment of this kind, it must be remembered that the lands were granted to the State of Arkansas, and not to the railroad company, and that the company derived its life, franchise, and value wholly from the State. And to the State the company is amenable and answerable, and not in any sense to Congress. Since I purchased the bonds but one act of Congress has passed in any way touching the subject, and that was merely to rectify a previous mistake in legislation. I take it when any security from Government bonds to town scrip is offered at public sale to any one who can pay for it, every American citizen is free to buy. If you exclude a Representative from the investment on the ground that in some secondary or remote way the legislation of Congress has affected or may affect the value of the article, then you exclude every man on this floor, not only from holding a Government bond or a share in a national bank, but also from owning a flock of sheep, or a field of hemp, or a tobacco plantation, or a cotton-mill, or an iron-furnace; for all these interests are vitally affected by the tariff legislation on which we vote at every session and of which an important measure is even now pending in the Committee of the Whole. In the seven intervening years since the Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds were placed on the market, I know few investments that have not been more affected by the legislation of Congress. But this case does not require to be shielded by any such comparisons or citations, for I repeat that the Little Rock road derived all it had from the State of Arkansas, and not from Congress. It was in the discretion of Congress to give or withhold from the State, but it was solely in the discretion of the State to give or withhold from the Little Rock Railroad Company.

When the Little Rock road fell into the financial troubles of which I have spoken, there were certain interests connected with it that were under peculiarly pressing embarrassment and that needed relief. There had been at different times very considerable talk about inducing the Atlantic and Pacific road—which on its southern branch was to be a connecting line east and west with the Little Rock and Fort Smith, and the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road, which would be a connecting line both North and South at the point of junction—to aid the Little Rock and Fort Smith enterprise by taking some of its securities, a practice very common among connecting roads. To both these roads the completion of the Little Rock road was of very great importance. Accordingly, in the spring of 1871, when only one coupon had been passed by the Little Rock company on one series of its bonds and none passed on the other, and when there was sanguine hope of getting the enterprise on its feet again, the Atlantic and Pacific Company took one hundred thousand of its bonds and one hundred thousand of its stock for the gross sum of $79,000; and the Missouri, Kansas and Texas, if I remember correctly, took half the amount at the same rate. This was done not for the corporation itself, but for an interest largely engaged in the construction of the road. With the circumstances attending the negotiation with the Atlantic and Pacific road I was entirely familiar and with several of its officers I have long been well acquainted. I also knew all about the negotiation with the Missouri, Kansas and Texas road, though I never to my knowledge saw any of its officers and never had an interview with any of them on any subject. But in the case of both roads, I desire to say that the bonds sold to them did not belong to me, nor did I have one dollar's pecuniary interest in the whole transaction with either company.

The infamous insinuation made in certain quarters that I engaged to use my influence in Congress for the Atlantic and Pacific road and also for the Missouri, Kansas and Texas in consideration of their purchasing these securities hardly merits notice. The officers and directors of both companies, so far as I have known the one and heard of the other, are high-minded, honorable gentlemen, and they would have justly spurned me from their presence had I been willing to submit an offer so dishonorable and mutually degrading. I had no pecuniary stake in the negotiation and I should have loved infamy for infamy's sake, had I bartered my personal and official honor in the transaction. And I am sure that every man connected with either company would repel the dishonoring suggestion as warmly as I do myself. The whole affair had no more connection with congressional legislation than any one of the ten thousand similar transactions that are constantly occurring in the business world.

Of a like character with the insinuation just answered is that which, in an irresponsible and anonymous way, attempts to connect the ownership of Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds with the legislation of last winter respecting the State government of Arkansas. There are some accusations which it is difficult to repel with sufficient force because of their mixture of absurdity, depravity, and falsehood. I never heard this stupid slander until within a few days, and I venture to say there is not a responsible man in the country of the slightest sense who can discern the remotest connection between the two things that are alleged to have an intimate and infamous relation.

Let me now, Mr. Speaker, briefly summarize what I have presented:

First, that the story of my receiving $64,000 or any other sum of money or other thing of value from the Union Pacific Railroad Company, directly or indirectly, or in any form, for myself or for another, is absolutely disproved by the most conclusive testimony.

Second, that no bond of mine was ever sold to the Atlantic and Pacific or the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Company, and that not a single dollar of money from either of those companies ever went to my profit or benefit.

Third, that instead of receiving bonds of the Little Rock and Fort Smith road as a gratuity I never had one except at the regular market price, and that instead of making a large fortune out of that company I have incurred a severe pecuniary loss from my investment in its securities which I still retain. And out of such affairs as this grows the popular gossip of large fortunes amassed in Congress!

I can hardly expect, Mr. Speaker, that any statement from me will stop the work of those who have so industriously circulated these calumnies. For months past the effort has been energetic and continous to spread these stories in private circles. Emissaries of slander have visited the editorial rooms of leading Republican papers from Boston to Omaha, and whispered of revelations to come that were too terrible even to be spoken in loud tones. And at last the revelations have been made!

I am now, Mr. Speaker, in the fourteenth year of a not inactive service in this Hall. I have taken and have given blows. I have, no doubt, said many things in the heat of debate which I would now gladly recall. I have, no doubt, given votes which in fuller light I would gladly change. But I have never done anything in my public career for which I could be put to the faintest blush in any presence, or for which I cannot answer to my constituents, my conscience, and the great Searcher of hearts.

TAXATION IN THE DISTRICT.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUCKNER. I now call the previous question upon the bill and pending substitute.

Mr. WALLING. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] to allow further debate upon this bill?

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not propose to allow any further debate upon this bill by anybody.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was upon the substitute proposed by Mr. NEAL.

The substitute, which had not been read, was as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the support of the government of the District of Columbia there shall be levied, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for each and every year thereafter, upon all property of whatsoever kind, whether real or personal, in said District; upon all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies, or otherwise, of persons residing therein; and upon the property of all corporations, banks, or banking companies, now existing or hereafter created therein, excepting only such property as is hereinafter expressly exempted, a tax of $1.50 on each $100 of the assessed value of the same within the city of Washington; of $1 on each $100 of the assessed value of the same within the city of Georgetown; and of seventy-five cents on each $100 of the assessed value of the same in that part of said District outside of said cities of Washington and Georgetown.

SEC. 2. That the property exempt from taxation under this act shall be the following, and no other:

First. Property, real or personal, belonging to the United States or the District of Columbia.

Second. Bonds or other securities of the United States Government, and such other property as is now exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States.

Third. The personal property of any description of any individual residing in said District, and of which such individual is the actual owner, not exceeding $250 in value.

Fourth. Churches, houses for reformation of offenders, alms-houses, buildings devoted to purely public charity or the arts, houses to improve the condition of seamen or soldiers, free public-library buildings, cemeteries, and colleges and institutions of learning duly incorporated under acts of Congress.

Fifth. Land or grounds appurtenant to any such church, house, or building, so far as reasonably needed and actually used for the convenient enjoyment of any such church, house, or building for its legitimate purpose; but when all or any portion of any such building, house, or grounds, or cemetery, or church so in terms excepted is used to secure a rent or income, or for any business purpose, such portion of the same shall be proportionately assessed and taxed, and the portion so taxable shall be indicated in the returns and assessments made by the assessors as herein provided.

SEC. 3. That the amount of any valid and bona fide debt or debts which any person shall individually and absolutely owe shall be deducted from the assessed value of the credits of any such persons, but not otherwise, upon the same being established by the affidavit of such person claiming deductions as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 4. That the amount collected under the provisions of this act shall be distributed for the purposes required under the various acts in force in the District of Columbia, upon a just and fair apportionment, to be made by the commissioners of the District of Columbia or their successors in office: Provided, That before any of said funds shall be expended such apportionment shall be established by said commissioners and published at least six times in a weekly newspaper, published and having a general circulation in the District of Columbia; and the said apportionment shall stand as the law for the distribution of the funds herein mentioned: Provided, further, That deficiencies in any of said funds enumerated in said apportionment may be supplied from any surplus in either of said funds so apportioned; but, unless a surplus exists, the revenues belonging to one fund shall not be applied to the purposes of any other fund.

SEC. 5. That one-half of the tax levied by this act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, shall become due and payable on the 1st day of November, 1876, and the other one-half of said tax shall become due and payable on the 1st day of May, 1877; and the taxes for each succeeding year thereafter shall become due and payable, one-half on the 1st day of November and the other one-half on the 1st day of May, respectively; and in every case where the tax levied by this act shall be paid in installments as herein authorized, each of such payments shall be deemed to have been made on account of the several funds and for the different purposes indicated in the fourth section of this act; and the pro rata proportion of payment so made shall be carried to the credit of the respective funds according to such apportionment. The lien of the District government, for the taxes levied under this act, shall attach to all real property subject to such taxes on the 1st day of June annually, and shall continue until such taxes, with any penalty that shall accrue thereon, shall be paid.

SEC. 6. That if one-half of the tax herein levied shall not be paid on or before the 1st day of November of each year, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent; and there shall be added, to be collected with such taxes, a penalty of 2 per cent. upon the amount thereof on the 1st day of each succeeding month until payment of said installment and penalty. And if said installment shall not be paid on or before the 1st day of May next thereafter, together with one-half of said original tax due on or before said 1st day of May, a like penalty shall be added on said last one-half of said tax, and the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax, to be dealt with and collected in the manner prescribed by law.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the collector for said District as soon as practicable after the 1st day of July, 1877, and at the same time in each succeeding year thereafter, to prepare a complete list for publication of all the real property in said District which shall be then in arrears for taxes; and, as soon as possible after completing the said list, he shall publish the same, with the notice that, if the taxes due, together with the penalty and costs that may have accrued thereon, shall not be paid prior to the day named for sale, the property will be sold at the south front of the court-house in the city of Washington, on the second Monday of October, 1877, and on the same day in each succeeding year thereafter. Such publication to be made in the form of a pamphlet for the use of the tax-payers, to be issued not less than three weeks next prior to said day of sale; and the printing of the same shall be done at the Government Printing Office at the net cost thereof; the number of copies shall not exceed 10,000; and said pamphlets shall be kept at the office of the collector of said District for distribution among the said tax-payers: Provided, That all real property in said District which may have to be advertised for sale because of non-payment of taxes for the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1876, shall also be advertised in pamphlet form, as in this section is directed for the fiscal year ending June 30, A. D. 1877.

SEC. 8. That on the second Monday of October, 1877, and in each year thereafter, the collector shall proceed to sell all real property upon which taxes remain unpaid, and shall continue to sell the same every secular day until all such property shall have been brought to auction. Immediately at the close of the sale, upon payment of the purchase-money, he shall issue to the purchaser a certificate of sale; and if the property shall not be redeemed by the owner thereof within two years from the date of sale, by payment to the collector of said District, for the use of the legal holder of the certificate, the amount for which it was sold at such sale, and 12 per cent. per annum thereon, a deed therefor shall be given by the commissioners of the District or their successors in office to the legal holder of such certificate, which deed shall be admitted and held to be a good and perfect title in fee-simple to any property bought at any sale herein authorized: Provided, That no property advertised as aforesaid shall be sold upon any bids not sufficient to meet the amount of tax, penalty, and costs; but in case the highest bid upon any property is not sufficient to meet the taxes, penalty, and costs thereon, or in case there shall be no bid upon such property, said property shall be bid off for the amount thereof by the said commissioners or their successors in office, in the name of and for the District of Columbia as purchaser: And provided also, That minors or other persons under legal disability shall be allowed one year after the removal of such disability to redeem any of their property so sold from the purchaser or purchasers, his, her, or their heirs or assigns, or from the District of Columbia, by payment of the amount of purchase-money paid therefor, together with 10 per cent. per annum interest thereon as aforesaid, and all taxes and assessments that have been paid thereon by the purchaser or his assigns, or which may have accrued to the District of Columbia, between the day of sale and the period of such redemption, with 10 per cent. per annum interest on the amount of such taxes and assessments, and also the value of the improvements which may have been made or erected on such property by the purchaser while the same was in his, her, their, or its possession.

SEC. 9. That the collector of taxes immediately after sale of any property as aforesaid shall file with the comptroller a written report, in which he shall give a statement of the property advertised and the property sold, to whom it was assessed, the taxes due, to whom sold, the amount paid, the date of sale, the cost thereof, and the surplus, if any, and the lands as aforesaid sold to the District. Any surplus remaining after collection of taxes, penalties, and costs on any real estate shall be deposited by the collector of taxes to the credit of the surplus fund, to be paid to the owner or owners, or their legal representatives, in the same manner as other payments made by the District of Columbia.

SEC. 10. That when the installment of one-half of the taxes on personal property so as aforesaid due and payable on or before the 1st day of November, 1876, and of each year thereafter, shall not be paid on or before said date, or when the remaining installment shall not be paid on or before the 1st day of May, 1877, then, and in either such event, the collector of taxes shall distrain sufficient goods and chattels found within said District, and belonging to the person or persons, firm, association, or corporation charged with such tax, to pay the taxes remaining due under the provisions of this law from such person or persons, firm, association, or corporation, together with the penalty thereon and the costs that may accrue; and thereupon said collector shall immediately proceed to advertise the same by public notices posted in front of the court-house and in the office of said collector, and by advertisement three times for one week in some daily newspaper published in said District, as hereinafter provided, stating the time when and place where such property shall be sold, the last publication to be at least six days before the day of sale; and if the taxes and penalty thereon for which such property shall have been distrained and the costs and expense which shall have accrued thereon shall not be paid before the day fixed for such sale, which shall be not less than ten days after the taking of such property, the collector shall proceed to sell, at public auction, in front of the court-house, to the highest bidder, such property, or so much thereof as may be sufficient to pay said taxes, penalty, and accrued costs and expense of such distraint and sale. The collector of taxes shall be allowed for making such distress and sale the same fees as are now allowed by law to the marshal of said District for making levy and sale of property under execution. And said collector shall report in detail every such distress and sale, in writing, to the commissioners of said District or their successors in office; and his accounts in respect of every such distress or sale shall forthwith be submitted by him to the accounting officers of the District and audited by them. Any surplus resulting from such sale shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States for the use of said District, and, upon being claimed by the owner or owners of the goods and chattels, shall be paid to him or them.

SEC. 11. That the commissioners of said District or their successors in office shall cause to be prepared a printed blank schedule or form, for statement of personal property, including moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies, or otherwise, subject to taxation under this act, together with deductions authorized to be allowed, to which shall be appended an affidavit setting forth that the foregoing presents a full and true statement of all the personal property, moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies, or otherwise, subject to taxation, together with the amount of indebtedness on account of which deductions are claimed; and the assessors provided for by this act shall deliver to each person required to list such property for taxation, or leave at the residence, office, or usual place of business of such person, one of said blanks; and the person to whom said blank schedule or form is delivered, or for whom it shall be left, shall fill up the same, and make and sign the affidavit to the truth thereof as aforesaid before the assessor, who is hereby authorized to administer such oath without charge; and thereupon said assessor shall assess such property and enter it in a column upon said blank to be provided for that purpose, and the amount thus ascertained, after making the deductions provided for in this act, shall be entered upon the books for taxation. If said person shall require further time to fill up said schedule or blank, it shall be the duty of the assessor to grant it, and, in such case, the assessor shall call for the same, administer the oath, and discharge the other duties in regard thereto herein enjoined upon him at a day to be named by him, not later than ten days from such time; but no person shall be required to include in the statement required by this section any share or portion of the capital stock or property of any company or corporation which is required to return its capital and property for taxation in this District.

SEC. 12. That every person of full age and sound mind not a married woman shall list the real property of which he is the owner, situate in this District, the personal property of which he is the owner, and all moneys in his possession; and he shall also list all moneys invested, loaned, or otherwise controlled by him, as the agent or attorney, or on account of any other person or persons, company or corporation whatsoever, and all moneys deposited subject to his order, check, or draft, and credits due from or owing by any person or persons, company or corporation, whether in or out of this District. The property of every ward shall be listed by his guardian; of every minor child, idiot, or lunatic having no guardian, by his father if living, if not, by his mother if living; if neither father nor mother be living, by the person having such property in charge; of every wife, by her husband, if of sound mind, if not, by herself; of every person for whose benefit property is held in trust, by the trustee; of every estate of a deceased person by the executor or administrator; of every firm, company, or corporation, by the president or principal accounting officer, partner, or agent thereof; and of corporations whose assets are in the hands of receivers, by such receivers. Every person required to list property on behalf of others by this act shall list it separately from his own, specifying in each case the name of the person, estate, company, or corporation to whom it belongs.

SEC. 13. That the commissioners of this District or their successors in office shall divide the District into nine subdistricts as nearly equal as may be practicable in extent and population, and composed of contiguous territory, and shall appoint a competent person to be assessor in each of said subdistricts. Said assessor must be a resident of the subdistrict for which he is appointed and a citizen and tax-payer of the District. He shall hold office for the term of one year, and shall receive $5 for each and every day he may be actually engaged in the discharge of the duties of his office. Before entering upon the duties of his office each assessor shall execute and file with the commissioners of the District or their successors in office a bond, acceptable to them, in the penal sum of $5,000, conditioned that he will diligently, faithfully, and impartially perform all and singular the duties enjoined on him by this act; and he shall also take and subscribe on said bond an oath that he will to the best of his judgment, skill, and ability, diligently, faithfully, and impartially discharge the duties of his said office.

SEC. 14. That each assessor shall, before the 1st day of July, A. D. 1876, and between the 1st day of April and the 1st day of June of each and every year thereafter, assess the value of all and every species of property in his subdistrict liable to taxation under this act, and shall state the real and personal property separately in books to be kept in a systematic manner. In assessing the value of such property he shall be governed by the following rules: Real property shall be valued at its true cash value in money; personal property of every description, at the usual selling price of similar property at the time of assessing, at the place where it may be, and if there be no usual selling price, then at such price as it is believed could be obtained therefor in money, at such time and place; investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies, or otherwise, at their true value in money; money, whether in possession or on deposit, at the full amount thereof; and credits of all kinds, at whatever sum they may be considered by the person listing them to be worth in money. In estimating the value of the personal property appertaining to the business of any person as a merchant or manufacturer, the average value of all such articles of personal property as he shall have had from time to time in his possession or under his control during the year immediately preceding the time of such assessment, or so much of said year as he may have been engaged in business, shall be taken as the criterion, and the average shall be made up by taking the amount in value on hand in each month of said year, or such part thereof as such person may have been engaged in business, adding together such amounts and dividing the aggregate amount thereof by twelve, or the number of months such person may have been engaged in business during said year. And the value of all moneys, notes, bills of exchange, bonds, stocks, or other property appertaining to the business of any bank, banker, broker, or stock-jobber, shall be ascertained in the same manner. Said assessors shall, between the 1st and 20th day of June, 1876, of which notice shall be given by said assessors, hold daily sessions for the purpose of equalizing the assessments theretofore made by them, and for the purpose of hearing and determining any and all appeals from the valuation theretofore made by them. Each assessor shall, at their meetings as aforesaid, make full and detailed reports of his acts as such assessor. And during this period they shall have power to revise assessments theretofore made by them, or any of them, by either justly increasing or diminishing any particular assessment. Upon the assessment so made and finally revised, the tax herein provided for shall be levied, and the collector of taxes shall be in readiness to receive payment of the same on and after the 1st day of November, 1876.

SEC. 15. That if any person shall fail or refuse to make out the statement of his property as required by section 12 of this act, the assessor shall, from the best information he can obtain, make an assessment against such person, to which he shall add 50 per cent. thereof, and the person so failing or refusing shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, to which may be added imprisonment not exceeding thirty days. If any person shall make a false affidavit touching the matters provided for in said twelfth section, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and upon conviction thereof shall be subject to the penalties for that offense now provided for by law. And if any person shall conceal or in any manner dispose of, or by any contrivance remove out of this District, any of the personal property, moneys, credits, or other things herein declared to be subject to taxation, for the purpose of evading, hindering, or postponing the operation or effect of this act, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned in the jail of this District for a term not exceeding two years, or both, at the discretion of the court, and pay the costs of prosecution.

SEC. 16. That if any commissioner of this District, or any assessor, collector, or other officer, charged with the performance or execution of any of the duties enjoined upon them by this act, or any other act or acts necessary to its efficient enforcement in the assessment and collection of the taxes hereby levied, shall fail, neglect, or refuse, from any cause whatever, to properly discharge such duties so enjoined upon them, such failure, neglect, or refusal shall be deemed and adjudged to be a misdemeanor, and such commissioner, assessor, collector, or other officer shall, upon conviction thereof, be imprisoned in the jail of this District for a term not exceeding two years, or be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000, or both, at the discretion of the court, and shall, in addition thereto, be responsible to said District for the amount of all taxes that shall be lost to it by reason of such failure, neglect, or refusal, and shall be sued therefor on his official bond.

SEC. 17. That, for the purposes of this act, the word person shall incude firms, corporations, and companies. Words of one number shall signify and include words of both numbers, respectively. The word agent shall signify and include every person acting for another. Every word importing masculine gender may extend and be applied to females as well as males. The term "oath" shall be held to mean oath or affirmation.

SEC. 18. That this act shall continue in force from year to year, unless repealed by act of Congress; and the successors in office to the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have the same powers as are given to said commissioners by this act.

SEC. 19. That the twenty-third section of the act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia entitled "An act imposing a license on trades, business, and professions practiced or carried on in the District of Columbia," approved August 23, 1871, and clauses 20, 28, and 35 of the twenty-first section of said act, and clauses 16 and 22 of said twenty-first section of said act as amended by the act amendatory thereof, approved June 20, 1872, and all other laws or acts or parts thereof inconsistent herewith, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The question was taken upon agreeing to the substitute; and upon a division there were—ayes 85, noes 59.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. O'BRIEN called for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the substitute.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, there being—ayes 21, noes 160.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for tellers on the adoption of the substitute.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUCKNER and Mr. NEAL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 48.

So the substitute was adopted.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENDEE. Now that the House has adopted the substitute, I desire to say that I had no particular preference as between the two measures, provided they were equally perfect in their provisions. Now that the substitute is adopted, I propose to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] that the bill, as amended, be read and submitted to such amendments as members of the committee may desire to offer in order to perfect the measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX.) The Chair would say that the House is now acting under the previous question. The main question has been ordered.

Mr. FORT. This bill ought to be considered by sections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent for consideration in that mode and there is no objection, it will be done.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I object.

Mr. HENDEE. I desire to say that the bill has not yet been read at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By order of the House the bill was considered without being read in full.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think it highly proper that this bill should now be considered by the Committee for the District of Columbia. It is a matter of importance to the people of this District and should receive more consideration than it can in the House under the present circumstances. For that reason I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee for the District of Columbia for further consideration.

Mr. NEAL. It strikes me that the gentleman's motion is hardly in order at this time, inasmuch as the previous question is operating.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is operating. The main question has been ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise to a question of order, whether the motion to recommit the bill is not in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not after the main question has been ordered.

Mr. FORT. I would suggest that by unanimous consent the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BUCKNER. I hope that will not be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HENDEE. Inasmuch as this bill has never been read in the House at all, it strikes me that it should now be read in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can only enforce the order of the House. The main question has been ordered.

Mr. HENDEE. Then I make the point that the bill has not been engrossed.

Mr. NEAL. By unanimous consent, the bill might on its third reading be read in full. I would much prefer that course, so that members may understand it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask unanimous consent—and I do so because of the importance of this matter—that this bill be recommitted to the Committee for the District of Columbia in order that some of its provisions may be perfected. I desire to say that there has been no legislation before the House at this session of more importance to the people of this District; there has been none of one-tenth the importance to them that this bill is. Inasmuch as the substitute has not been considered by the committee, inasmuch as it has not been even read to the House, I desire that the bill as amended be recommitted, so that some of its provisions may be perfected. I make this proposition, believing it to be for the interest of the people that the measure should receive such consideration, as some of the sections have only been brought to the attention of the House this afternoon and have never been considered by the committee.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to say——

Mr. NEAL. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order, unless the gentleman from Ohio listens to these requests for unanimous consent, is the third reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. I only wish to say that I hope the bill will not be recommitted. Let it be passed in its present form. Though there are many objections to it, it is better to have this bill than no bill at all.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. I desire the Chair to state what is the pending question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was about to direct the third reading of the engrossed bill. The substitute of the gentleman from Ohio was adopted in lieu of the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether there is any rule of the House, any special order made, in reference to this bill which prevents its reading?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was an order made that the original bill should not be read. The gentleman from Missouri suggested the bill should not be read, but objection was made. After the bill had been read for a short time, objection was withdrawn and the bill was not read.

Mr. HENDEE. That was the first reading of the bill for information. Now, I suppose it is competent when the bill comes up for action at an entirely different stage it is in order to have it read. This substitute never has been read, nor has there been any motion in regard to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. NEAL. I am willing to do so.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask for the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment to introduce a resolution to move that the rules be suspended and the resolution be put on its passage at this time.

Mr. RUSK. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I withdraw my motion to adjourn.

Mr. RUSK. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of business is the reading of the engrossed bill.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. I move that the House adjourn.

The house divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 69.

Mr. NEAL demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina, and Mr. NEAL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 75.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Also, a paper relating to a bill for the relief of J. O. Robinson, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WADDELL: The petition of manufacturers and dealers in distilled spirits in Wilmington, North Carolina, for the definition of the powers and duties of officers of internal revenue and to provide for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WARREN: The petition of Clara L. Attleton, for an extension of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS: Two petitions of citizens of Michigan and soldiers in the late war, for the equalization of bounties, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the State board of health of Michigan, in favor of a permanent organization of the United States Signal Service and enlargement of its powers, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. WILLIS: The petition of Samuel Boardman, Arnold, Constable & Co., and several hundred others, lawyers and merchants, for the passage of the bill authorizing notaries public in certain cases to administer and certify oaths, affirmations, and acknowledgments, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of citizens of New York, for a uniform coinage system, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of Elizabeth Toof, for a reconsideration of her claim, disallowed by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, without having indorsed thereon the name of any member of the House, and referred as stated:

Memorial of Thomas H. Atkinson, of North Carolina, for relief, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Papers relating to the petition of Bridget Collins, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The petition of citizens of Bloomingdale, Pennsylvania, that every soldier and sailor who served thirty days in the United States Navy or United States Army be granted one hundred and sixty acres of land and $200 in money, to the Committee on Public Lands.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 25, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 2954) concerning corporations engaged in the business of distilling—to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (H. R. No. 2677) to transfer the Office of Indian Affairs from the Interior to the War Department—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (H. R. No. 3192) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbell—to the Committee on Patents.

PRINTING OF PROFESSOR JENNEY'S REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Chair laid before the Senate yesterday a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report upon the Black Hills, and it was referred to the Committee on Printing. I think the order to print was not entered. I move that it be printed, and that the question of additional copies remain for the consideration of the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the order to print? The Chair hears none, and the Senate so orders.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. THURMAN presented a memorial of workingmen of Hamilton County, Ohio, remonstrating against any changes in the present tariff laws; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Cincinnati Board of Trade, remonstrating against any reduction of the salaries of officers in the Patent Office and the diversion of any of the revenues thereof to other purposes, and in favor of those revenues being expended in the proper business of the Patent Office; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented resolutions of the Vessel Owners and Captains' Association of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, in favor of a liberal appropriation for the promotion of the efficiency of the Signal Service and the continuance of the hydrographic branch of the Navy Department; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented a memorial of the officers of the Massachusetts Association of Classical and High-School Teachers, in favor of the passage of a law fixing a date at which the metric system of weights and measures shall become the recognized standard of weights and measures throughout the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ANTHONY presented the petition of Edmund F. Prentiss, late first lieutenant Second Rhode Island Infantry and brevet captain United States Volunteer Infantry, praying that he may be allowed a bounty; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RESERVED GALLERIES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Rules, who were directed by a resolution of the Senate of the 18th instant to inquire and report what further provision, if any, is necessary in order to secure the use of the reserved portions of the galleries to those for whom they are designed, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That during the impeachment trial the gallery set apart for the Diplomatic Corps shall be only and exclusively used by the persons of the several legations and their families, who are entitled to the same.

COMMON UNIT WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution of the Senate of the 17th of January last, proposing a common unit of money and accounts for the United States of America and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, reported it with amendments, so as to make it read as follows:

Whereas the magnitude of the transactions in commerce and the intimate social relations between the people of the United States and of Great Britain and Ireland combine to recommend the importance of uniformity in the gold coins and moneys of account of the respective countries; and whereas, in existing circumstances, a change in the standard of the gold coins of the United States could be introduced without serious inconvenience, and the United States are willing to make such change, to the end of securing such uniformity: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President be requested to propose a convention between the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, having for its object to secure uniformity in the coins and moneys of account of the respective countries on the general basis herein stated, but subject to such modifications as may be agreed upon between the contracting parties.

1. The money of account in each country shall be the dollar, which shall be represented by a coin formed of standard gold, whereof the pure metal shall be nine-tenths parts, and the alloy one-tenth part, which alloy shall be of copper, or of copper and silver, the silver not to exceed one-tenth of the alloy. The weight of the dollar of such standard gold shall be twenty-five grains and one-ninth of a grain troy, and shall contain twenty-two grains and six-tenths of a grain troy in pure gold. Gold coins of two and one-half, five, ten, and twenty dollars, proportioned in weight, may also be issued, of like standard; and the convention shall provide what variations may be allowed from the exact standard of weight and fineness for such gold coins.

2. Subsidiary coins of silver, copper, or alloys of base metal may be issued within each country, of such standard and weight as may be provided by their respective laws, and representing cents or hundredth parts of a dollar and other convenient decimal subdivisions thereof.

3. All accounts, representing transactions to be settled in coin, shall be kept in dollars and cents or fractional parts of a cent. Sterling money shall be converted into dollar money by computing the pound sterling as equivalent to $5, the shilling to twenty-five cents, the sixpence to twelve and one-half cents, the penny to two cents, and the farthing to one-half cent.

4. All such gold coins conformed to standard, within the allowed limits of variation, shall be a legal tender within each country for debts and obligations payable in gold coin, excepting such as may have been incurred within the United States payable in gold coins of a former standard. The coins subsidiary to the dollar shall not be a legal tender beyond the limits of the country within which they are issued.

5. The action of the convention shall take effect when approved by the respective parties thereto and when laws shall have been passed by the respective countries to carry it into effect.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1618) to remove the political disabilities of William L. Maury, of New York, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 26) to remove the political disabilities of Francis T. Nichols, of Louisiana, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Walter H. Jenifer, late first lieutenant Second Cavalry, United States Army, praying for the removal of his political disabilities, reported a bill (S. No. 773) to remove the political disabilities of W. H. Jenifer, late first lieutenant Second Cavalry United States Army; which was read and passed to the second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Samuel Jones, of Virginia, praying for the removal of his political disabilities, reported a bill (S. No. 774) to remove the political disabilities of Samuel Jones, of Virginia; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will say as to all these cases that we have ascertained on diligent examination that these people left the Army and the Navy, respectively, under circumstances that were not specially unusual; that they have petitioned in the regular way, and that their resignations at the Department were accepted.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee if he would have any objection to the present consideration of the bills which he has favorably reported?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is not the slightest objection to their present consideration, except the circumstance that it is a bad plan, and, if there is no special reason, I would rather they should wait until to-morrow.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well.

Mr. ROBERTSON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. No. 15) authorizing the qualified voters of the District of Columbia to vote upon the question whether they desire Congress to establish a government for the District for the regulation of domestic affairs the officers of which shall be chosen by the qualified voters of the District, and for laying the result of the election before Congress for information, reported adversely thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the joint resolution will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to state that I dissent from the views of the committee; and I ask that the joint resolution be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2427) to amend the act entitled "An act entitled 'An act to encourage the growth of timber on western prairies,' approved March 13, 1874," reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 574) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend the act entitled 'An act to encourage the growth of timber on western prairies,' approved March 13, 1874," reported in favor of its indefinite postponement, it being in the same words as the House bill just reported; and the report was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 714) to aid in the construction of a military bridge across the North Platte River, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EATON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introdue a bill (S. No. 775) relating to practice in the circuit and district courts; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 776) to restore William J. Montgomery, late first assistant engineer United States Navy, to the active list of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 777) to incorporate the National Sanitary Abattoir Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 778) to promote education in the city of Washington; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES E. SLAUGHTER.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 761) to remove the political disabilities of James E. Slaughter, of Alabama. The bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. EDMUNDS subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to correct a clerical error in the bill removing the political disabilities of

Mr. Slaughter which passed two or three moments ago. By a clerical error the words "article of" before "amendment" were omitted. I wish to have it read "by the fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this correction? The Chair hears none, and it is made.

JULIA E. SEELEY.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar for unobjected cases.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The bill in reference to the Japanese indemnity fund has been partially considered. The 26th of this month has been set down in the House as the day for the consideration of the bill there. If it is agreeable to the Senate, I should like to have that bill taken up and disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas press his motion?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment. I have been for some days trying to get up a bill for the relief of a postmistress in Massachusetts.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Let this bill be taken up and then the Senator can proceed with his bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill named? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from New Jersey now yields to me to take up a private bill. Three or four bills have passed precisely like it, and it is to relieve a postmistress from embarrassment in settling her accounts. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 485. There is a report printed which gives all the facts.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 485) for the relief of Julia E. Seeley, postmaster at Great Barrington, Massachusetts.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments, in line 3, to strike out "736" and insert "565;" in line 4, to strike out "18" and insert "20" before "cents;" and in lines 6 and 7, after "stamps," to strike out the words "and money;" so as to make the bill read:

That the sum of $565.20 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to re-imburse Julia E. Seeley, postmaster at Great Barrington, Massachusetts, for stamps stolen from the post-office at that place on the night of June 6, 1873.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill called up by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] is now before the Senate. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. I supposed the Senator from New Jersey would not have taken the bill up this morning. As I wish to say something upon it, and am not altogether in a condition to-day to go into it with much zeal, I hope the Senator will consent to postpone it until to-morrow.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senator from Vermont is not well, and it can be understood that the bill shall be taken up to-morrow, I certainly will consent to let it go over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly am willing to have it understood that it shall be taken up to-morrow. My reason for wishing to say something upon the subject—not by any means at length, but to have it thoroughly considered—is, that it involves principles and a practice a good deal wider than their application to the identical question of this $200,000, obtained from the Japanese; and, therefore, we ought to consider well the principle that is involved in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to say that it was my purpose and the purpose also of some other Senators to have addressed the Senate yesterday upon the educational bill, and we gave way to the Senator from Nevada, [Mr. JONES.] We would like therefore to bring up that bill to-morrow.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Japanese fund bill is already before the Senate. I understand that the House propose taking it up (although we have nothing to do with them) on the 26th. I would like, however, that it should be disposed of before then. I hope the Senate will set this matter down for to-morrow, if it is to go over to-day.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from New Jersey withdraws his motion to proceed to the consideration of the Japanese bill, I renew the motion I made that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. WEST. I ask the Senator from Kansas to yield a moment to allow me to call up a bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us dispose of the bill that is up.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope that the bill now pending will be made the special order for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At what hour?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. At one o'clock.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That cannot be done without unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be done by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not press his motion. I believe it has been usual always here to allow Senators to address the Senate whenever they were prepared, after a suitable notice. Notice was given in relation to the subject to which I have referred on last Thursday, and it would be very inconvenient to have it postponed longer than to-morrow.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope that my motion will prevail. I assure the Senator from Vermont that there will be no want of courtesy, and that he will be permitted to make his remarks to the Senate before we take up this bill to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. With that understanding, I have no sort of objection.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the motion of the Senator from New Jersey will prevail. The bill to which he refers has been reported upon six times, if my recollection is right, by six different committees in the Senate and in the House, and always favorably. I do not think it will take long to consider it and determine upon it if it should be taken up; and of course there can be no objection to laying it aside informally to allow the Senator from Vermont to make his remarks.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. With the understanding I have with the Senator from New Jersey, I have no sort of objection, as he has given assurances that the usual courtesy will be extended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the bill now pending be made the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

AUSTIN-TOPOLOVAMPO PACIFIC ROUTE.

Mr. INGALLS. I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar.

Mr. WEST. I ask the Senator to yield to me to call up a bill, as it probably cannot be reached in the time we have to give to the Calendar between this and the conclusion of the morning hour. I move to take up the bill (S. No. 92) to survey the Austin-Topolovampo Pacific route.

Mr. INGALLS. I regret exceedingly to interpose any objection to the desires of the Senator from Louisiana, but I am convinced that the bill which he proposes to take up at the present time cannot pass without some explanation and debate that probably will consume the remainder of the morning hour. There is a very large amount of business on the Calendar reported by the various committees, to which there is no objection, I presume, on the part of any member of the body, and which it is very desirable should be acted upon if the bills are to be passed at this session of Congress. At the rate at which the Calendar is being considered, it will be impossible for us to get through with the formal business of this session with a due regard to the interests of those persons whose bills are now before the Senate reported upon favorably by committees and upon the Calendar. I hope the Senate will see fit to devote the morning hour hereafter to the consideration of unobjected cases upon the Calendar, and allow the bills in which different Senators have an interest to come up as they have their place on the Calendar of business.

Mr. WEST. It is not often that I appeal to the courtesy of the Senate. I have waived my opportunity on several occasions recently in behalf of other Senators who had particular measures that they desired to pass. I have no interest in this measure in any way. It does not concern my section more than it does any other Senators. It is reported by the Committee on Railroads, and as chairman of that committee I now appeal to the Senate to take it up, and I am satisfied that it will not take any explanation of any moment, at least that it will not absorb the attention of the Senate ten minutes. I insist on my motion that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of that bill, and I can give an explanation if it is desired.

Mr. MERRIMON. What bill is it?

Mr. WEST. It is Senate bill No. 92, providing simply for a survey to the coast of Mexico of what is called the Austin-Topolovampo Pacific route. The reason that I am so anxious to get it passed is that the engineers who are to be sent there desire that they shall go at the earliest possible moment before the lapse of the season shall render their operations distressful in the field.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana moves the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 92.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As far as I am at present advised, I do not see any ground for the passage of this bill; but it may be that a majority of the Senate does, and if so, there is great force in what the Senator from Louisiana has said. I hope the Senate will take it up and let it be disposed of.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The Committee on Railroads proposed to amend the bill by striking out after the word "survey," in line 6, the words "after application to, and the granting permission by," and inserting "permission having been obtained from;" and in line 14, by striking out "25,000" and inserting "15,000;" so as to make the bill read:

That the Secretary of War be directed to cause a survey to be made of the most practicable route for a national rail highway from Austin, Texas, to Fort Leaton, on the Rio Grande, and to extend said survey, permission having been obtained from the government of Mexico, to the harbor of Topolovampo, on the Gulf of California, and to report to Congress the most feasible route of railway communication between Austin, Texas, and said harbor of Topolovampo; and that, for the purposes of such survey, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask if there is any report from the committee accompanying the bill? and if not, I should like the Senator in charge to tell us the grounds on which it ought to pass.

Mr. WEST. There is no report. The bill was not introduced by myself, but by the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. HITCHCOCK.] The grounds on which this appropriation is based and the reason why it has been recommended by the committee lie in a report made by the engineers, General Wright, General Warren, and General Abbot, under date of February 22, 1875, to General Humphreys, and also in General Humphreys's report to the Secretary of War indorsing and commending the report made by these engineers. It is more with a view to a reconnaissance for a short line from the southern portion of the Territory of the United States to the Gulf of California. There is also accompanying this report a survey by the Naval Department going to show that there exists in a certain locality in the Gulf of California a harbor of extensive capacity both with respect to area and draught of water; and this appropriation is more for a reconnaissance, because it does not involve an amount sufficient for more. The amount for which the bill originally was offered was $25,000, and it is now reduced to $15,000; so that it does not involve an amount sufficient to make more than a general reconnaissance over that country. It is desired by a large section of the people of this country, and such appropriations have hitherto been made; and it has the recommendation of the highest official authority. I merely report it here in my capacity as chairman of the committee, and ask its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The argument of my friend is not at all satisfactory to me. I see he has a book here, which does not appear to be an official book, but it is evidently a good one, in which I perceive the first entry is this, which conveys new information to me:

> The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the chairman of the Committee on Railroads of the United States Senate, in response to a request of the 9th instant, a copy of report of board of engineers convened by special orders No. 21, Headquarters Corps of Engineers, February 18, 1875, to consider the feasibility of a railroad route from Austin, Texas, to Topolovampo, Mexico, in connection with Senate bill No. 1199.
> WILLIAM W. BELKNAP,
> Secretary of War.

Now I should be glad to ask my friend from Louisiana if there was any authority by any act or resolution of Congress requiring the Board of Engineers of the War Department, or anybody else, to establish themselves as a board to determine the feasibility of a railroad from Texas through Mexico?

Mr. WEST. No, Mr. President, they have not done so. They have not determined the feasibility of the route. That is just what they propose to do by this appropriation and by this authorization. That was an examination by these officers with reference to the practicability of such a route, more with reference perhaps to its being the shortest route to the Pacific Ocean, and they give their opinion and think it desirable to have the route surveyed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President; but my inquiry is where the Secretary of War or this board of officers got any authority to enter upon that particular mission.

Mr. WEST. Well, sir, I presume the Secretary of War is allowed, and officers of the Army are allowed, to indulge their own ideas as to the progress of this country. Now the question is whether we will indorse the report they have made that it is desirable to do so. If we are to confine officers of the Army only to the simple routine of their duty, without allowing them to indulge in some fancy in regard to the progress of the country, I think we should rather limit their sphere of usefulness.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I, for one, do not propose to indulge the Army officers or any other officers in any fancies whatever. So far as they are citizens of the United States they have a right to their opinions, and when off duty they have a right to apply themselves to any work they like; but I deny the right of the Secretary of War or of the Corps of Engineers to enter upon official inquiries into the feasibleness of a railway in the State of Vermont or in the State of Ohio or in the Republic of Mexico, or anywhere else. It is no part of their duty, and they have no right to do it in any other sense than the private sense of a body of gentlemen. But here they undertake to send this manifesto to Congress through a committee of the Senate, pointing out what we are expected to appropriate money for, which they have examined and consider feasible, which has nothing to do with the operations of the Army; and I, for one, want to enter the earliest protest possible against that species of official conduct.

Mr. President, I am not in a physical condition this morning to be of much use to anybody; but I wish simply to say, with the highest respect to my friend from Louisiana, and to everybody else who wants this railroad, that I do not think we ought to be authorized in the present condition of the country to spend $20,000 of money raised by taxation to go into a reconnaissance for the route of a railway from somewhere in the State of Texas to somewhere on the Pacific in the republic of Mexico. I think we had a great deal better save the money. It may be that the time will come when it will be advisable to spend money for that purpose; but when it does we ought to have a very careful investigation by a committee and a very careful report of precisely the political as well as the practical and engineering and commercial grounds upon which such an enterprise is to be undertaken.

This is all I have to say, Mr. President, except that very much to my personal regret I must vote against the proposition of my friend from Louisiana.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that he strike out the word "national" in line 4 of this bill. I do not know of any classification of railroads into national and not national, and I do not know what the word "national" imports there, unless it means that the road is to be built by the nation. I do not know what a national road means unless it means that it is to be a road built by the Government of the United States. I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that it might induce some opposition to this bill if it was to be understood that the Government was to build this or any other railroad; and it is not at all necessary to his bill that that word should be in. I think it had better be stricken out.

Mr. WEST. I am much obliged to the Senator. I consent to the amendment suggested by him to strike out the word "national" in line 4. I did not look at the bill particularly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to test the sense of the Senate upon this bill, so as to save the time necessary to amend it if it is not to pass, I move to postpone it indefinitely.

Mr. WEST. Before that vote is taken, I should like the Senate to understand the nature of this proposition. It is scarcely open to the criticisms recently made upon it by the Senator from Vermont, who said that the officers of the Army were exceeding their jurisdiction and their powers, or at least our expectations of them, when they made suggestions to us how we should spend the public money. That is done continuously, year after year, over and over again, in the estimates that are made by the different Departments in the prosecution of the duties that devolve upon them. I do not know that the survey of the great West was ever authorized by Congress except by an appropriation. If I am wrong the Senator will correct me. These surveys are made under the jurisdiction and authority of the War Department year after year, and their recommendations are made to us and their estimates are submitted to us and we act upon them. Here they think they see—it having been brought to their attention—that a field of usefulness is open. They make the suggestion; they make their report; they make their estimates; and if submitted to us it might just as well be in a general appropriation bill as anywhere else.

There is a pertinency in what the Senator says in one respect. The question for the Senate to decide is whether they feel disposed to appropriate money at the present time for this survey. The Committee on Railroads thought that it was opportune, that the measure was a good one, and they have recommended it; and merely as representing them on this floor to some extent, I have asked the consideration of the Senate to the bill. It does not concern me one bit whether the measure is passed or not.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to inquire what is the ultimate object of this bill after the survey shall have been made? Perhaps the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Louisiana can give the information. Is it that the Government shall undertake the building of this railroad, or is it to be turned over to some private corporation? I merely ask to know what the object is.

Mr. WEST. I believe that this survey is to be made in the interest of parties who propose, however chimerical their views may be, at some future time to embark their capital in the construction of the road. Whether they will ever have an idea of calling on the Government or not I cannot vouch for. We only see at the present time that the engineer authorities of the United States have stated in a somewhat elaborate report that this is the shortest line between the settled portions of the United States on the Atlantic coast and a deep and proper harbor on the Pacific coast; and this bill is with a view of making an examination and verifying their ideas.

Mr. LOGAN. I have but a word to say. It has got to be a habit of Congress to allow the Government to expend money for the purpose of ascertaining some route for the benefit of some private corporation. The Government will make the survey, go to all the expense, and then some parties will come in and ask for a charter for a railroad over that line, and exempt themselves from expending their own money to ascertain its practicability, and the Engineer Corps is often used for that purpose; and, although I dislike to say it, it is very free to be used for any purpose of surveys that are not authorized by law. I am opposed to any survey being made by the United States for the benefit of any private individual or corporation, and that is the object of this bill certainly. If any class or set of individuals desire to get a charter for building a railroad over this route, let them apply for it, get the charter, expend their own money, and receive the profits thereof; but for the Government to do it, as it has been in the habit of doing, I think is entirely wrong, and it ought not to be permitted any longer.

So far as the Engineer Corps is concerned, it is a part of the Army; and this pertains in no particular whatever to a route for the benefit of the Army, or for the transportation of troops, or anything of that kind. The Government does not ask it for any such purpose. Not asking it for that purpose, I think it is outside the scope and authority of the Corps of Engineers, who belong to the Army, to have any connection with it whatever. It is not a part of their duty, and it ought not to be. Their duty is, so far as their engineering is concerned, to examine questions that are important for the Government of the United States—rivers, harbors, and things of that kind, and the building of bridges if desired.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator pardon me for asking him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. WEST. I ask him how came John C. Frémont in 1846 to make a reconnaissance across this continent, and at whose expense did he do it, and what was he at the time he did it?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator certainly has that information himself without asking me. I understand that he belonged to the Army of the United States at the time he did it, and he was making an examination for the benefit of the Government of the United States at that time; not with a view to building a railroad. That was not the object at the time he discovered the pass through the mountains, or at the time he claims that he did. It was a mere exploring expedition, the same as we have now provided for by law.

This is a very different proposition. This is to survey a route for a railroad which, the Senator says, in all probability a private corporation will take hold of and build at some time if they think it is going to be an advantage to them. I am opposed to any bill of that character employing the Government officers for any purpose whatever pertaining to individual interests or those of private corporations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, a part of this proposed route, in fact the most of it, is in the territory of Mexico. I have heard it said that a route can be found for a railroad from Austin, Texas, to this port on the Gulf of California which will not be more than eight hundred and seventy miles in length and will be the shortest railroad route to the Pacific Ocean. But it occurs to me that, in the present condition of the government in Mexico, this might be regarded as somewhat indelicate. I think myself the bill ought to be postponed at this time. It is a proposition to survey a route through the territory of Mexico; and what inference might be drawn from that we can hardly tell. I shall vote for the indefinite postponement.

Mr. WEST. I will say, not to be tedious with the Senate in respect to the matter, that negotiations have been had with the government of Mexico, and they rather invite a survey than otherwise.

Mr. LOGAN. Who had the negotiations?

Mr. WEST. They were had through the Army officers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to postpone the bill indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 606) to enable Harvey Lull, of Hoboken, New Jersey, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a self-locking shutter-hinge.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) for the relief of Edward O'M. Condon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 760) to protect the public property, turf, and grass of the Capitol grounds from injury; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1345) revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, it was Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill, Nos. 3, 9, 14, 15, 17, and 20, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORRILL of Maine, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. DAVIS.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that question.

Mr. SARGENT. I suppose it is more a matter of ceremony or form than of substance which House shall ask for a committee of conference. Of course I have observed that in the House of Representatives the person reporting the bill back from the Committee on Appropriations declined to ask for a committee of conference. With such opportunity as I have had for an examination of the rules and precedents in the matter, I find that the House which makes the amendments, by long practice, is the one which asks for a committee of conference; and therefore, and especially not to raise a mere question of form between the two Houses, I have moved that a committee of conference be asked for by the Senate. If the proposition seriously is, by objection to a committee of conference, that the Senate shall recede from the amendments which it made to the diplomatic bill, by which we restored the service that had been mutilated and would be disgraced by the operation of the bill as it came to us, that is another question. I only hope, however, that on a mere question of form or ceremony those who think the Senate did right in amending the bill so as to restore the integrity of the public service and uphold the dignity of the American name abroad will not vote against asking for a conference. Those who desire that the Senate shall recede will of course vote against the motion; that I cannot help.

Mr. COCKRELL. My object in suggesting that the yeas and nays be taken was simply to determine that very question. If the gentleman will withdraw his motion, I will move that the Senate now recede from its amendments, and I only want the yeas and nays to test that identical question. I do not think the reasons, the arguments, or the facts stated by the gentleman sustain the proposition he makes. I am willing to place myself on the record.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no doubt the Senator is willing to take the responsibility for all his acts. We all feel the same in regard to our acts. This bill was debated at length for several days. Each step was debated, and debated intelligently, and intelligently acted on by the Senate. If the Senate, however, desires to recede from the position it took to reduce our consulates abroad, whether paying or non-paying, to deprive the Treasury of the opportunity of having some test of foreign bills of lading and of the value of articles abroad, so that the Treasury may lose some millions of dollars, that of course is its right. Possibly reflection on the matter may have brought it to that conclusion. If it has come to that conclusion, it will simply vote down the motion which I make, that the Senate insist and ask for a committee of conference. It can be just as much a test vote as the one the Senator himself proposes. I am willing that the yeas and nays shall be taken on this proposition. The Senator called for the yeas and nays, I believe.

Mr. DAWES. Does not the motion to recede take precedence of the motion to insist?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make the motion, then, that the Senate recede.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion has precedence. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate recede from its amendments to this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. The occurrence of a difference of opinion between the two Houses in regard to various measures is not a very marked or unusual fact; and I cannot comprehend why, in advance of the appointment of the usual committee of conference, there has been such an exhibition of determination to raise the question of retirement from the amendments of the Senate or the acceptance of the action of the House. The bill appropriating moneys for the consular and diplomatic service was the subject of discussion of the ordinary character in this body. In some of the amendments made by the House there was a disposition on the part of many, myself included, to non-concur. I was not prepared as a whole to accept unquestioned the action of the House, nor am I disposed to say but that there was much wholesome and necessary reform in the action of the House. Gentlemen here, members of the body and of those committees more intimately acquainted with the propriety of some of these appropriations, warmly seconded the general current of the action of the House on the subject. There is no question about it that a reformation by means of a wise economy is strenously demanded at this time in this country. It is neither wise nor just to stand in the way of such a demand. At the same time when the propositions are made that are supposed to embrace it, it then is right and just that we should properly criticise and independently express our opinions; but this must be done without assuming to the Senate the especial and peculiar guardianship of the good name and honor of the American people. Expressions such as we have just heard, that a bill appropriating money in the form suggested by a concurrent branch of the Legislature is necessarily disgraceful to the country, certainly can be productive of no good effects.

I can well imagine that other things are more essential to the honor of the American name than the amount of money which may be appropriated for the salaries of its agents. If men of improper character and a low tone of public or private morals shall be sent to represent the American people abroad, money, no matter how liberally bestowed in the shape of salaries, will simply serve to make their vices more conspicuous. The simple question is not of honor or dishonor from the amount of salaries, but the question is of efficiency or the contrary. If the public service is to be materially crippled by consolidating offices, by dropping certain offices entirely from your list, then it becomes a matter simply of good sense, what may be termed business good sense, whether or not you will restore the offices, or whether you will increase the pay. All these are matters of detail, all these are matters of simple political economy; but I think it is not well that in any way, inferentially or otherwise, there should be a suggestion that a rebuke of any kind is necessary for the co-ordinate branch of Congress in respect of their action. They act upon their own responsibility before our countrymen, whom they represent as well as we. If their measures shall be wanting in good sense, if they are not dictated by a proper consideration of wise economy and propriety, they will suffer for it; but it is certainly our business not to criticise their action, but simply to criticise the result that comes before us without reference to them. But it is the part of each House of Congress so to act and so to conduct discussion upon this bill as shall further the end in view, which is an accommodation of differences between us in respect of matters of public interest.

Therefore, sir, while I shall vote in favor of the Senate amendments, it is only for the purpose of having a conference committee raised; and then, I trust, when these conferees come together or when their reports are made to the relative bodies, that there will be no spirit or no feeling exhibited except one of independent judgment for the best interests of the country.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, the proposition of the Senator from Missouri must proceed on the theory, it seems to me, that the Senate has no right to amend appropriation bills. I know that every amendment proposed in the Senate was resisted by him; and now by this proposition the whole thing would seem to indicate clearly that the Senate is not contemplated by the Constitution when it says that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury except in pursuance of appropriations made by law. The Senate is a concurrent legislative body with the House of Representatives, has all the rights and privileges of the House so far as appropriation bills are concerned. There is not even a provision in the Constitution that appropriations shall originate in the House of Representatives, although there is a popular error that there is. I claim my right as a Senator as much as I ever claimed it as a Representative to do as I think best, consistent with the rules of order, for or against any proposition pending before the House of which I may be a member. That right must be conceded to the Senator and must be conceded to the body of which the Senator is an honored member.

I stated that it was necessary, I thought, to restore the service as it was established twenty years ago under political auspices very different from those prevailing at the present time, to restore the service as it was then created or revised when certainly a salary compared with the present time was greatly higher although the amount is the same. It was much more valuable then than it is now, though of the same amount. I thought it was contrary to the dignity of the American people that their embassadors sent to have correspondence and communication with the principal courts abroad should be put upon such footing of salary that it was impossible for any man, unless he had resources of his own, to appear there with any degree of respectability. I thought that was contrary to the dignity of the American nation. If you are to take the alternative proposition and say the Government requires this service even at the expense of a man's private fortune, you do injustice to the individual, and you necessarily select only individuals who have private fortunes, and therefore exclude the poor and those in moderate circumstances from honorable office. That I think is contrary to the genius of American institutions. I trust I offend no Senator's sensibilities in saying that as I did in saying that to reduce salaries of foreign ministers to the point of meanness is against the dignity of the country.

Now, the usual and natural course where there is a difference between the two Houses on a bill, where each House insists on its amendments, is a committee of conference. I do not think that on a mere random suggestion, (I do not use the word in an offensive sense; I mean a casual suggestion,) when a bill which we passed, after considerable reflection, has gone to the other House, and they simply have non-concurred in our amendments, we should throw away the labor of several days without going to a committee of conference. Therefore I have asked that we insist on our amendments and request a committee of conference.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I think the Senator from California is entirely wrong in the matter of legislative propriety and courtesy. Where amendments are made in one body, and those amendments go to the other House, and that House non-concurs, the proper motion, and the motion that has preference in every legislative body that I know anything about, is to recede and concur with the House originating the motion. Therefore the motion of the Senator from Missouri was entirely in consonance with parliamentary usage and entirely proper, so far as this body is concerned.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator say that a motion to recede from the Senate amendments is in consonance with the practice; that because the other House non-concurs we must therefore recede?

Mr. EATON. I do not speak of this body; but I suppose so, because the motion has precedence. The very fact that under the rules of this body that motion has precedence of any other shows to my mind as a legislator that it is the first proper motion, that we recede. If this body will not recede so as to concur with the House, then the other motion may be made.

Mr. SARGENT. Because a motion to recede is the first properly in the parliamentary sense does not show that it is the most proper as a matter of business. A motion to adjourn is first in order; but a motion to adjourn should not be at once adopted because it is the first in order.

Mr. EATON. The suggestion of the Senator from California is not parallel. Here are two Houses. One House originates a bill. The bill comes to this, the other body. Certain amendments are made. Those amendments go back to the House in which the bill originated. That House refuses to concur in the amendments made in this body. Now, I insist that the proper motion, the true motion to make is for this body to recede, that we may come together with the other which will not concur in our amendments. If we will not recede, if the opinion of this body is that they are right, that they will not recede, very well. Then will follow a committee of conference.

Mr. SARGENT. If we recede, that passes the bill as it originally passed the House, and no conference then is possible.

Mr. EATON. That is just what I desire.

Mr. SARGENT. Then the Senate gives up all its labor on the bill simply because the other House does not agree, and without a committee of conference.

Mr. EATON. One body or the other will give up its labor on this bill or else the bill will not pass.

Mr. SARGENT. On the other hand, a committee of conference comes in and by conference may agree upon a common basis.

Mr. EATON. I understand that; I need not be taught that fact; but if the Senate is ready now at this moment to say that its action has been wrong, then the motion is a proper one that the Senate recede.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from California stated that he had looked into the precedents and had found that in a large majority of the cases the body making the amendments asked for a committee of conference. I would inquire if he refers to appropriation bills?

Mr. SARGENT. Yes; except that toward the close of the sessions, when we are very much hurried, and time is of great consequence, we have got into the habit, when non-concurring with amendments, of asking for a conference; but if the Senator will look back over the precedents he will find that the original practice was, as it was maintained for a good many years, that the House making the amendments asked for the conference when the other did not concur.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt the Senator is correct, if he has looked into it; but my recollection did not serve me so. I thought that in reference to appropriation bills the practice was almost universal for the other House to ask for a conference on appropriation bills. Of course an amendment to an appropriation bill must originate in this body, and I had an idea that the practice was to ask for a committee of conference on the part of the House of Representatives when it non-concurred in the amendments of the Senate. But I agree with the Senator from California that it is our duty, if the House does not ask for a committee of conference, to ask for it. It is our duty to avail ourselves of all the forms and methods of bringing the two Houses together upon this bill; and if any of those forms and methods are omitted on the part of the other body, that is no excuse or justification for us and no reason why we should omit them on our part.

For that reason I am in favor of insisting and asking for a committee of conference. I am in favor of doing everything in our power to bring the two Houses together and of yielding so far as it seems to me possible for the public service; but beyond that I do not see now that we are called upon to yield to the sacrifice of the public service even for the purpose of bringing the two Houses together upon any bill. But I would say, so far as the action of this body is concerned, to the other branch that we will do everything in our power and we will assure them that we will yield everything that is possible consistent with the good of the public service; and beyond that it is impossible for us to go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. This question has trespassed a little on the unfinished business.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope we shall have a vote on this matter.

Mr. BOUTWELL and others. Let us have the vote.

Mr. SARGENT. It is in the nature of a privileged question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate recede from its amendments to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. One word, Mr. President. I am much gratified at the kindly instruction which the distinguished Senator from California has given me in regard to what my views are in prompting me to call for this action on the part of the Senate. I have never doubted, from the earliest days of my infancy, the power of the United States Senate to make amendments to appropriation bills emanating in the House of Representatives and coming to the Senate. It is not upon that ground suggested by the distinguished Senator that I make this motion; but it is purely on the ground that I believe the best interests of the public service and the best interests of the tax-payers of this country will be promoted by the Senate receding from these amendments which have been proposed by it, and it is in the interest of the public service and the interest of the tax-payers of this country that I make this motion. The distinguished Senator has very justly said that the whole bill was thoroughly discussed. If it was thoroughly discussed, then I presume we are able to vote intelligently upon it this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to recede.

The question being taken by yeas and nays resulted—yeas 4, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cockrell, Eaton, McCreery, and McDonald—4.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Edmunds, English, Ferry, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, West, Windom, and Withers—41.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Caperton, Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, Norwood, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, and Wright—28.

So the Senate refused to recede from its amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from California, that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a committee of conference. Does the Senator from Missouri insist on the call for the yeas and nays on this motion?

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not call for the yeas and nays on that motion. My vote is recorded. That is all I want.

The motion was agreed to; and, by unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Messrs. SARGENT, FRELINGHUYSEN, and WITHERS were appointed.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had, on the 21st instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 34) to confirm pre-emption and homestead entries of public lands within the limits of railroad grants in cases where such entries have been made under the regulations of the Land Department; and

An act (S. No. 417) for continuing the work of improving the Capitol grounds.

The message also announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 697) authorizing the sale of logs cut by the Indians of the Menomonee reservation in Wisconsin under the direction of the Interior Department; and

An act (S. No. 279) to establish a land office in the southern part of Utah Territory, to be known as the Beaver district, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the President having received the following acts on the 8th of April and they not having been returned by him to the Senate within the ten days prescribed by the Constitution, had become laws without his signature:

An act (S. No. 575) for the relief of Charles E. Hovey; and

An act (S. No. 58) to pay the First National Bank of Saint Albans, in the county of Franklin, and State of Vermont, the value of certain United States Treasury notes held by said bank as financial agent of the United States and forcibly taken therefrom by raiders from Canada in October, 1864.

THE MISSISSIPPI ELECTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced the appointment of Mr. MCMILLAN to fill the vacancy occasioned by the Senate excusing Mr. OGLESBY from service on the special committee appointed to inquire into the recent election in the State of Mississippi by the resolution adopted on the 31st of March.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BOGY to the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. Mr. President——

Mr. BOGY. With the permission of the Senator from Nevada, I should like to make an explanation, and I desire that he will avail himself of my statement.

It has been very often stated, and I believe very generally believed, that silver was demonetized in this country by the act of 1873, and, if I understood the Senator from Nevada yesterday aright, he is also of that impression. I know that the impression is very general indeed. In my opinion it is a great mistake. The act of 1873 did not demonetize silver, and, in point of fact, no law has ever passed the Congress of the United States demonetizing silver except a law which is found in the revised code. The fourteenth section of the act of 1873 provides for a gold coinage and a gold tender. The fifteenth section of that act provides for the coinage of a trade-dollar and subsidiary coins. This trade-dollar and these subsidiary coins were made legal tender to an amount not exceeding $5, and it was also further provided that there should be no more silver coined excepting of the character prescribed by that act. But the old coins that had been coined prior to 1853, and which were yet in circulation, remained a legal tender.

As I have said already, no law has ever passed demonetizing silver. The Revised Statutes contain a law which, I contend, is a fraud, which has no business there, because the act authorizing the revision of our laws provided that none should be revised but those in force on the 1st of December, 1873; yet here is a law in the Revised Statutes for which there is no foundation whatever. There was no law existing at that time saying that silver should not be a legal tender. There was a law saying that trade-dollars and subsidiary coin of a less value should be a legal tender not to exceed $5; but the old coinage was not at all affected by the law then existing. Yet the revised code says, in section 3586:

> The silver coins of the United States shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment.

That is a fraud. There was no law of that character existing at that day in this country; and to that extent the revision is wrong. There was no right to put it there. I think furthermore that section 3524 is equally a fraud, wherein it is stated that no foreign coin shall be a legal tender in payment of debts. There may be such a law; I will not be positive as far as the foreign-coin question is concerned; but I have not been able to find any law existing before which said that foreign coins should not be a legal tender when assayed at the Mint and the value proclaimed according to law; and yet that is also found in the revised code. As far as foreign coin is concerned, I may be wrong, though I think I am not; but as to the silver question, the provision in the revised code is there without authority of law; and, in point of fact, Congress has never at any time passed any law demonetizing silver in this country.

Mr. LOGAN. Except in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BOGY. Except this provision in the revised code, which was passed under peculiar circumstances. I wish my friend from Nevada, who is making a remarkably able and learned speech on this subject, should have the benefit of this, because I think he labors under a misapprehension in regard to the subject, as I did myself at one time, a misapprehension which is very general. The act of 1873 did not demonetize the silver coined before 1853. This old coin remained a legal-tender for any amount, and did so until the act in the revised code of the 22d of June, 1874.

[Mr. JONES, of Nevada, resumed the floor, and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. His speech in full will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to say anything in commendation, or disapprobation, or dispute of the speech that has been made by the honorable Senator from Nevada. It was very able, very exhaustive, and very instructive to every one. I wish to correct simply a misapprehension into which the Senator fell in regard to the terms of the act of 1873. Perhaps there is no law on the statute-book that received more thorough consideration than the act of 1873, which is entitled "An act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States." It is a long law, covering, I think, twelve pages of the Statutes of the United States, and was approved February 12, 1873. That act was first introduced from the Treasury Department in January, I think, 1870, more than three years before it passed. It was discussed at some length in the Senate; was then printed and sent all over the country to every person who was familiar with the subject, especially to California, to Nevada, the Mint at Philadelphia, and largely to Europe; and it was thoroughly examined. It came back, and in the following session, that is, the session of 1870 and 1871, it passed the Senate of the United States. Subsequently the bill failed in the House for want of time in that Congress. At the next session, however, it was introduced in the House of Representatives. It was there discussed, and finally passed the House of Representatives and came to the Senate, the same bill in effect that had previously passed the Senate of the United States. In the Senate it was again examined, rediscussed, considered, and passed. So that this bill really was pending in Congress nearly four years, and it was discussed in every stage of its progress. It was examined by experts not only in this country but in Europe. It was prepared at the Treasury Department, and largely prepared by Mr. Patterson, of Philadelphia, who is now, probably, the most eminent authority in this country on the subject, and by Dr. Linderman, and others. It was submitted to all classes, and especially to persons living in California and other parts of the country interested in the production of gold and silver.

There is another thing to which I wish to call attention. The act of 1873 did not make any essential change in the then existing law. The only change of importance in the previous law made by the act of 1873 was made at the request of the interests in California. That is, the trade-dollar was introduced as a mercantile dollar to enable them to send in a convenient form the production of silver in this country to China. This was the only change made in the then existing law of any material character. The bill itself was but a codification and revision of the laws relating to the mints of the United States and the coinage of the United States, changing but slightly any material features of the existing laws. The proposition about the trade-dollar was introduced at the request of merchants and dealers in bullion in San Francisco, and was intended simply as a means of enabling them to put in the best and most valuable form the silver bullion of the country with a view to its exportation to China and Japan.

My honorable friend from Nevada in his long and carefully prepared speech has gone upon the idea that the act of 1873 in some way demonetized silver. What I have stated shows that it did not in the slightest degree demonetize silver. My friend from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] was perfectly correct in saying that so far as the silver coins were concerned the act of 1873 did not have the slightest effect upon them. But, on the other hand, the act of 1853, to which the Senator from Nevada did not seem to allude except in quoting the report of Mr. Hunter, did adopt the system of what is called a subsidiary coinage of silver; that is, it made the coinage of silver subsidiary to gold. It provided for a gold coinage, and made the silver coinage of fifty-cent pieces, twenty-five-cent pieces, ten-cent pieces, &c., called subsidiary coins, and demonetized those by reducing them to about 6 per cent. below the legal relative value of sixteen to one; and if there is any law to complain of on the statute-books of the United States, it is the law of 1853, in that respect.

Mr. BOGY. That did not demonetize silver, nor did the act of 1873.

Mr. SHERMAN. The act of 1873 did not affect it in the slightest degree, and therefore the comments made by the Senator from Nevada rest on an error in that particular. The essential qualities of the act of 1873 are precisely like the act of 1853. It provided for subsidiary coins. The substance of the act of 1853 was to provide for a subsidiary coinage of silver. But there is another thing to be remembered. The right to coin the silver dollar, which is now proposed to be authorized again, has always existed in this country, has never been taken away. It is the legal dollar to-day, and the silver dollars that are now outstanding, if there are any, and I suppose there are not many, are a legal tender for all amounts unless the quality of legal tender has been taken away by these Revised Statutes.

The act of 1873 is before me. As I said, it is one of the most carefully prepared statutes that ever were passed in any country in the world. It underwent the scrutiny of persons here and abroad; and for four sessions of Congress was it here and discussed. That act simply leaves the old dollar where the law of 1853 left it. It says nothing about it. It says that no coins but these named shall be issued under the act; but the old silver dollar stood precisely as it stood before under the act of 1853. It was true it had not been issued since 1853; and I suppose not for some years before that, though I do not know.

Mr. BOGY. It was issued up to 1853.

Mr. SHERMAN. The principle of the act of 1853 was that subsidiary coin composed of silver should take the place of the small change of the country, and that silver and gold, one as the unit of value and the other as the subsidiary coin of the country, should travel hand in hand; one for great operations, as the Senator expressed it, and the other for small operations. That was the policy of the act of 1853, not changed in the slightest degree by the act of 1873.

Mr. HOWE. To what extent did the act of 1853 make a change?

Mr. SHERMAN. The act of 1853 changed the tender of the silver, so far as the subsidiary coin was concerned, but the old dollar, the old silver dollar, was still a legal tender for all purposes.

Mr. HOWE. And remains so?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, because of the effect of the revised code. The act of 1873 did not repeal the legal tender of the old silver dollar, but left it stand. The last and repealing clause of this act simply repeals such provisions of existing laws as were inconsistent with it. The act of 1873 does not repeal the legal-tender quality of the old silver dollar and does not affect it in the slightest. It provides, however, that no silver coin except subsidiary coin shall be isssued after its passage.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. LOGAN. Perhaps I may misunderstand the statute of 1873; but my recollection of it is that, instead of continuing the act of 1853 and the act of 1792, which made the silver dollar a legal tender for all sums the same as gold, in the coinage act of 1873 the old dollar was left out and therefore it could not be coined any more, and so it was striken out and there are no old silver dollars in circulation. They could not be a legal tender because their coinage was prohibited.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it did not affect those outstanding.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand the Senator. Of course it did not affect those outstanding, but there were none outstanding. They had all gone into the melting-pot.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I understand it as the Senator does, that the act of 1873 did declare that all silver coins issued after that date should be the trade-dollar or the subsidiary coinage therein prescribed.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir; and therefore it was a prohibition on the old dollar, and hence the old dollars, except those that were out, were not and could not be a legal tender afterward, and as fast as the old dollars went into the melting-pot you reduced them down, so that there were none of them to be a legal tender. I ask the Senator if that is not the explanation. The act of 1873 left out the old dollar and prohibited its coinage; and then when you come to the Revised Statutes, the Revised Statutes enact that silver shall not be a legal tender except for $5. The revisers took the act of 1873, understanding it to mean that the legal tender of silver was prohibited by leaving out the old dollar and inserted in the Revised Statutes a prohibition of its being a legal tender except for the limited amount of $5. What I want to get at is, how that came into the statutes, by what construction, and whether it was not a misconstruction of the law of 1873.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend's question is so long that I do not know that I shall get the hang of it.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg pardon; perhaps I put the question in such a form that the Senator cannot answer it, and perhaps I cannot answer it myself. What I wanted was to know these facts. I have the impression I have stated.

Mr. SHERMAN. How it comes that the Revised Statutes repeal the legal-tender quality of the old dollar I cannot say, except that the revisers may have considered that as this old dollar was practically out of circulation, and as it could not then be issued under the act of 1873, in which nothing was said about it, they need not mention the silver dollar in classifying the legal-tender coins.

Mr. HOWE. About the act of 1873, I wish to know whether it does prohibit the coinage of the silver dollar other than the trade-dollar?

Mr. SHERMAN. It prohibits in express terms any coining of it after the passage of that act. The seventeenth section of that act provides that the coins hereafter to be issued shall be of the kind named in this act.

Mr. HOWE. So that up to the act of 1873 silver dollars were a recognized coin of the United States and could be used in the payment of debts to any amount?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; but none were issued since the act of 1853, not a dollar.

Mr. HOWE. But they could be?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, they could be.

Mr. HOWE. But by the act of 1873 it was provided that the dollar should not be coined except the trade-dollar.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; and the purpose of the bill before us now is simply to restore the dollar of account precisely as it was before the act of 1873; in other words, to authorize its issue just as it was authorized to be issued up to the act of 1873.

Mr. HOWE. And to authorize the use of it in payment of debts as before the act of 1873?

Mr. SHERMAN. We have limited its legal-tender quality to $20. Let me go a step further and I will stop my explanation; and I should prefer that Senators would not interrupt me until I get through.

I have been often asked not only in this Chamber but outside, how comes it that the silver dollar was dropped from among the coins of the country. The answer is that in 1873, when these statutes were so carefully revised, the silver dollar as provided in the then existing law was worth more than a dollar in gold, more in the money markets of the world. There was no use then in issuing the dollar, because it would go into the melting-pot, being worth more than the gold dollar. That was the reason why the silver dollar was not provided for. That was before the movements which have been commented upon in Europe, and especially in Germany, commenced to affect the price of silver. The United States had since the act of 1837 undervalued silver; that is, they required sixteen ounces of silver to be equal to one ounce of gold. The result was that a dollar in silver was worth more than a dollar in gold. France and other countries had said that fifteen and a half ounces of silver should be equal to an ounce of gold, and that made a difference of 3 or 4 per cent. as between their relation and ours, which difference was sufficient to induce the exportation of silver in the form of dollars or bullion to France or the countries of Europe where the double standard prevailed. The result was that there was no object in 1873 in providing for the silver dollar. If it had been issued from the Mint it would not have gone into circulation, but would have been exported. The idea of reducing it down to the French standard of fifteen and a half to one was not entertained, as our subsidiary coin which then filled the channels of circulation was actually only fourteen and a half to one. There was no object, therefore, in issuing the silver dollar for the purpose of maintaining the double standard.

These were the circumstances, and I simply rose now at the heel of the argument of the honorable Senator from Nevada to correct the misapprehension into which he has fallen about the act of 1873. The act of 1873 itself was but a codification of the then existing laws of the United States, and, with the exception of prohibiting the issue of the silver dollar, it did not change in the slightest degree the law of 1853, so far as it affected the silver coin. The silver coins now in circulation were practically provided for by the act of 1853. The only change made by the act of 1873 was in measuring the weight of these coins in grams instead of in grains, slightly changing to the extent of about $\frac{1}{2}$ of 1 per cent. the value of the silver in the silver coins; and this was done to make them assimilate, dollar for dollar, grain for grain, weight for weight, size for size, with the French silver coins now in circulation, so that a five-franc piece is $1, and the same proportion prevails throughout.

Mr. MORTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio this question: What was the change made in the value of the subsidiary coin by the act of 1853, and why was it, although there was no prohibition in that act for the continued coinage of the silver dollar, that there were no such dollars coined after that time?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have answered that question already. I have said that it was because from 1853 to 1873 the silver dollar was worth more than the gold dollar, and there was no object in issuing it, because it would at once be exported, because by the old law of 1837 the relation was wrong; we had undervalued silver by making one ounce of gold equal to sixteen ounces of silver, and therefore whenever silver was coined in the shape of dollars it went off; and so it was from 1853 to 1873. It was always undervalued, and in 1873, if the silver dollar had been issued, it would never have gone into circulation, simply because it was worth intrinsically more than a gold dollar, and would have been exported to France, where it was more profitable.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not desire to enter into the discussion in reference to this question; but, inasmuch as I suggested an inquiry to the Senator from Ohio, I desire to occupy a moment in explanation of what I said. This is a question that the country will desire probably to inquire into. When I say that, I refer to the changes which have been made in reference to the coinage in this country. As was stated by the Senator from Ohio, from 1792 to 1873 the silver dollar was a legal tender for all amounts in this country, the same as gold. Up to 1873, long after our indebtedness was created, the silver dollar was the same as the gold dollar in the payment of debts of any class or character or for any amount. In 1873, in the coinage act, an act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States, which was passed by the House and came to the Senate, and was passed in the Senate, whether with or without discussion is immaterial, provision was made for coining gold dollars and subsidiary silver coin. The words "silver dollar" are not used in the whole act. Hence when a person reads the act he will see the force of section 17:

That no coins, either of gold, silver, or minor coinage, shall hereafter be issued from the Mint other than those of the denominations, standards, and weights herein set forth.

"The denominations, standards, and weights herein set forth" in this act were the gold dollar and the subsidiary silver coinage and the trade-dollar, leaving the old silver dollar out entirely, and declaring by this act that the Mint should not coin it, the silver dollar being, as stated by the Senator from Ohio, worth about $1.03 at that time, or a little more anyhow than the gold dollar.

What was the effect of this act? The very moment you deprived the Government of the United States of the right of coining the silver dollar, which was a legal tender for all amounts, it being in value more than the gold dollar, the effect was that every silver dollar was bought up at once and smelted or put into the pot. The silver dollar known as the silver legal tender in this country went out of use in that way. It was more profitable to use it in the melting-pot than it was to use it as a circulating medium. Hence it went there. As soon as those dollars went out of use, the effect of that statute was just the same as if it had declared that the silver dollar should not be a legal tender for any amount whatever. That was exactly the effect upon the silver dollar of that statute.

Mr. BOGY. If the silver was more valuable than the gold, the silver did not go to the melting-pot.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a different impression about that. I take the suggestion of the Senator; but I understand it differently. If the silver at the time was more valuable than gold, it would go out of use; when the gold is more valuable than the silver, that goes out of use; and that is perfectly natural. We all understand that. Hence the silver dollar did go out of use, and is out of use to-day.

Then we come to the revision of the statutes. I do not know that it is material how it came to be provided in the Revised Statutes that the silver coins should not be a legal tender for more than $5. The Senator from Missouri said this morning that it was a fraud. I do not know anything about that. In revising the statutes, without mentioning names, I should be inclined to come to the conclusion that the gentlemen who have been warring on silver, who have been connected with the matter in this country and others, naturally supposed that, inasmuch as the act of 1873 deprived the United States Mint of the power of coining the silver dollar, the silver dollar was not a legal tender and was not intended to be; and hence the revision came around as it did.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been suggested by the Senator from Nevada and perhaps by others that the purpose of this law was to take away from the debtor some advantage of paying in silver rather than in gold. That would be clearly a foolish idea, because at the time the law was passed silver was worth more than gold, and therefore it could not have been passed with any idea of depriving the debtor of a right which he would not have exercised in the then condition of affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. The point I was intending to get at was this: Inasmuch as the country and the people have been deprived of the right to pay in silver coin by an act denying the right to coin the silver dollar, it being a legal tender at that time for all amounts, the country will expect that when you restore that silver dollar you let it be a legal tender for all amounts just as it was up to 1873; and it is just and proper that it should. When you restore the silver dollar in this country and give it a place and say its place shall only be for $20 or $10 or $5, you deprive the people of this country of a right which they enjoyed from 1792 to 1873 and a right of which they have been deprived in a manner that they know not how. If the silver dollar was a good legal tender in 1873, it ought to be a good legal tender to-day for all amounts, in my judgment. This bill as reported limits the legal-tender quality to $20. So far as I am concerned—and I speak for myself alone—I will vote to strike out the twenty-dollar limit and let the dollar stand as a legal tender, as it did up to 1873, for all amounts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I give way to my friend from Missouri, who wishes to make a suggestion about the pending bill, I understand.

Mr. BOGY. I desire to move that the pending bill, with the amendments, be printed. Many inquiries have been made of me for information on the subject, and the bill ought to be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) That order will be made, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-two minutes spent in executive session, the doors were re-opened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 25, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SPECIAL-TAX STAMP.

Mr. MORRISON. I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means to report back a joint resolution (H. R. No. 99) concerning special-tax stamps, with the recommendation it do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the joint resolution be first read, and I reserve objection until it is read.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that nothing contained in chapter 3 of title 35 of the Revised Statutes shall prevent the issue, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of special-tax stamps to persons carrying on the business of retail dealers in liquors, retail dealers in malt liquors, or dealers in tobacco upon passenger railroad trains or upon steamboats or other vessels engaged in the business of carrying passengers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRISON. As the special-tax year begins on the first of May, there is necessity for immediate action on this bill; and as it is recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and reported favorably from the Committee of Ways and Means, I presume there will be no objection to it.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I rise to a question of privilege, and call up the resolutions reported from the Committee of Elections in the case of J. V. Le Moyne vs. Charles B. Farwell, of the third congressional district of Illinois, for action at this time.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope that will not be done. I raise the question of consideration. I want to state the fact that I lost all of last week by reason of the bill transferring the Indian Bureau from the Interior to the War Department being pressed for consideration.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. At the rate of progress of the legislative appropriation bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it will take at least two or three weeks to finish it. This contested-election case will require but a day, and it is only just that the parties should know what are their rights. If the contestant is entitled to his seat, he should have it upon this floor to represent his people according to their will, and not have the question postponed for two or three weeks.

Mr. RANDALL. Instead of two or three weeks, I hope to finish the legislative appropriation bill in two or three sessions of the House.

Mr. HOAR. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the House will now proceed to the consideration of the contested-election case of Le Moyne against Farwell. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has raised the question of consideration, proposing to go into committee on the legislative appropriation bill. The question first recurs on taking up the contested-election case.

The House divided; and there were ayes 24, noes not counted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, demanded the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes 84.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported ayes 30.

So (more than one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 71, nays 119, not voting 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Bagby, John H. Baker, Blackburn, Bland, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Cowan, Davis, De Bolt, Douglas, Ellis, Felton, Franklin, Gause, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hereford, Hill, House, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Knott, Lane, Levy, Maish, McFarland, Meade, Milliken, Money, Morrison, New, Parsons, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Reagan, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, Roberts, Miles Ross, Scales, Sheakley, Slemons, Sparks, Springer, Tarbox, Thomas, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Walling, Warren, Wigginton, Wike, Jeremiah N. Williams, and Yeates—71.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., William H. Baker, Bell, Blair, Blount, Bradford, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Cason, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Conger, Cox, Crapo, Crounse, Culberson, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Denison, Dibrell, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Ely, Evans, Foster, Frye, Fuller, Garfield, Gibson, Goodin, Gunter, Hale, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Benjamin W. Harris, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Henderson, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurd, Hurlbut, Kehr, Kelley, Kimball, George M. Landers, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lewis, Lord, Lynch, Lynde, Edmund W. M. Mackey, L. A. Mackey, Magoon, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Metcalfe, Monroe, Morey, Morgan, Neal, Norton, O'Neill, Packer, Page, Payne, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Randall, Rea, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sinnickson, William E. Smith, Southard, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Teese, Washington Townsend, Tufts, John L. Vance, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, Whiting, Whitthorne, Willard, Andrew Williams, James D. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Fernando Wood, and Woodburn—119.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Barnum, Bass, Beebe, Blaine, Bliss, Boone, Bradley, Bright, Cabell, Campbell, Cannon, Caswell, Clymer, Collins, Cook, Davy, Dobbins, Durand, Eden, Egbert, Farwell, Faulkner, Forney, Fort, Freeman, Frost, Glover, Goode, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Harrison, Haymond, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoge, Hooker, Hunton, Hyman, Jenks, Joyce, Kasson, Ketchum, King, Lamar, Franklin Landers, Lapham, Luttrell, McMahon, Miller, Mills, Mutchler, Nash, O'Brien, Odell, Oliver, Phelps, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Powell, Purman, Rainey, John Reilly, Sobieski Ross, Sayler, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Singleton, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stenger, Swann, Terry, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Turney, Van Vorhes, Gilbert C. Walker, John W. Wallace, Wells, Walsh, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Woodworth, and Young—100.

So the House refused to consider the report of the Committee of Elections.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, said: I desire to state that Mr. HAYMOND, of Indiana, is detained from his seat by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

Mr. HENDEE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. When the House adjourned yesterday, it had ordered the bill for the taxation of the District of Columbia to be engrossed and read a third time. I desire to inquire whether by the intervention of other business that business must go over, or whether it is proper to take it up at this time. The previous question is operating on the bill.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, the unfinished business of yesterday, being the unfinished business of the Committee for the District of Columbia, must stand within the privileges and order of that committee. It is unfinished business therefore on that committee's next day. In other words, it is the judgment of the Chair that the other committees are as much entitled to protection against the Committee for the District of Columbia as that committee is entitled to protection against them. There should be reciprocity in the application of this rule. The Chair is willing, however, to take the sense of the House whether the unfinished business of the District Committee shall now be disposed of.

Mr. HENDEE. Very likely the Chair may be correct in his ruling. I desire, however, to say that the bill is a very important one, and, although objectionable to some of the committee, they believe it will be properly amended in the Senate, and desire to have it passed. I believe it may be passed without any discussion.

Mr. RANDALL. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. It is entirely competent for the House, by consent, now to proceed to the completion of that business; and if that be the pleasure of the House it may be done at once. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT TAX-BILL.

The House accordingly resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which, as amended by the adoption of the substitute of Mr. NEAL, had been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now renew my motion.

Mr. SCALES. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to yielding to the gentleman from North Carolina and to other gentlemen for matters which will require no debate and will only occupy a very few minutes.

Mr. HURLBUT. I demand the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. The regular order being demanded, I insist on my motion that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, before this order proceeds, begs the House to permit some business on the Speaker's table to be disposed of.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 760) to protect the public property, turf, and grass of the Capitol grounds from injury; and

An act (H. R. No. 1345) revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

IMPEACHMENT OF WILLIAM W. BELKNAP.

The SPEAKER. In the matter of the pending impeachment in the Senate of the United States the pleadings have proceeded a step further, and the Clerk of the House makes the following report, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 25, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of demurrer and rejoinders to the replications of the House of Representatives to the plea in abatement in the case of the United States of America vs. William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, upon impeachment, delivered to me by the Secretary of the Senate last evening at seven o'clock and ten minutes.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE M. ADAMS,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Hon. M. C. KERR,
Speaker House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, unless there be objection, will direct the reference of these additional pleadings to the board of managers.

There was no objection.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. LORD. I ask that by unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award, which has heretofore been made the special order twice, but not taken up, be now made the special order for the 28th instant, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to obstruct the consideration of the general appropriation bills.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report in relation to the Pacific railroads; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The Committee on Naval Affairs, who were directed by the House resolution, introduced by Hon. Mr. GOODE, and adopted by the House January 15, 1876, and by the House resolution, introduced by Hon. Mr. MORRISON, and adopted by the House January 14, 1876, to make inquiry in regard to certain matters embraced and set forth in said resolutions, beg leave to report that they have taken the testimony of sundry persons, together with certain documentary proof in response to said directions, which they herewith submit as a part of their report, and ask the order of the House that the same may be printed and re-referred to said committee. The committee further ask, inasmuch as they have not completed the inquiry directed to be made by the House in the adoption of the resolutions aforesaid, that the further order of the House be that such other testimony as may be by them taken in pursuance of the direction of said resolutions be likwise printed and recommitted to them.

Mr. HURLBUT. I object to the printing of any matter that is not before the House.

Mr. HALE. I demand the regular order.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House, pursuant to order, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending paragraph on page 38 of the bill.

Mr. PAGE. The pending question when the committee was last in session was upon the paragraph beginning on page 37 and ending on page 38, which was not then disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. There were several amendments pending to that paragraph, and I thought that the power of amendment was exhausted.

Mr. PAGE. There was only one amendment that had not been disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. There was one amendment to make the appropriation for wages of workmen and adjusters at the mint at San Francisco $280,000, one to make it $275,000, and one to make it $250,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the paragraph is still subject to amendment, and the paragraph will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $225,000; and hereafter no laborer or subordinate workman, or employé of any grade below the first assistant to the chief, (which first assistant shall in no case receive exceeding $7 per diem,) of any of the operative departments of this mint, who now receives a per diem compensation of more than $6, shall be paid exceeding the sum of $6 for each working-day; and no operative, fireman or helper, laborer or watchman, who now receives a per diem compensation of more than $3, and less than $5, shall be paid exceeding $3 per day, and only for actual service.

Mr. PIPER. I move to amend that paragraph in line 894 by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting in lieu thereof "seventy-four," so as to make the amount of the appropriation $274,000.

I do not desire to detain the committee upon this subject, and if it were not one of vital importance to the Pacific coast I would have let it drop where it ended on the last evening of the sessions of the committee. But this is an appropriation to defray the expenses of the mint at San Francisco, and this paragraph provides especially for paying of wages of the workmen.

It is unnecessary to say anything about the necessity of the case, because I presume every one understands that; but I desire to have read a letter written by myself and an answer from Dr. Linderman, the Director of the Mint.

The Clerk read as follows:

Private.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: Will you let me know what is the least additional appropriation for the efficient operation of the San Francisco mint, as the subject will come up to-night?

Yours, &c.,

W. A. PIPER.

Dr. LINDERMAN.

Send to my rooms on Thirteenth, No. 608.

[Answer.]

For wages of workmen	$275,000
Incidental and contingent expenses	140,000

The coinage has nearly doubled as to gold and more than trebled as to silver. Next year's coinage will no doubt be much larger than ever before.

H. R. LINDERMAN.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to move an amendment to the amendment, which has in view the perfecting of the clause. I move to strike out on page 37, line 894, all after the word "dollars" down to the end of the paragraph, as follows:

And hereafter no laborer, or subordinate workman, or employé of any grade below the first assistant to the chief, (which first assistant shall in no case receive exceeding $7 per diem,) of any of the operative departments of this mint, who now receives a per diem compensation of more than $6, shall be paid exceeding the sum of $6 for each working day; and no operative, fireman or helper, laborer or watchman, who now receives a per diem compensation of more than $3 and less than $5, shall be paid exceeding $3 per day, and only for actual service.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And hereafter the daily wages paid for services to each employé in this mint shall not exceed in amount 25 per cent. additional to the daily rate of wages paid for similar services to the employés in the Mint at Philadelphia.

Now, I desire to have read a paper showing the relative prices paid at these two mints.

Mr. PIPER. I object to that amendment as not pertinent to the amendment which I offered.

Mr. RANDALL. This is very material.

Mr. PIPER. It is not material to the subject of the amendment I offered.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to amend a different part of the paragraph from that to which the amendment of my colleague attaches.

Mr. PIPER. I object to that as an amendment to my amendment, which is merely to appropriate a specific amount.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman can offer it afterward. I desire to offer an amendment to the balance of the paragraph myself.

Mr. RANDALL. This amendment comes from the Committee on Appropriations, but let me say to gentlemen that no advantage will be taken of them.

Mr. PIPER. I desire first to settle the question as to the amount of the appropriation, and I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot withdraw the amendment, and I now ask for the reading of the comparative statement showing the wages paid at the United States mints at Philadelphia and San Francisco.

The Clerk read as follows:

Comparative statement showing the wages paid at the United States mints at Philadelphia and San Francisco.

Workmen.	Philadelphia.	San Francisco.
	Per diem.	Per diem.
Assayer's assistants	$3 00 to $6 00	$5 00 to $7 75
Melters	3 25 to 3 75	6 00 to 6 90
Helpers	2 90 to 3 00	5 00 to 5 25
Operatives in refinery	3 00 to 3 50	5 25 to 6 00
Rollers	2 90 to 3 50	5 25 to 6 25
Cutters	2 90 to 3 50	5 25 to 6 25
Cleaners	2 90 to 3 50	5 25 to 6 25
Annealers	2 90 to 3 50	5 25 to 6 25
Machinists	3 75 to 4 50	5 50 to 6 70
Engineers	2 90 to 4 75	5 00 to 9 00
Carpenters	3 00 to 5 00	5 25 to 5 75
Laborers	2 75 to 2 90	3 25 to 4 75
Adjusters	1 75	(*)

*$80 per month, (about $3 per day.)

Mr. RANDALL. It will be seen that these salaries at the San Francisco mint, as has been estimated by a member of the Committee on Appropriations, are about fifty-odd per cent. higher than those at the Philadelphia Mint. That is one reason why this excessive appropriation is necessary.

I now submit a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury which, among other things, will show that the Secretary has recently reduced the expenditures of the custom-house at San Francisco more than $60,000, and that not only has he reduced the force in numbers, but he has reduced the pay of the clerks 10 per cent.:

Now we are willing to give the employés at the San Francisco mint 25 per cent. more than the employés at the other mints, which allows them the difference between currency and gold and 10 per cent. additional for what is alleged to be the cost of living there over what it is in Philadelphia. But that is not the case. I do not believe from the information that I have that there is really any additional expense or increase of expense in living at San Francisco over what it is in the eastern cities.

Take for instance the necessaries of life. I find that nothing rates higher there, except perhaps clothing, and to allow 10 per cent. for that is quite adequate. It almost seems to my mind as though the salaries at the mint at San Francisco had been made out for the especial purpose of absorbing and consuming the entire amount of the liberal appropriations heretofore made. Now I wish to show also a statement of the earnings from refining of the San Francisco mint from August 24 to December 31, 1876; which shows that it was upon an average $14,000 a month for refining, making an aggregate of $168,000 for that purpose and a total aggregate of $393,000. The statement is as follows:

Statement of earnings of refining of San Francisco mint from August 24 to December 31, 1876.

From gold deposits	$23,915 89
From silver deposits	26,050 73
From silver purchases	7,856 54
Total	57,823 16

Or an average of about $14,000 per month.

If I am wrong I hope the gentleman from California will correct me; but I think that amount will be as much as was ever used heretofore.

Mr. PIPER. What does the gentleman say was the aggregate appropriation?

Mr. RANDALL. About $393,000, estimating the refining at only $14,000 a month, while I am advised by the Director of the Mint that it may reach $30,000 a month; and of course that will increase it.

Mr. PIPER. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and also my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] seem to misapprehend this whole subject of refining. The refining and parting of bullion at the San Francisco mint has nothing whatever to do with the subject of coinage. According to the paragraph in this bill, which was prepared by myself upon coercion, all the profits of refining and parting go to pay the expenses of refining and parting; not one cent of the money arising from that source can be made applicable to coinage. The gentleman must well know that if he has examined the paragraph which I was coerced to accept and have put in the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. I desire to state——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. O'NEILL. If that amendment is withdrawn——

Mr. RANDALL. I will withdraw the amendment if my colleague [Mr. O'NEILL] will renew it.

Mr. O'NEILL. I will do so.

Mr. RANDALL. Before my colleague proceeds I desire to state that the Post-Office Department makes no difference whatever in the rates of compensation paid to its employés in San Francisco and in other parts of the country.

Mr. PIPER. My five minutes had not expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposed the gentleman had concluded his remarks.

Mr. PIPER. Not at all. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has presented a schedule of the wages of workmen at Philadelphia and at San Francisco. I ask him if he supposes for a moment that the people of San Francisco live in the same manner and for the same amount of money that they do in the older States, in the overpopulated manufacturing village of Philadelphia, situated on Delaware Creek, a hundred and sixty miles from the ocean? Why, sir, the thing is supremely ridiculous. San Francisco is only thirty years old, a new city on the verge of the great Pacific Ocean, where men live and let live; not like the people in Philadelphia, who try to get everything and give nothing. [Laughter.] The gentleman ought not to make any such comparison, ought not to compare the empire city of the Pacific coast with an old overpopulated manufacturing country village on a mud creek. [Great laughter.]

Mr. O'NEILL. I am sorry that my friend from California [Mr. PIPER] has said what he has, because his remarks have drawn me from the line of argument which I wished to make. He speaks of this village on the Delaware River. Now, I want to tell him and the members of this House what that village is. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. They all know it.

Mr. O'NEILL. In the first place, it is a village that contains about 143,000 or 144,000 dwelling-houses.

Mr. PIPER. Only a village, nevertheless.

Mr. O'NEILL. It contains more dwelling-houses than the cities of New York, Brooklyn, and San Francisco combined. I want to tell the gentleman, moreover, that the village of Philadelphia, as he calls it, contains a population of 817,000 and over, about 200,000 of whom in prosperous times are engaged in manufacturing. It is a city containing nine or ten thousand manufacturing establishments, large and small. I do not wonder that the gentleman is asking for higher wages for operatives in his mint in San Francisco than he wants those in Philadelphia to get. I suppose it requires a large expenditure of money to get skilled mechanics and laborers to go to San Francisco. They must obtain them from eastern cities; they must offer inducements to get them to leave Philadelphia, Boston, New York, or other cities where skilled mechanics grow up and are educated.

I am sorry that the pay of the operatives in the Philadelphia Mint is reduced. I do not believe the laborer or the skilled mechanic there is sufficiently paid for the work he does. I for one am not in favor of cutting down the pay of skilled mechanics or laborers anywhere. Now, in reference to the cost of living, I do not believe that it costs any more for a good, steady, hard-working man to live in San Francisco any one day of the week than it would cost the same man to live in Philadelphia or New York. I do not believe that marketing is any higher there or that house rent is any higher than it is in Philadelphia for the same extent of accommodation. The comparison has often been made between Philadelphia and New York. Why, sir, the expenses of living in Philadelphia are not to be compared with the expenses of living in New York; for in Philadelphia people live, and do not merely exist; I mean the manner of the living of the skilled mechanic or laborer. There can really be no comparison made. In Philadelphia every man lives in a house, is a housekeeper, and gives his family a chance for health and life. In the city of New York families live in a room or in crowded apartments, and they do not pay the same rent for a room that a Philadelphia man does for a house.

I have always felt that an invidious and unjust distinction has been made by the Departments of the Government here in reference to salaries and wages paid in Philadelphia when compared with the prices of living in Philadelphia, the rule being that in New York the Government employé is entitled to somewhat higher pay than in Philadelphia. I think the superintendent of the Mint in Philadelphia has from time to time reduced the pay of the skilled mechanics and laborers in that institution, they being reliable, steady, and tried men, who earn and have earned the highest compensation, and that it is now far too low for the manner in which duty is done and the long hours of employment exacted, the work continuing from eight o'clock in the morning until five in the afternoon. He has been doing this for a year or two past, as circumstances, in his judgment, would permit, and the pay now is at the very lowest point; and I hope neither Congress nor the superintendent will make no more reductions, if they want men to live at all. I cannot see why they should pay two-fifths more wages in San Francisco for the same class of labor when it gets there than they pay in Philadelphia, and for labor, too, which is obtained from eastern cities, especially from Philadelphia. In the Mint in Philadelphia, as well as in the branches of the mint elsewhere throughout the country, you want skilled labor, and that skilled labor must be obtained from the eastern cities.

Now I am opposed to any reduction by legislation in the pay of the men employed in the Mint at Philadelphia; but I think that the pay of those employed in the San Francisco mint is far higher than it should be by comparison with the pay of those employed at Philadelphia.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to say to my colleague [Mr. O'NEILL] that we have not reduced at all the wages at Philadelphia.

Mr. O'NEILL. Well, is it not doing practically the same thing to reduce the aggregate of the appropriation? The effect of such reduction must be either to reduce the wages or to cause the discharge of employés. There is ample work for at least the number now employed. There is no sound reason for cutting down the pay either now or during the next fiscal year.

Mr. PAGE. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to state just now that they have not reduced the wages of labor at the Philadelphia Mint. I am very glad to hear that; but they do propose to reduce the wages in the city of San Francisco.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no.

Mr. PAGE. I say yes, Mr. Chairman; the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] when the bill was under consideration the other night, made a statement drawing a comparison between the number of pieces coined at San Francisco and the number coined at Philadelphia. He showed by a table that there were 14,000,000 more pieces coined in the Philadelphia Mint than in the mint at San Francisco; but he did not tell this House that most of those pieces coined at Philadelphia were cent pieces or nickels, and that the value of the 14,000,000 pieces was only $230,000. He did not inform the House that for such pieces no adjusting is required; they are run as you run bullets, no adjusting at all being necessary. But I find in the appropriation for the Philadelphia Mint a provision for an assistant adjuster and an assistant coiner, and three or four officers unknown to the San Francisco mint. I find that the aggregate appropriation for salaries of officers at the Philadelphia Mint is $31,000, against $19,000 for salaries of officers at the San Francisco mint. The mint at San Francisco coined over $31,000,000 last year, against $9,000,000 coined in the city of Philadelphia.

Now it is proposed by this bill to reduce this appropriation for San Francisco mint vastly below what it was last year. At the same time it is expected that the coinage at the San Francisco mint will be increased to over $50,000,000. It appears to me folly for the committee to attempt to cut down the appropriations for any of these mints, when it is a fact that under the law recently passed by Congress it will be necessary that $30,000,000 in subsidiary silver coin shall be put upon the market within the next year. How do the committee propose to make provision for this coinage of $30,000,000 which is to be put in circulation under the law recently passed?

Mr. RANDALL. We propose to arrange that matter in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. PAGE. I do not wish to be interrupted; wait till I get through, if you please.

Mr. RANDALL. You asked a question.

Mr. PAGE. You can answer it when your time comes.

Now in reference to the reduction of the wages of the laborers in San Francisco, this bill provides that those laborers shall not be paid more than $3 a day in greenbacks.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no.

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir; $3 a day. Here it is in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Look at the amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I am speaking of the bill. The amendment has not been adopted. The bill limits the wages of laborers at San Francisco, where they have been in the habit of receiving over $3 and not exceeding $5 a day, to $3 in greenbacks, when it is well known to every gentleman on this floor that this sum is equivalent to only about $2.50 in coin. It is to be considered also that laborers in California are compelled to pay in gold coin for their board, their clothing, and whatever else they may need to sustain life. In the State of California you cannot get a man to do any responsible work for $2.50 a day. There is no man on this floor who does not know this statement to be true

I desire to call attention to a letter from the superintendent of the San Francisco mint in reference to this question:

> The requirements in lines 901, 902, and 903, limiting the compensation of all employés of a certain grade to $3 per day in currency, would, if enforced, have the effect of substituting in place of intelligent, competent, and trustworthy men the very lowest order of manual labor. The compensation is about the same that is paid to those laborers who drive paving-blocks, shovel sand, and dig ditches, and would command a similar order of talent and a corresponding degree of responsibility.

Besides, sir, those laborers in the San Francisco mint are sometimes what are known as assistant engineers; and in case of the absence or disability of the engineers, those laborers whom you propose to hire for $2.50 a day would be compelled to run the engines.

One word in reference to the provision in this bill that moneys received for parting or assaying bullion may be used in meeting the expenses of the mint. Let me read what the superintendent of the San Francisco mint says in reference to this question. This officer has been there over six years; and I defy any contradiction to the statement that during his administration the affairs of that mint have been managed as economically as those of any other mint in the United States.

He says:

> The appropriation of $75,000 for "material and repairs, fuel, lights, chemicals, and other necessaries" is totally inadequate to the necessities of this mint, and which is in no degree benefited by the provision of the bill which permits the employment of the refining and parting charges to defray the cost of conducting the refinery. The charges thus collected would barely pay the cost of conducting the refinery alone. Under the terms of the bill, therefore, the only appropriation for the ordinary and contingent expenses for the ensuing year would be the sum of $75,000, the inadequacy of which amount has been shown in previous years in the performance of far less work than is now required to be executed. The appropriation of the last fiscal year was $75,000, with a deficiency which was provided for by Congress of $19,000, making a total of $94,000. The estimates were based on the proposed coinage of gold and trade-dollars alone, and the entire amount sufficed for a gold coinage of $26,000,000 and a silver coinage of $1,330,000, the great bulk of the latter being in trade-dollars.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. PAGE. One word more. You see by this statement of the superintendent of the mint that the provision of the bill which allows him to use this money collected for parting and refining bullion does not help the San Francisco mint at all.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to answer one point made by the gentleman from California, and then I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. KELLEY. I was recognized, and you can get the floor afterward. I renew your amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not waste time in vindicating that beautiful little village one hundred and sixty miles from the sea on Delaware Creek. [Laughter.] It is a nice little town, and my colleagues may take care of it.

I rise for the purpose, sir, of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that all the money to be appropriated for coining gold is simply wasted—a mere gratuity to the politicians of the cities in which there are mints. I do not think my friend from the magnificent city of San Francisco will like that.

Mr. PIPER. I like it very well; I am not a politician.

Mr. KELLEY. We have coined, between 1849 and 1870, $540,000,000 of gold. Where is it? It has all gone abroad as merchandise, and would have paid every dollar it has paid and some thousands more if it had gone abroad in mint-bars with the weight and fineness stamped on each bar. To reduce the bars to dollars, or two and one-half, or five, or ten, or twenty-dollar pieces, is to waste part of the gold, the silver, and copper of which the coin is made, is to use up dies, to salary a die-cutter, to involve the cost of machinery, acids, and fuel, to pay labor to the end that the net result shall be a smaller shipment of gold than otherwise would be made.

This is equally true of silver, of which we have coined since 1821 $133,900,463. Where are they? Where are all these coins? They are to be found only in the British sovereign, in the French louis, and in the German mark. Not one hundred million of them exist in American coin. You ship them as coin. When they arrive at the foreign country they are sent to the bank as bullion, and thence to the mint. They are weighed. One of them is assayed. They are then put into the melting-pot.

Why should we not have saved the $11,000,000 we have paid for this tomfoolery since 1860? Why should we go on wasting gold, silver, fuel, labor, in order to reduce the sum total of our exports of gold and silver? I do not raise the question of coining the fractional currency which we have made a substitute for the paper currency.

I have been unfortunate enough to take a ten-cent piece. They call it silver. It was made at San Francisco, and I am very sorry when I contemplate it, and only in that respect, that San Francisco is an American city, for I would rather this thing had been coined in Japan or China. The woman has no face. [Laughter.] The liberty-cap looks like a slouch night-cap. The pole upon which it rests, disappears before it gets up to it. [Laughter.] The cross-bars show that the die in which it had been stamped had never been smoothed. The little s which marks it as coming from San Francisco would be mistaken for an 8, or would be likely to be mistaken by a German for a bretzel. [Laughter.] Altogether the old coins, antedating the Christian era, gathered in the museum of the Philadelphia Mint, are elegant specimens of die-sinking and coining in comparison with this work from San Francisco which so overtops that little village on Delaware Creek, one hundred and sixty miles from the ocean!

My colleague said we sent the mechanics to do their work. God forefend he should prove that this work had been done by any Philadelphia mechanic, either in the cutting of the die or stamping the coin!

But I come back seriously, and ask this committee to consider why it shall go on coining money at the expense of nearly a million a year, when to reduce the metal to bars, to stamp it by the Mint as to weight and fineness would answer our purpose, and will continue to answer until the balance of trade shall have turned in our favor and we may hope to retain gold enough to become part of our circulating medium.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a point in the remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] to which I wish to reply, and that is where he makes allusion to the fact that an excessive amount of silver subsidiary coin is necessary to be minted during the coming fiscal year. The committee of course in reporting this bill took no notice of that fact, because the law had not then passed providing for the issue of subsidiary silver coin. Therefore whatever may be found necessary in excess of these appropriations for that purpose will be embraced in the sundry civil bill. I now ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. PIPER. I move to strike out in line 104, after the word "day"——

Mr. RANDALL. Wait until my amendment is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment is now pending.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on a vote on my amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee to permit a vote to be taken on my colleague's amendment to strike out $225,000 and insert $274,000; and the vote can then be taken on the amendment of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to have a vote on the amendment to the amendment which I have offered by the direction of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to the amendment of the gentleman from California, [Mr. PIPER.]

Mr. RANDALL'S amendment was read.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to a point of order. The amendment of my colleague is before the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and does not embrace any portion of the paragraph which the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to amend.

Mr. RANDALL. We must perfect the section first. My amendment bears directly on the total amount necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled that the amendment to the amendment is first in order, its object being to perfect the section.

The question being taken on Mr. RANDALL'S amendment, it was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is next on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. PIPER] to strike out "$225,000" and insert "$274,000."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 28, noes 96.

So (further count not being demanded) the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For material and repairs, fuel, lights, chemicals, and other necessaries, $75,000.

Mr. PIPER. I offer the following amendment:

In line 906, strike out "$75,000" and insert "$140,000."

Now, I purpose the labor question will not be held to enter into this matter. This is for what is called incidental expenses of the mint. These incidental expenses include all that which is necessary to conduct the refining and coining of money; such as acid, fuel, chemicals, wood and coal, crucibles, copper, gloves, mittens, canisters, zinc, borax, niter, and a number of other necessary articles to carry on this business.

Now I presume that Dr. Linderman, who is the Director of the Mints of the United States, ought to know something about the subject of coining. But it would appear that the Committee on Appropriations pay very little attention to what he says or what he advises. If this be so it is somewhat extraordinary, I must say. I would like to ask the gentlemen of that committee, and especially the chairman and the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] if they assume that they understand this subject better than the Director of the Mint? If Dr. Linderman does not understand this subject he ought to be discharged and some man placed there who does understand it.

Now, I will observe, Mr. Chairman, that in reply to my communication to Dr. Linderman, in which I asked him to designate the lowest possible amount for efficiently conducting this mint, he says that for incidental expenses $140,000 is absolutely necessary.

A number of the members of this House are in love with rag money, and among the most devoted of them is the gentleman from Philadelphia, [Mr. KELLEY.] He just now held up to view here a ten-cent piece and commented upon it, and looked at it with a microscope, I believe; at least he was holding over it a glass of some kind or other. Now, [holding up a ten-cent fractional-note,] here is another ten-cent piece. Look at this, gentlemen. Is not this a pretty thing, a nice thing for a gentleman to carry in his pocket? [Laughter.] It is so dirty that it even soils my hands, although I do not profess to be very fastidious. Then again the gentleman referred to the vast amount of money that has been expended in coinage. He did not say one word about the vast amount of money that has been expended in printing his rag idols that he so religiously worships morning, noon, and night. How much, will the gentleman tell us, has that cost since 1861, when you commenced making that rag money? Why, its cost has been almost a thousand millions, one way or another.

Only a few days ago, on the floor of this House, it was stated that it was necessary to appropriate at least $1,250,000 to continue the printing of this fractional rag currency, this fractional currency alone. And in this very bill, or in a bill passed a few days ago, which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in a very peculiar way brought in, there was appropriated I think $160,000 for some purpose or other connected with the printing of this beautiful rag money that my friend from Philadelphia so religiously worships.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is mistaken; I have introduced no such bill.

Mr. PIPER. It was reported by the committee of which you are chairman.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir.

Mr. PIPER. I beg leave to differ with you.

Mr. RANDALL. I brought in a bill appropriating $160,000 to print United States notes, not fractional currency.

Mr. PIPER. I understood the bill to be for a deficiency for some branch of your money-printing establishment.

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot help the gentleman's understanding.

Mr. PIPER. What was it for then?

Mr. RANDALL. The $163,000 was for the printing of the United States notes known as greenbacks, and not for printing fractional currency, as the gentleman stated.

Mr. PIPER. It was I believe to liquidate a deficiency, because these gentlemen up there in that rag-money establishment had exhausted their appropriations, for which they ought to have been punished probably if the law had been enforced.

Now, sir, I repeat in regard to my amendment that this is not for labor. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has seen fit to cut down the wages of the workingmen, of the mechanics and the artists that are employed in the mints. The next idea is to reduce the appropriations for acids and anthracite coal, which are imported from Pennsylvania. I think there will be a row raised over that.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe there is no tariff on anthracite coal.

Mr. PIPER. I believe it is imported from Pennsylvania. That is striking home. Of course if there be no money there will be no pay for the Pennsylvania anthracite coal.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RANDALL. I will give the gentleman half of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. PIPER] is entitled to two and a half minutes longer by the courtesy of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PIPER. Now, sir, all this is a tempest in a tea-pot. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, sets up to be the most economical man I have ever known in the course of my life, and I must say here on this floor, and I say it seriously, that it illy becomes him to claim to be so. It is not more than a year or a year and a half since the gentleman from Pennsylvania was not so economical with the public money. He even was so generous, Mr. Chairman, as to vote out of the Treasury, not prospectively but retrospectively, money into his own pocket. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the members of this House will take into consideration that it is an absolute necessity that is asked here for this amount, and the object of it is to buy material to coin good money, and not rag money.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman from California and to one or two other gentlemen who have spoken, I would like to say this, that whenever gentlemen want to be rude to me I think they ought not to select this floor for that purpose, because I do not believe that the public or the House takes any interest in that matter.

Now, in reference to the cutting down of this amount, I want to read a letter from a gentleman, whose name is at the disposal of any one here, whose education in his profession was in the Mint, who has devoted a life-time to mint subjects, and he writes to me in this language:

378 VANDERBILT STREET, BROOKLYN,
March 13, 1876.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I notice that the House Committee on Appropriations have recommended for the support of the mints and assay offices, for 1876–'77, $728,820, thus bringing the estimates to the average annual expenditures during several years immediately preceding the establishment of the mint bureau.

Under the present management the Director has asked for more than half a million of dollars beyond the appropriations for 1872–'73.

Dr. Linderman may plead that the business of 1871, when the sum of $723,707 was appropriated for the support of the mints and assay offices, amounted to only $23,258,380 in gold and silver coinage, and that only 4,795,386 pieces or coins were manufactured.

Anticipating a large coinage of silver the coming year, involving the manufacture of sixty or seventy million pieces, he may urge this as a reason why the expenditures for 1876–'77 may be expected to be twice as great as in 1871.

However specious may be that aspect of the case, (if he entertains it,) its force as an argument fails before the fact which I take the liberty of bringing to your notice.

In 1853 the coinage of gold and silver at the Mint in Philadelphia consisted of 69,708,661 pieces, of the value of $48,455,480, while the total expenditures were only $420,626.08; from which it appears that, as compared with 1871, the coinage was two and one-twelfth times greater in value and fourteen and one-half times greater than the number of pieces coined.

In your last letter you stated you would, as occasion requires, call on me for information. I have anticipated your call, owing to my sympathy in your expressed purpose to lop off every unnecessary dollar from the estimates submitted to your committee.

I assume that the Director will hardly accept the recommendation of the committee if he can gainsay it by any plausible exhibit. He may name for his argument what I have supposed he naturally would or he may present other reasons which do not occur to me.

And he concludes his letter with this marked language:

I fully concur with the committee as to the sum they have recommended for the support of the mints and assay offices being amply sufficient.

We have not relied upon our own knowledge, but we have sought information in every direction with reference to the amount of money necessary to carry on the mints. I ask for a vote.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to give the name of the writer of that letter, if he has no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I will show it to the gentleman here if he will come over from the other side of the House. I do not choose to drag private citizens into the debate, but the letter is here, and every gentleman can see it, and will recognize the writer as one of the worthiest men in the country as soon as they read the name.

Mr. PAGE. I will say that if private citizens come here with letters and documents they should be read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the gentleman had better not get into a fever-heat.

Mr. PAGE. I rose more especially for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he does not know that, since the passage of the act by this House and by the Senate for the coining of subsidiary silver coin for the redemption of fractional currency, it will be necessary to have at least $30,000,000 of silver coined within the next twelve or fifteen months, and if he believes, from the knowledge in his possession, that this appropriation is sufficient to carry on the San Francisco mint?

Mr. RANDALL. I stated before when I was on the floor that the committee had no estimate as to what amount would be necessary to mint the additional silver coin for the purpose of substituting it for the fractional currency, but when we get that information, whatever may be required in excess over the appropriation in this bill can be embraced in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. PAGE. The Superintendent of Mints, Dr. Linderman, who has been in consultation with the committee all the time, has addressed a letter in response to one from my colleague, [Mr. PIPER,] wherein he states that $140,000 is the least amount that should be appropriated by this House for material, repairs, fuel, lights, chemicals, and other necessaries for the mint at San Francisco.

Now, I do not suppose that there is any member of the Committee on Appropriations who desires to cripple the mint either at San Francisco or Nevada or at Philadelphia. I ask them, then, to be fair, and to give in this bill such additional appropriation as may be needed, since the fact has come to their knowledge that an additional appropriation will be necessary. If the amount asked for by my colleague [Mr. PIPER]—$140,000—is too much, then amend it and give something that will justify Congress before the people of this country; and do not make a little, insignificant appropriation of $75,000, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] himself knows and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] knows very well that this amount will render almost void all work at the San Francisco mint during the next year; it is wholly inadequate, and there is not a member of the committee who does not know the fact.

Mr. RANDALL. The appropriation last year for this purpose was only $86,000, and we have made it $75,000, and believe that amount sufficient.

The question was taken on Mr. PIPER'S amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at Carson, Nevada:

For salary of assayer in charge, $2,500; melter, $2,250; and two principal clerks, at $1,800 each; in all, $8,350.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment:

Strike out all of that paragraph after the word "Nevada" down to the close of the paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

For salary of superintendent, $2,700; for assayer, melter, refiner, and coiner, at $2,250 each; chief clerk, $2,250; cashier and book-keeper, at $2,000 each; weigh clerk, voucher clerk, and computing clerk, at $1,800 each; in all $21,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For wages of workmen and adjusters, $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I move to amend by striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$40,000." The next clause is as follows:

For materials and repairs, fuel, light, charcoal, chemicals, and other necessaries, $20,000.

I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to amend that paragraph by striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$25,000."

Mr. WOODBURN. I move to amend the amendment so as to make the amounts respectively $85,000 and $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendments must be to the paragraph now under consideration.

Mr. WOODBURN. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations moved two amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I will move the first amendment now, and the other when that paragraph has been read. My amendment is to make the sum for workmen and adjusters $40,000.

Mr. WOODBURN. I move to amend so as to make it $85,000. In moving that amendment I feel that I am in perfect accord with that spirit of retrenchment that is manifested in every line of this bill. But I regret that I cannot follow the example of a gentleman on the other side of the House, who a few days ago gave as a reason for supporting this bill that it had been reported from a committee composed of honorable and intelligent gentlemen. I am at a loss to understand what train of reasoning led the committee to recommend the appropriation of $20,000 or even of $40,000 for the wages of workmen and adjusters at Carson City, if they intend to maintain a mint in reality there, when the fact is that at the last session of Congress an appropriation of $85,000 was made for that purpose, and that sum was found to be insufficient, and an additional appropriation of $16,000 had to be made at the same session, making in all $101,000 for the wages of workmen and adjusters in the mint at Carson City.

Now, I would like to know upon whose suggestion the Committee on Appropriations acted when they came to the conclusion that this sweeping reduction was necessary. If there is any want of economy in the conduct of the Carson City mint then I would have no objection to the cutting down of the appropriation. But the Director of the Mint, Dr. Linderman, after a thorough and careful examination into the operations of the mint at Carson City, commended the skill and fidelity with which those operations had been conducted. Since that time has any charge of extravagance been wafted to the ears of Dr. Linderman or any information been laid before the Committee on Appropriations to justify the reduction of appropriation from $101,000 to $40,000?

It is claimed that, because a provision is inserted in the appropriation bill which passed the House the other day allowing the charges for melting and parting bullion to be applied to defraying the expenses of that operation, there ought to be a reduction of the appropriation. The superintendent of the San Francisco mint, an officer that the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] characterizes as the best mint superintendent in the United States——

Mr. LUTTRELL. One of the best.

Mr. WOODBURN. That superintendent says that by reason of the enactment of that clause in the appropriation bill there ought to be no reduction of the appropriation for this purpose; that the charges made to depositors will not suffice to pay the expenses of carrying on the refinery alone. Now, I would like to know from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if Dr. Linderman suggested this reduction. In an interview which I had with Dr. Linderman he handed me a copy of an amendment which he said he had given to the chairman of the committee, which proposed to appropriate $50,000 for the wages of workmen and adjusters. I conferred with my Senators in reference to this matter, and one of them assured me that Dr. Linderman never pretended that that was a sufficient amount to carry on the mint at Carson City, but he said it was all that could be obtained from this Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. In reference to the Nevada mint, I take it that the original purpose of the Committee on Appropriations was to do away with the mint at that place and to establish an assay office there. Upon the urgent solicitation of the Director of the Mint we changed that purpose, and he submitted an estimate, which I will incorporate in my remarks, upon which we subsequently acted, conforming in part to his views. In this subsequent estimate he asked that $50,000 be appropriated for wages of workmen and adjusters; the committee recommend that $40,000 be given for that purpose. He asked that $30,000 be given for materials, acid, repairs, and other incidental expenses; the committee recommend that $25,000 be given, as we deem that amount entirely adequate. I suppose this mint will receive in addition some benefit from the refining of gold, as provided for in this bill. That is as far as we deem it at all essential to go; in fact we deem that quite adequate.

Mr. WOODBURN. Is that the estimate of Dr. Linderman?

Mr. RANDALL. It comes from his Bureau.

Mr. PAGE. I move to strike out the last word, and will yield my time to the gentleman from Nevada, [Mr. WOODBURN.]

Mr. WOODBURN. Does not Dr. Linderman ask to have $65,000 for incidental expenses?

Mr. RANDALL. No; he asks us to leave the mint at Carson City, and give $50,000 for wages of workmen and adjusters, and we propose to give $40,000.

Mr. PAGE. I ask that that estimate of Dr. Linderman be read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Estimate of appropriations required for the mint at Carson for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

[To be introduced as an amendment to the appropriation bill.]

Salaries:	Amount required.
Superintendent	$3,000
Assayer, melter and refiner, and coiner, at $2,500 each	7,500
Chief clerk	2,500
Cashier and book-keeper, at $2,000 each	4,000
Weigh clerk, voucher clerk, and computing clerk, at $2,000 each	6,000
Assayer's clerk	1,600
Wages of workmen and adjusters	50,000
Contingent expenses:
Materials, acids, repairs, and other incidental expenses	30,000
Total	104,600

The estimates for wages and contingent expenses are reduced from the original estimates $136,000. The amounts estimated for these items will be sufficient, if the proviso contained in the appropriation bill, allowing the charges for parting and refining to be used in defraying the expenses of those operations, should become a law. The salaries estimated for are the same as now paid.

Mr. WOODBURN. I find in a letter signed by Dr. Linderman, appended to the report of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the only reason he assigns why there should be a reduction of the appropriation of former years for the Carson mint is the passage of the appropriation bill with the provision relating to the charges of melting and refining. As I said before, the superintendent of the San Francisco mint states emphatically that there should be no reduction of the appropriation on that ground. But admitting that to be the fact, the Carson City mint last year earned $50,000 for melting, refining, and parting bullion. The whole appropriation for wages and adjusters and for incidental expenses was $210,000. Now if you deduct $50,000, the total amount of the earnings of the Carson mint, from $210,000 we have $160,000 remaining, instead of $80,000 as proposed in the amendment suggested by Dr. Linderman.

Mr. PAGE withdrew his pro forma amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment it was not agreed to; there being ayes 22, noes not counted.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. RANDALL, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For materials and repairs, fuel, light, charcoal, chemicals, and other necessaries, $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. By direction of the committee, I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out "$20,000" and inserting "$25,000."

Mr. WOODBURN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "25" and inserting "100," so as to make the amount of the appropriation $100,000.

Last year with an appropriation of $210,000 there was coined at the Carson City mint $4,288,953. I have in my hand a statement signed by the superintendent of that mint showing that this very year it is coining at the rate of $500,000 a month or $6,000,000 a year; and with a slight appropriation of $150,000 in order to build an addition to the Carson mint, the coining machinery being duplicated, it is enabled, instead of coining $6,000,000 a year, to coin $20,000,000 annually. I submit to the Committee on Appropriations and to this Committee of the Whole whether it does not require a greater appropriation to coin $6,000,000 than to coin $4,250,000? Last year we had an appropriation of $100,000 for chemicals, fuel, and incidental expenses; yet with a large increase of coinage it is proposed to reduce this appropriation to a mere fraction of what it has been. We do not want the mint at Carson City for the purpose of supporting the officers. I am satisfied that this appropriation for workmen and adjusters and for incidental expenses, being scarcely more than is appropriated to run the assay office in New York City, will reduce our mint at Carson to a mere assay office.

By the report of the Director of the Mint I find that $12,000,000 in gold and silver is paid out annually as the current expenses of the mines at Virginia City alone. The mint at Carson City now coins only $6,000,000 a year. In order to meet the wants of our people we are obliged to send a part of our bullion across the Central Pacific Railroad and back again, through the express company of Wells, Fargo & Co., paying from four to five dollars on every thousand. I submit, sir, that if by the appropriation proposed in this bill the mint at Carson is curtailed or crippled in any way the only institution in America that will be benefited by it is the express company of Wells, Fargo & Co.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make any factious opposition to this bill; and I do not suppose that anything that I or my colleagues or other members from the Pacific coast can say will have any influence in changing what this committee has already determined upon. But, sir, in justice to our people and as a Representative from the Pacific coast, I cannot refrain from entering my protest against this attempt to almost destroy the mint at Carson City, Nevada. It is well known to this committee that within twelve miles of that mint there is taken out from two mines alone over $5,000,000 a month. By railroad this bullion can be taken within ten feet of the mint at Carson City. But by this appropriation you reduce this mint almost to an assay office, although, as the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. WOODBURN] has just said, that mint is now coining $6,000,000 a year. It requires $15,000,000 annually in coin to pay the laboring-men upon the Comstock lode. But the result of this appropriation will be to compel the owners of those mines to ship their bullion to San Francisco or to Philadelphia, paying to the express company of Wells, Fargo & Co. a large amount for freight or expressage, besides a heavy insurance. The railroads have recently refused to take this bullion over their roads at all; and hence parties shipping it are compelled to do so through Wells, Fargo & Co., paying this enormous expense in the way of transportation and insurance. Now I ask this committee whether it is fair that the mint at Carson City, within twelve miles of the richest mines in the world, where so large an amount of money is required to be minted in order to pay the laboring-men in those mines, should be reduced almost to an assay office?

As a matter of business, would this committee undertake to locate a saw-mill upon an open prairie, where there was no timber in the vicinity? It seems to me equally bad policy to maintain the Mint at Philadelphia when there is no mine of any value within three thousand miles, while you destroy the mint at Carson City, within twelve miles of the richest mine in the world, compelling the mine-owners to send their bullion hundreds and thousands of miles, at great expense, to be minted, and then to incur a similar expense in having it returned as coin.

I do not suppose that anything which can be said by any member of this House will have influence upon the committee to induce them to change any provision of this bill which has been determined upon. But, sir, I thank the people of this country that this House is not the only body that will have the determination of this question; that it will have to be submitted to another body, which, in my judgment, will see that justice is done to the great producing interests of the Pacific coast.

Mr. RANDALL. A mint ought never to have been located there.

The amendment of Mr. WOODBURN to the amendment of Mr. RANDALL was not agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mint at Denver, Colorado:

For salaries of assayer in charge, $2,500; melter, $2,250; two clerks, at $1,600 each; in all, $7,950.

For wages of workmen, $10,000.

For fuel, lights, acids, chemicals, crucibles, repairs, and other necessaries, $3,000.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

And for the purpose of enabling the said mint at Denver and the assay office at Helena to make returns to depositors with as little delay as possible, the provisions of section 3545 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall hereafter apply to said mint and assay office as well as to the other mints and assay offices of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to use, as far as he may deem it proper and expedient, for payment to depositors of bullion at said mint and assay office, coin certificates representing coin in the Treasury and issued under the provisions of section 254 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; all of said acts and duties to be performed under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. And it shall be lawful to apply the moneys arising from charges collected from depositors at said mint and assay office pursuant to law to the defraying of the expenses thereof, including labor, materials, wastage, and use of machinery; and only so much of the appropriations herein made shall be used for said mint and assay office as shall be necessary for the operation of the same after the moneys arising from the charges aforesaid shall have been exhausted as herein provided. But in no event shall the expenditures of said mint and assay office exceed the amount of the specific appropriation herein made for same.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair as Speaker pro tempore,) and a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 61) to remove the political disabilities of James E. Slaughter, of Alabama; and

A bill (S. No. 485) for the relief of Julia E. Seeley, postmaster at Great Barrington, Massachusetts.

It further announced the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, asked for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as managers of said conference on its part Mr. SARGENT, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, and Mr. WITHERS.

It further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes, asked for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as managers of said conference on its part Mr. MORRILL of Maine, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. DAVIS.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session, (Mr. COX in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is the amendment moved by the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. PATTERSON.]

Mr. RANDALL. I rise to a point of order on that amendment, that it is new legislation, not in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. MAGINNIS. What is your objection to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania raises the point of order that the amendment moved by the gentleman from Colorado is new legislation. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Colorado on the point of order.

Mr. PATTERSON. I had supposed the gentleman from Pennsylvania would support his point of order by argument. Certain it is if legislation that has already taken place in the consideration of this bill is not objectionable to this point of order my amendment is not. Under the rule, (I presume it is Rule 120,) it cannot be said new legislation may not be ingrafted on appropriation bills. On the contrary, the latter clause of Rule 120 expressly provides that new legislation may be ingrafted upon appropriation bills provided two things concur, first, that it is germane to the subject-matter, and next that it retrenches expenditure. The gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Indiana both argued very strenuously in opposition to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] a few days ago in support of just such legislation, because, as the gentleman from Indiana said, when we had under consideration the subject of the San Francisco mint they proposed by the amendment to change what the gentleman from Indiana termed public work into private work, or a public enterprise into a private enterprise. And notwithstanding that open declaration of the gentleman from Indiana and supported by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the Chair held it was germane because it related to mints, and also as the Chair stated he could not see it did not retrench expenditures.

Now, upon this point of order I would simply suggest this amendment is germane. It relates directly to the carrying on of the mint at Denver and the assay office at Helena. It also proposes in substance, as the amendment of the committee proposed while they were discussing the San Francisco mint, to apply the proceeds arising in the conduct of the mint to defraying the expenses of the mint. And we expressly provide in this amendment, in any event, under no contingency shall the amount for carrying on the mint and assay office exceed the amount of the specific appropriation provided in this bill. The chairman of the Committee of the Whole epitomized the arguments of the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Pennsylvania in a few brief, pertinent words, as follows:

The Chair would certainly hold that this is germane to this section of the bill. The Chair cannot see but what this clause tends toward economy, toward retrenchment. It does not add to the appropriation certainly. It takes no money from the Treasury. It prevents money from going from the Treasury. The Chair will therefore overrule the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, although there is little more legislation in this than in the legislation proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Indiana, it does not alter the principle of the rule as announced by the Chair, and if there is any elasticity at all to the rule it should be like Paddy's suspenders, long enough for a man and short enough for a boy, and it should not apply to members of the Appropriation Committee and exclude the humblest member on this floor.

Mr. RANDALL. This provides for the issuing of coin certificates not now authorized by law, and that is not in the line of retrenchment as provided for in the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the Revised Statutes before him, the Chair will ask him to read section 3545.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will read it to the Chair. The bill is simply to place the mint in Denver and the assay office in Helena on an equality with the mint at San Francisco, at Carson City, Nevada, and the assay office in New York and Mint at Philadelphia. It is positive in nothing in reality, since it leaves it at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury whether he will or not put the provision in force at these places. It simply provides, if the Secretary of the Treasury thinks it will be conducive to the public interest, that the same favors and privileges extended to these other points may be extended to the two points mentioned in my amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. What section does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. PATTERSON. Section 3545, which I will now read:

SEC. 3545. For the purpose of enabling the mints and the assay office in New York to make returns to depositors with as little delay as possible, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to keep in such mints and assay office, when the state of the Treasury will admit thereof, such an amount of public money, or bullion procured for the purpose, as he shall judge convenient and necessary, out of which those who bring bullion to the said mints and assay office may be paid the value thereof, in coin or bars, as soon as practicable after the value has been ascertained. On payment thereof being made, the bullion so deposited shall become the property of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury may, however, at any time withdraw the fund or any portion thereof.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the point of order I wish to submit that the fact that this provision requires a deposit of funds to meet drafts in certain contingencies, or authorizes the deposit of funds for that purpose, is in conflict with the proposition that it is a measure of positive retrenchment. At the best the measure can only be said to be negative in its effects; and that can hardly be said when the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to place funds at given points to meet certain drafts upon the mints.

Mr. MAGINNIS. In answer to the point of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] I will say that the very object of this amendment is to avoid the United States having any funds deposited at the mints and assay offices referred to. On the contrary, the object of the whole thing is this: That we may put our gold bars there and take paper of the United States payable at New York. And it certainly is in the interest of economy and retrenchment, because we are willing to give the Government our gold and silver simply for its paper certificates of deposit; and the very fact that there are thirty millions of such securities now outstanding shows the propriety of this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the Government have to ship that, and will not that involve some cost?

Mr. MAGINNIS. The cost of assay and transportation is deducted. So that this will give the Government the use of perhaps five or ten millions of dollars of gold in exchange for its paper. This bill has passed the House twice already.

Mr. PATTERSON. It certainly seems to me that the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in his last remarks to the House was not well weighed. It only shows an attempt on his part to escape from the full force and effect of his own reasoning and his own argument upon a similar proposition a few days ago. He says now that the increased expenditure arises from the fact that gold may be locked up at one of these places. Why, sir, it is the property of the Government; it is no expenditure of money.

Under a section of the Revised Statutes the Secretary of the Treasury has the right to withdraw it at any moment. That is in the very section which we seek to incorporate, and it is simply giving to the Secretary of the Treasury the right to use bullion that may be deposited at these two points, if in his judgment the public interests and the public necessities demand it. If they do not, he need not do it. He is not compelled to use it at Carson, or San Francisco, or New York, or Philadelphia. He has a right to withdraw the fund entirely. He need not issue a single dollar of the coin certificates.

We simply say, whenever in his judgment the public interests require or will permit, that bullion may be received in this way; that he may consider these two points, as well as those already authorized by law. And this, Mr. Chairman, certainly does not increase—on the contrary, as the Chair well said, it may curtail—expenditures; because the amount that may be received at these mints may be amply sufficient to pay the necessary expenses of carrying on the mints; and in that event not one dollar of the specific appropriation is used.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule on the question. The first portion of this amendment seems to be new legislation, but it is legislation which is germane to the subject-matter of the bill, and the Chair would be reluctant to rule it out of order. It qualifies the appropriation proposed to be made. As to the latter portion of the amendment, the Chair reiterates what was said on a previous occasion. It seems to be in the line of retrenchment. That is a matter which it is very difficult for the Chair to determine positively. The Chair, however, out of abundant caution, would overrule the point of order, and put the question on the amendment to the committee.

The question being taken on Mr. PATTERSON'S amendment, there were—ayes 44, noes 43; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. PATTERSON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 48.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the following amendment:

Add at the end of the paragraph the following:

It shall be the duty of those in charge of the mints and assay offices of the United States to make assays of ores brought to them for such purpose, and to give certificates under their official signatures of the results of such assays, and there shall be charged for such assays only the actual cost of the same to the United States. And there shall be an accurate account kept at each mint and assay office of all assays made as above provided, and return made of same in each report made by the person in charge, as by law or regulation required, and the charges for such assays shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States or expended in defraying the expenses of such mints or assay offices as may be by law provided.

Mr. HOLMAN. It cannot be pretended that that is in the interest of economy, and it is certainly new legislation. It is entirely in conflict with the provisions of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. This is substantially the same proposition as has been already ruled in order.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will say to the House that I am not particular after the explanation that I make upon this question whether the amendment is adopted at all or not. But I can show to the House that it is for the purpose of correcting a great and a glaring abuse in all of the mints and assay offices in this country wherever the assay of ores is carried on.

Take the mints and assay offices at Denver, at Carson City, and at San Francisco. One of the principal businesses that is conducted there is the assaying of ore. The prospecter discovers a lode, and he brings a specimen of the ore to the assay office under the Government control for the purpose of having that ore assayed. And in every instance, Mr. Chairman, the assayer in charge makes the assays in the Government assay office, signs his name officially as United States assayer, charging the minimum price, $3, for each assay—and may make a charge largely in excess of that—puts the proceeds into his own pocket, and returns not one dollar of it into the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that is the effect of this measure, and if that is the practice of the mints, it is certainly contrary to the information which the Committee on Appropriations have received on that subject, and the amendment ought to be adopted.

I would ask that the amendment be reported again.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is exactly the practice; I have the official report here.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, but I suggest to the gentleman from Colorado that he strike out the last clause of the amendment after the words "Treasury of the United States."

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no objection to that; none at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will make another inquiry of the gentleman from Colorado. As to the provision that assaying shall be done at the actual cost to the Government, I take it for granted that inasmuch as assaying is rather a private business than a matter of public concern, the charge proposed here is less than that paid to the private assay offices in various sections of the country where assaying is generally done. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Colorado what is the usual charge for assaying? I find that there was a revenue derived by the Government last year from the assaying of bullion, although not large.

Mr. PATTERSON. The assaying of ores.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find that the assaying of ores has been a source of revenue to the Government, though not large; but some revenue has been derived at each one of the offices. Now, if the Government charges no more than actual cost, why, then, of course the Government must be charging more according to the terms of this provision than is charged by private parties having assay offices. What are the charges now at private assay offices?

Mr. PATTERSON. I will state briefly that owing to the official positions occupied by the assayers in charge of the mints and assay offices, they are enabled to and do procure from those who require assays of ores a larger price than private assayers. I had it from gentlemen from Colorado who were here not a week ago that they paid a minimum price of $3 in Denver at the assay office, while private parties were willing to make the assay for a dollar, a dollar and a half, or two dollars, but on account of the significance and importance that attaches to the signatures of the assay officers acting in a public capacity, miners are willing to pay a much larger price. I imagine that in a matter so important as the assay of ores, where the assays are used for the purpose of disposing of mines in the eastern market and in Europe, for the purpose of giving value to them when people are far remote from the mines, the Government should, so far as it is in its power, have it conducted under the control of public officers and let the assay have the stamp and effect of going from officers of the Government. But certainly in doing that the Government should charge no more than it costs the Government.

Now, so far as the question of revenue is concerned there were returns made last year from two assay offices of the assay of ores; one from Philadelphia amounting to $156.95, and the other from New York amounting to $305. With those exceptions not a single assay office or mint in the country made a return to the Government of the many thousands of dollars taken from the miners and mine-owners for doing that kind of work. That is a great wrong; it is a wrong to the miner; it is a wrong to the private assayer. It is using the public authority and the public means, the edifices, the offices of the Government, for the purpose of doing their private work and putting the proceeds of their private work into their pockets, and, in my opinion, using the public materials for the purpose of carrying on these assays. A miner goes to a mint in my town. I know that tons of ore are taken in at the public mint and they are returned with the assay from the public mint and the miners pay the minimum price of $3, and in many cases a much larger sum, in return for the assay being made by the Government officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think that the assaying of bullion or ore is a business that the Government has anything to do with; but that practice seems to have prevailed. It is impossible for the House without further information to tell what would be a reasonable charge. It is quite certain though that the Government should not charge simply the cost of assaying, for you have to take into consideration all the expenses incurred by the Government in carrying on an assay. I therefore move to strike out the words "actual cost" where they occur and to insert in lieu thereof, "at such price not less than actual cost to the United States which the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe."

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no objection whatever to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. PATTERSON, as amended, was then adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office at New York:
For salary of superintendent, $4,000; for assayer and for melter and refiner, $2,700 each; chief clerk and weighing clerk, $2,500 each; paying, bar, and warrant clerk, $2,000; calculating clerk, $1,800; and for assayer's first assistant, $2,250; and for the assayer's second assistant, $2,150; in all, $22,600.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer from the Committee on Appropriations the following amendment: Strike out that paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Assay office at New York:
For salary of superintendent, $4,000; for assayer, $2,700; for melter and refiner, $2,700; chief clerk, $2,500; weighing clerk, $2,500; paying clerk, $2,000; bar clerk, $1,800; warrant clerk, $2,000; two calculating clerks, $1,800 each; for assayer's first assistant, $2,250; for assayer's second assistant, $2,050; for assayer's third assistant, $2,000; in all, $30,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Mint at New Orleans, Louisiana:
For superintendent in charge, for care and protection of the building and machinery and other Government property therein, $4,000.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move as a substitute for the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office to be conducted in the mint at New Orleans, Louisiana:
For salaries, assayer in charge, $2,500; melter, $2,000, and clerk, $1,500; wages of workmen, $3,000; fuel, fluxes, acids, and other incidental expenses, $5,000; in all, $14,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must make a point of order on that amendment, that there is no assay office established by law at New Orleans.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is no change in the law proposed by my amendment, no new legislation; it provides for the mere working of the mint at New Orleans, which is already established there, the buildings and machinery in perfect order. The amendment provides for conducting the establishment as an assay office instead of for the purpose of coinage, and is not any new legislation whatever—no change of law that should subject it to the point of order raised.

Mr. HOLMAN. It may propose an assay office in the same building, but it is entirely separate and distinct from the mint.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, upon the statement of the fact that there is no law establishing an assay office at New Orleans.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whether it is not the fact that the assay office has heretofore been conducted in the mint at New Orleans, and there has been only an absence of an appropriation for that purpose for several years? No change whatever has been made in the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. As an incident to a mint there is of course assaying. But as a separate and distinct establishment, there is no such thing as a separate and distinct assay office at New Orleans, such as this amendment proposes to establish. The law does not know the establishment at New Orleans as an assay office. It knew it simply as a mint in which assaying was done incidentally. The proposition now is to make an assay office.

Mr. GIBSON. I would say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that assaying has been done in the city of New Orleans; and in the appropriation bill of last year there was an appropriation of $14,000 made for assaying in the mint at New Orleans. That, I understand, is the purpose of the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, [Mr. O'BRIEN,] to continue the business which has hitherto been conducted in the mint at New Orleans, that is, the business of assaying.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend bear in mind that the assaying in the New Orleans mint, as is the case in all mints, was a mere incident of the mint? This proposition is to establish by law in an appropriation bill an assay office separate and distinct from the mint.

Mr. GIBSON. No, sir; that is not the purpose of this proposition. This proposition is intended to do just what has hitherto been done in the mint at New Orleans, to conduct an assay office in the mint at New Orleans. For years before the war appropriations were made for this purpose, and an appropriation of $14,000 was made last year for this precise purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] read the law to which he refers?

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Chair will allow me I will read it. I have here the appropriation bill for last session, which provides:

For the mint at New Orleans: For salaries of superintendent, $3,500; for assayer, $2,500; for wages of workmen and adjusters, $3,000; for fuel, acids, chemicals, copper, freights, stationery, gas, water, and other necessary materials, $3,000.

Now, all of these are incidental to a mint. The gentleman does not propose to perpetuate the mint at New Orleans, for that has been entirely abandoned; it is not even recommended. But it is proposed to establish an assay office in the building there, not as incident to a mint, but a separate and distinct assay office. The point I make is that there is no law establishing an assay office separate and distinct at New Orleans, but only as incidental to the mint at that place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I modify my amendment, and ask the Clerk to read it as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the words "mint at New Orleans, Louisiana," the following:
For salaries of assayer in charge, $2,500; melter, $2,000; one clerk, $1,500; wages of workmen, $3,000; fuel, fluxes, acids, and other incidental expenses, $5,000; in all, $14,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that an appropriation for the mint?

Mr. MOREY. It is an appropriation for the mint at New Orleans.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is simply an assay office.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The proposition contained in the amendment I have offered was fully considered by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and met the unanimous approval of that committee, enlightened by the views of the Director of the Mint. He stated to the committee that this assay office should be established at New Orleans; not only that, but he produced before us testimony which was at least conclusive to my mind that it would be economy for the Government as well as a matter of great interest and importance to the great city of New Orleans to have this assay office established there.

The amount of bullion which is brought annually to the port of New Orleans equals the amount which is purchased in and which is brought to the great city of New York, where an assay office is continued under the terms of this bill at an expense of $60,000. The proposition contained in this amendment is simply to re-establish the work at the city of New Orleans by the economical expenditure of $14,000. Why, Mr. Chairman, a single line of steamers brings to that port the enormous amount of nearly $6,000,000 of bullion every year, and with the amount received from other sources the aggregate reaches over $8,000,000 a year. If you will turn to the report of the Director of the Mint it will be found that the amount assayed at New York last year of bullion brought to that port and purchased there amounted to a little over $9,000,000. Yet it is proposed to continue the appropriation for that assay office, and within the last few minutes the aggregate has been increased upon the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the enormous sum of $60,000. Why, sir, the Philadelphia Mint, which is under the care and patronage of the chairman of this committee——

Mr. RANDALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I have nothing to do with it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If the gentleman declines to be responsible for the mint in his own city, then I suppose there is nobody here who represents it. I will say, however, that the expense of conducting the Mint at Philadelphia aggregates $250,000 annually, while the amount of bullion coined there does not exceed $9,000,000. Yet when New Orleans, the great city of the South, the commercial emporium of that great empire watered by the Mississippi, asks for the restoration of an establishment which will cost but the insignificant sum of $14,000 annually, we find the proposition met at every point by questions of order coming from the distinguished gentlemen who so well represent the Committee on Appropriations.

The amount of expenditures at the assay office at Helena, Montana, where the amount of bullion assayed does not reach $1,000,000 a year, is $12,500.

Mr. MAGINNIS. That is a mistake.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I take as my authority for this statement the Director of the Mint.

Mr. RANDALL. Read the letter of the Director of the Mint.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] that he should discuss the point of order, which the Chair understands to be still pending.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Why, Mr. Chairman, I understood that the point of order was overruled.

Mr. RANDALL. It was reserved that the gentleman from Maryland might make his speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not overruled the point of order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Of course, if the point of order is still pending, I will address my remarks to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not overruled the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the point is insisted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point is insisted upon, the Chair will make his decision. The Chair cannot regard it as his province to take this matter from the decision of the House by deciding that an assay office may not be incidental to a mint. The former appropriations, as the Chair observes, read in this way:

> Mint at New Orleans:
> Salary of superintendent, assayer, &c.——

Showing that assaying belongs as an incident to the mint. The present appropriation has for its heading "Mint at New Orleans." The Chair cannot feel it his duty to sustain the point of order, but must overrule it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The decision of the Chair is not only wise, but it is in the interest of justice, and for the gratification of my friends of the Committee on Appropriations I will say that it is also in the interest of economy.

Mr. RANDALL. Read that letter.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am invited to read to the House a letter received from Dr. Linderman, the Director of the Mint. I will say that it is supplementary to the opinion and advice which he gave to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. RANDALL. My point is that the letter does not recommend this.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It does recommend it. The Director of the Mint, who is quoted here approvingly by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whenever his opinion happens to coincide with that of the distinguished chairman and disapprovingly whenever the eminent gentleman from Pennsylvania chooses to disagree with the Director of the Mint, was before the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures. He spent with us an entire morning; and the result of a long interview, in the presence not only of myself but of distinguished members of the committee who more thoroughly understand this question than I could possibly do, was the expression of his opinion that, while it was not advisable to establish new mints in different sections of the country or in fact at any place where they had been proposed, it was not only advisable but a matter of justice to the people of New Orleans, where this work has been carried on for years, that this assay office should be restored there; and more than that, that it was in the interest of the entire country. And he mentioned to us the fact that while by reason of the improved machinery the work could be conducted as thoroughly there, perhaps, as at any other assay office in the country, the wages were such that the work could be done more cheaply. He mentioned the further fact that, in view of the amount of bullion coming into that port, and now distributed among other assay offices east and west, and which should be properly assayed there, it would be economical to re-establish this assay office.

The letter to which I referred is as follows:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT, April 9, 1876.
> I can add nothing to what I stated when before your committee. My opinion is that assaying facilities at New Orleans will prove useful to the people of that city.
> H. R. LINDERMAN, Director.
> Hon. WILLIAM J. O'BRIEN.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not care anything about that letter. I know what Dr. Linderman says.

Sir, we have acted with full information on this subject. There has never been a bill before this House upon which there have been such persistent efforts to load it down with unnecessary appropriations. Heretofore, at least on this side of the House, the struggle has been to reduce expenditures, but now the steady and remorseless effort is made on every item to increase them. Why, take the New Orleans assay office, which the gentleman from Baltimore is so anxious to press upon us at a cost of twelve or fourteen thousand dollars. We appropriated ten or twelve thousand dollars last year, and I believe against the judgment of the Director. Every person who knows anything at all knows there is no necessity for the mint at New Orleans. The only possible pretense or excuse for it is that there is a building there. Last year we appropriated that much money. What is the result? Not a thing done, except to spend $9,722.34. That is the result of one year's experience. Not a thing done; a perfect dead blank, except the expenditure of $9,722.34. Yet the gentleman from Maryland desires to perpetuate this source of expenditure. It is reasonably to be expected the Committee on Appropriations would know the necessity for a mint at New Orleans before they made an appropriation simply to superintend the building to prevent it falling into decay, and under the advice of the Director of the Mint they would have abolished it entirely and sold out the property, but unhappily the property is held by an uncertain title, and it is possible, if directed to be sold at once, the property would revert to whoever was the original owner. That is the only excuse which exists at all for perpetuating this institution in any form as a source of expenditure for a single hour.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. REAGAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana controvert the fact there are eight or nine millions of bullion brought into New Orleans in annual trade?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should not be surprised at it. I suppose the bullion is brought to Baltimore and Boston, and New Orleans and Charleston, and almost all the cities of the country.

Mr. GIBSON. Does not the gentleman from Indiana know that the appropriation last year was not sufficient to pay the expense of coining, and for that reason no coinage was done?

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriations were quite liberal last year for this New Orleans mint, for we have for superintendent $3,500; assayer, $2,500; for wages of workmen and adjuster, $3,000; and for fuel, &c., $3,000.

The only result of these appropriations, as I have mentioned already, was the expenditure of $9,722.34 without anything being done, because there was nothing to do. It does not follow because bullion comes into Baltimore, Boston, Charleston, and New Orleans there is any necessity for a mint. It does not follow at all. We cannot keep up mints all over the country for the purpose of giving salaries to gentlemen. My friend from Maryland must look at the public Treasury as a simple convenience to furnish handsome salaries to idle men who have nothing else to do.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is it fair, is it right in any point of view, if $8,000,000 of bullion comes into a port annually, that $8,000,000 of bullion, instead of being assayed at an office that is already established, with buildings magnificent in character, with machinery of the latest improved pattern——

Mr. GIBSON. Permit me to say the property in New Orleans was donated to the Government of the United States by the city of New Orleans.

Mr. HOLMAN. The ground, not the buildings, for they were paid for by the United States.

Mr. O'BRIEN. And it is to go back to the donors when they fail to be used there as assay office or mint.

Now to my question. Is it fair, is it right, if $8,000,000 of bullion come into the port of New Orleans annually, that $8,000,000 should be transported at the expense of the Government of the United States to New York, there to be assayed when it could be assayed more economically in the very port of delivery?

Mr. HOLMAN. What has the Government at all to do with assaying. It is a business which does not belong to the Government any more than weighing wheat or cotton or testing either. It is a thing unknown to any government but ours. This thing that the Government must do everything, attend to private business, become purely paternal, confine itself to our country. The assay business is a private enterprise, and does not belong to the Government of the United States, and if it were to do over again, with the present information possessed by Congress and by the officers of the Treasury and those connected with the mints, there would not be a dollar expended for that purpose I am well assured.

Mr. MOREY. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose the gentleman from Indiana intends to misstate the facts, but the Director of the Mint not only did not recommend this property should be sold, but he especially recommended this mint should be retained. It is true, as stated, that amount of bullion comes to the city of New Orleans, and the Director of the Mint especially directed, in view of the fact that the amount of coinage of trade-dollars would increase, this mint should be retained for that purpose.

As to the work done last year, it was distinctly understood the amount appropriated last year was merely for putting the mint in order to again resume the work which was carried on prior to the war. The superintendent is the gentleman who was in charge for many years prior to the closing of the mint. The mint is very fine and costly. In addition to that, the buildings are admirably suited for the purpose. A large amount of money was expended in their erection, but the title to the land upon which they stand will revert to the city of New Orleans as soon as that property shall cease to be used for the purpose intended when the mint was created. Is there any good reason why this same bullion which comes from Mexico to New Orleans should be taken to Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore, or elsewhere, instead of being coined there and sent back in the shape of trade-dollars, which shape it is desired, to Mexico?

The reason the work has not been done is that there is not a sufficient appropriation to do anything more than to put the property and the machinery in proper shape for resuming the legitimate operations of the mint. I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations were never made aware that the Director of the Mint desired that an assay office—for this is practically what it is—shall be established. I heard of it, however, incidentally, and asked for a copy of the letter which he addressed to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. That letter had been mislaid. I then sent to the Director of the Mint for a duplicate, because it was so at variance with the impression which the Director of the Mint made upon my mind in the committee-room that I could not comprehend it, and I do not yet. The Director of the Mint, I have every reason to believe, did state before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures just what he is alleged to have stated. But it is at entire variance with what he stated so far as I know before our committee; that is, in substance. And I do not find that the Director of the Mint even in this letter, which seems to be relied upon as having been sent to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a duplicate of which I have got, does take the position of recommending this. I ask to have the letter read.

The Cler. read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
February 28, 1876.

SIR: I inclose herewith draught of a bill for opening and conducting the mint at New Orleans as an assay office, which, if enacted into a law, will necessitate the following appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, namely:

For salaries:

Assayer in charge	$2,500 00
Melter	2,000 00
One clerk	1,500 00
Wages of workmen	3,000 00
Fuel, fluxes, acids, and other incidental expenses	5,000 00
Making a total of	14,000 00

The salary of the superintendent is at present $3,500. The title of the chief officer should be that of "assayer in charge," and not superintendent, and who, under existing laws, is to perform the duties of superintendent and assayer.

The office of superintendent is at present filled by Dr. M. F. Bonzano, a very capable assayer, and possessing excellent executive abilities. His salary as assayer, under the bill, should be $3,500; but as this is the day of reducing salaries, it may be advisable to pass the bill as I have drawn it.

The revised sections therein referred to, and which will govern the matter, limits salary of assayer and the melter to $2,500 each. I think $2,000 sufficient for the melter.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN, Director.

Hon. WILLIAM J. O'BRIEN,
House of Representatives.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, That the mint at New Orleans, Louisiana, shall hereafter be conducted as an assay office, subject to the conditions and restrictions of sections 3558, 3559, 3560, 3561, and 3562 Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit to the committee that that letter nowhere contains a direct recommendation of this measure.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Will the gentleman allow me a single moment?

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman part of my time.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The meaning of that letter must be apparent to the committee, it must be apparent to every reasonable person, I presume, and I presume we are all such. It was written to me as acting chairman of the committee after the interview which the Director of the Mint held with the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. At that interview he was requested by me to prepare such a bill as would suit the emergency, and in compliance with my request he sent this letter, showing what was necessary with that view.

Mr. RANDALL. That is just what I have suggested, that the Director of the Mint does not recommend the proposition at all, but sends that letter in obedience to the suggestion made to him by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Why should he recommend it in the letter, when he had fully recommended it to the committee?

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. REAGAN. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying a word.

In providing assay offices and mints as they are provided for in this bill they are intended to meet the necessities of the country and its convenience. New Orleans is a place of very large trade. It is the great commercial center of a very large portion of this country. It is a place at which a large trade in bullion and ores exists; a trade carried on between New Orleans and Mexico. If, as has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, there are some $8,000,000 of bullion received there every year, and a large portion of it, as has been stated by another gentleman, is purchased by persons in that city, what can be the reason why other places where there is less business of the same kind done should have a similar office and larger expenses and such an office should be denied to that city? Can it be, sir, that the purpose of driving that bullion trade from New Orleans to some other place underlies the effort to give to that great commercial center with its large trade the go-by? If that be not the object, why make the exclusion of that place and include other places of not so much importance in the respects I have indicated?

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Texas explain how it happened that this establishment, in full operation as authorized by law, with ample appropriation, from the 1st of July last to the 1st of December did nothing at all, not a thing?

Mr. REAGAN. I understand it has been stated in this debate that it did not do so because the appropriations did not permit it to do so.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriations were ample.

Mr. REAGAN. There is another point made by the gentleman from Indiana to which I desire to reply. If the object of securing an assay office and mint is in order to extend the patronage of the Government to a city and make salaries for officers, and if that place is to be excluded from the privileges of a mint and assay office because it is merely a matter of patronage, why not make the same exclusion of other places of less importance and less trade in this respect? Why is this distinction to be made against a place where the necessities are greater than at other places where we are making larger appropriations for the same object? I do not understand it. If it is true, as the gentleman from Indiana says, that this is a mere matter of patronage, strike off all patronage from other places and we are content; but do not bestow it elsewhere, and in bestowing it elsewhere destroy a large branch of the trade of this large city, and drive the bullion and ores hundreds of miles away to find a market.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman know how many assay offices there are in New Orleans?

Mr. REAGAN. I do not profess to be familiar with the subject of assaying or of coinage, and am proceeding on data here before the committee. And the question which the gentleman asks me is no answer to the argument which I have tried to put against his proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. You will find there are plenty of assay offices in New Orleans. The Government does but little of the business.

Mr. REAGAN. If it is true that private enterprise can do it in New Orleans, why should not private enterprise do it in other places? Strike out the other places, and I am content; but do not make fish of the one and flesh of another. Do not exclude that place which needs it more than the others simply because you have the power to do it, or consent to destroy the commerce there for the benefit of other portions of the country.

I like to see equity; I like to see such principles as we adopt made to extend to all similar cases. I do not like to see the appropriations made by this Government, its patronage, its laws intended for the benefit of our commerce and our trade, its laws intended to promote economy, thrift, and utility, perverted from their proper direction and appropriated to some places and refused to others.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state in reference to this subject that three mints are entirely adequate, I think, to all the business of the country necessary to be done, and that the assay offices which we have are entirely adequate when we take into consideration the private assay offices in various sections of the country, and that therefore there is no occasion whatever at this time for either a mint or an assay office at New Orleans.

Mr. O'BRIEN. We are not asking for a mint, but only for the establishment of that branch of the mint which assays bullion.

Mr. RANDALL. You are asking for the establishment of an assay office where we deem none is necessary.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Well, you disagree with every man who knows anything on the subject.

Mr. GIBSON. I have but a word to say. I do not know that I can add anything to what has already fallen from gentlemen who have preceded me in favor of this amendment. The Chamber of Commerce of New Orleans, the municipal government of New Orleans, and the General Assembly of the State of Louisiana have memorialized this body in favor of there being an assay office in the city of New Orleans. This, therefore, Mr. Chairman, is no scheme, no movement on the part of the delegation from the State of Louisiana to procure for themselves or their constituents any unnecessary or undue patronage of the Government. The gentlemen who represent the republican party in Louisiana as well as those who represent the democratic party in Louisiana, without concert previous to the offer of this amendment, have arisen upon this floor to support the amendment, which originated not with them but with the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. Chairman, it has already been stated that the reason why there was no assaying or coinage done at the mint in New Orleans last year was because the amount appropriated for this purpose last year was not sufficient. Now, sir, we do not propose any coinage under this amendment. We propose simply that the business of assaying may be conducted in the city of New Orleans. It has been shown here that nine millions of bullion are received annually from Mexico at the city of New Orleans.

I would like to ask the gentleman upon what principle of justice or equity he would compel the merchants of New Orleans who receive bullion to transship it to Saint Louis or New York or any other city in the northern section of the country in order that it may be assayed? Such a proposition would be a gross injustice to the commercial community of New Orleans. I cannot believe that the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who takes such good care of his own constituents and who so ably represents the policy of economy on this floor, could compare this extravagance, this onus on the commercial community of New Orleans. I trust therefore he will withdraw his amendment.

I will state that this is but the beginning of a trade in bullion, and Mexico produces about twenty-five or thirty millions of bullion annually. The trade and commerce between New Orleans and Mexico is just beginning to be revived after the disasters of the war. Relations are springing up already between the Mississippi Valley and the republic of Mexico, and if we adopt measures, however slight, however inadequate they may appear to foster these relations, the gentleman will find that a very advantageous trade would soon grow up between that republic and this Republic. The very beginning of it is in this bullion.

I do not think, therefore, it would be wise policy in gentlemen, looking to our commerce and trade, to strike at this amendment, which is proposed, not by the delegation from Louisiana, not by any member of that delegation, but by a committee before which the Director of the Mint himself appeared, and which amendment is in his own handwriting, drawn by himself, recommended by himself both verbally before the committee and in a communication addressed to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from New Orleans state the data on which he states that eight or nine millions of silver bullion was sent to New Orleans during the past year for the purpose of being assayed. I have not seen or heard of any such data.

Mr. GIBSON. Not particularly for assaying, but for purposes of commerce.

Mr. HOLMAN. That can scarcely be understood as having any connection with the importation of bullion. Will the gentleman inform the committee how many private assay offices there are in the city of New Orleans?

Mr. GIBSON. I cannot inform the gentleman how many private assay offices there may be in New Orleans, but however many there may be their acts do not impress upon the bullion assayed an official stamp and are not binding upon the parties.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is just as valuable.

Mr. GIBSON. Moreover if there be offices of private assayers in New Orleans, why not upon the same ground abolish the assay office in New York? If the office of a public official assayer is needed in New York, for the same reason a similar officer is needed by the commerce and trade of New Orleans.

Mr. HOLMAN. That a gentleman professing to be of the democratic faith should be in favor of this private business being carried on by the Government is marvelous to me. I would very cheerfully abolish the assay office in New York.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire to ask my colleague a single question. I heard it suggested a few moments ago that the mint at New Orleans and the ground upon which it was erected were donated by the city of New Orleans to the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. The ground, certainly.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. It was donated to the Government on the condition that when it ceased to be occupied for the purposes of a mint or an assay office it should revert to the city. Is that the fact?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is the fact.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. If that is so, then we should maintain at least an assay office there.

Mr. HOLMAN. That my friend should favor all manner of extravagance in this direction is not at all out of order for him. I am not at all surprised at it. There seem to be gentlemen on this floor who are simply seeking for some new kinds of extravagance, and they seem to have discovered a source of office or emolument in this assaying business, a private business with which the Government naturally has no more to do than it has with the inspection of cotton.

It is very true that an assay office has been established in New York, and perhaps it would be very difficult now to get rid of it. And assay offices in mining districts are found to be of great convenience to miners. These excrescences upon the body-politic have grown up on innumerable pretenses arising upon the spur of the occasion, and when once fastened upon us it is very difficult to get rid of them. But will my friend, who has heretofore been regarded as a friend of economy, tell me what benefit it is to the Government for it to engage in this business of assaying?

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will my friend yield for an answer to his question?

Mr. HOLMAN. In a moment. As I have shown, we spent in New Orleans last year $9,000, and not a thing was done there. The gentleman from New Orleans [Mr. GIBSON] says that there was not enough appropriated to enable the mint there to do anything. The amount appropriated was spent in salaries and nothing more.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will my friend permit me now to answer his question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I have this to say: that the Committee on Appropriations, of which my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is a distinguished exponent——

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend is not answering my question.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. The Committee on Appropriations have appropriated several hundred thousand dollars more in this direction than I would have been disposed to do, with all my extravagant notions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am glad to hear my friend say that.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I beg to say that if it be true that we run the risk of losing the title to this ground on which the mint building at New Orleans is situated, by the failure to make an appropriation of a few thousand dollars——

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend certainly has not read the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. We have avoided that risk.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have for years and years made a little appropriation of a few thousand dollars for this purpose.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. That is all I want to know.

Mr. HOLMAN. The pending paragraph makes a little appropriation

Mr. MOREY. That will not prevent the lapse of the title.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will do that very thing.

Mr. GIBSON. It is not enough to take proper care of the building.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. O'BRIEN; and upon a division, there were—ayes 82, noes 38.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not a quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it go; we can have a vote on it in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist upon tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. We can have a vote on it in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. If this bill is to be loaded down with such amendments as this, we should know it.

Mr. RANDALL. We can have a yea and nay vote in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist upon tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GIBSON and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 94, noes 22.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will not insist upon a further count, but will have a vote taken in the House.

The amendment was accordingly agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Assay office, Helena, Montana:
For salaries of assayer and of melter, at $2,500 each, $5,000.
For machinery and fitting up the same, $7,500.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I move to add to the last paragraph the words "to become available on the passage of this bill."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT. I move to insert, as an additional paragraph after the one last read, that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Assay office at Boise City, Idaho Territory:
For salary of assayer, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,500; for wages of workmen, $1,500; for fuel, crucibles, chemicals, repairs, and other incidental expenses, $1,000; in all, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to state my reasons for moving this amendment, and I hope I may have the attention of members of the Committee of the Whole, for, although to some members this matter may not seem to be very important, it is exceedingly important to the people of Idaho Territory.

A few years ago an assay office was established at Boise City and it is now in working order. To put up the building and supply the machinery and all the fixures cost the Government about $75,000. The building was erected under the supervision and control of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. It is an institution that has done great good in that Territory. It is the only institution which this Government has furnished to that people. It is an institution against the discontinuance of which the people of that Territory have unanimously remonstrated. To carry on the work there last year cost the Government $7,500. My amendment proposes to reduce the expense to $5,000, a reduction greater than that proposed in the rule adopted by the Committee on Appropriations. They have been, I believe, cutting down expenses about 20 per cent. My amendment proposes a reduction of 33 per cent. upon what has been the cost of keeping up this assay office.

In the five minutes allowed me I cannot of course enumerate all the advantages which that assay office affords to the people of that Territory. In the first place it protects the miners. Let me tell gentlemen who are those miners whom this assay office protects. They are the laboring-men of that country, your sons and your brothers, who have gone out there to dig from those mountains the precious metals. I want to say to my southern friends here who have voted just now for the amendment in behalf of New Orleans that the class of men whom this assay office in the Territory of Idaho protects have come partly from the South. Many of them are your own sons and brothers, those who with you southern men upheld the "stars and bars," who followed Jackson and Lee, who after the war went broken down and disheartened to that country to develop it. To gentlemen on this side of the House I wish to say that in those mines there are thousands of young men who during the war carried the banner of the Union and went forth shouting, "We are coming, Father Abraham, three hundred thousand more."

In attempting to strike at New Orleans and some other places, gentlemen of the committee have found that they were dealing with those who had votes and that the thing could not be done. But, sir, the people of Idaho have no votes; and I appeal to gentlemen when they strike to strike their equals and thus at least show manliness, even if your statesmanship be doubted.

This assay office protects the miners from being imposed upon by sharpers who have private assay offices. In this connection I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to what they said on this subject the other day. In that discussion the gentleman from Indiana said:

> Not that the members of the Committee on Appropriations, or a majority of them, believe that the Government should be engaged in the strictly private business of refining bullion any more than in any other private business, but for the purpose of preventing combinations being formed in consequence of the small number of private refineries in the country, both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific, which would run up the price so high as to operate to the prejudice of the persons engaged in that branch of industry.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] said substantially the same thing—that the only reason for these assay offices was to protect the miner from the extortions practiced by private parties.

Now, if this assay office is abolished, what will be the result? At present when a man has a quantity of ore and does not know how much it will assay to the ton, he takes it to the Government assay office, where it is assayed, and then he knows exactly what it is worth; he can tell whether it will pay to work that ore or not; and a capitalist who may desire to invest money to assist him knows exactly what he is doing; he knows that he is not being swindled. But if the ore is taken to a private assayer, the parties can tell nothing about it with certainty; the private assayer makes whatever return it may be his interest to make.

Let me say further that the miners of that Territory are four hundred miles away from railroads; and if this assay office should be abolished, all their ore, all their bullion, must be shipped by an express company at exorbitant prices to San Francisco, or to Portland, or some other place.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CASON obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the Chair will not be strict in enforcing the limitation of time upon Delegates from the Territories, as they have no other right than to talk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must adhere to the rule.

Mr. BENNETT. As I have said, I shall not undertake to recite all the benefits of this institution to the people of Idaho; but there is one consideration affecting the interests of the Government which I wish to mention. We have there a building which cost the Government only three or four years ago $75,000. The title to the land upon which that building stands—and I have been reminded of this by the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BAKER] in reference to the title of the New Orleans property—is vested in the Government upon the condition that it shall, with all the improvements, revert to the original owner whenever it ceases to be used as an assay office. This bill, as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, makes no provision on this point whatever; and I assure gentlemen, from a personal investigation of the title to the property, that there is that condition in the deed. That, however, is but a small matter compared with the interests of the people there.

I have no doubt it will be said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that this establishment does not pay expenses. Sir, I desire to inform members who may not have already examined the matter, that not a single assay office or mint maintained by this Government pays expenses. The object of this establishment in our Territory is not that it shall be a money-making institution for the Government. Its design is to develop the resources of the country, to assist those people who have gone into that Territory from the States, those men of whom I spoke who have laid down their arms and taken up the shovel and the pick, who are no longer engaged in throwing up breastworks, as of old, but in digging mountains for gold and silver and seeking to lay the foundation for new States of the Union, which shall add new stars to our flag.

Sir, if we look at questions of this kind from the mere stand-point of the expense, we may as well abolish the post-offices in the Territories. The amount of postage paid by the people in the Territories and the sparsely settled States fails in a very large degree to pay the expense of transporting the mails in those portions of the country. But it is not in this way that we must look at questions of this kind. It is the development of the country that is to be regarded. Gentlemen who have visited the Territory of Idaho know that it promises to be one of the finest mineral regions of the globe. It is a new country, just beginning to be developed. Take away this assay office and you strike a blow at the very life of that great industry and you cripple and destroy the Territory almost altogether.

I am only asking for an appropriation of $5,000. That is all it takes. You have just given $14,000 to New Orleans where this committee say you do not need one, but where I think you do. In the case of New Orleans it is simply a business necessity. There are no mining interests there to develop, no new country to go to and build up. I beg you in the name of justice not to strike down this institution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish the House to understand that we are not asking for anything new, but only asking to continue that which we now have; and I am willing to cut down the expenses one-third, which I do by my amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has not the advantage of the New Orleans amendment, as it is not recommended by any committee. It is in my mind about equally necessary at one place as at the other. I did not think it was necessary at New Orleans, and I do not think it is necessary at Boise City, Idaho; nor do the committee, so far as I am able to know. We struck it out with the concurrence of the Director of the Mint, so far as I can learn; but he changes his mind so often that I cannot keep track of him, and therefore I do not know but he may have recommended it.

Mr. BENNETT. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. RANDALL. I say that I do not know whether the Director of the Mint has recommended this or not, as he changes his mind so often that I cannot keep track of him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNETT. I wish to say I called on that gentleman and he sent a note by me to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations stating he did not want to make a statement to the House as he was accused of making so many different statements. He sent a note by me, and I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania has it now.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, he sent me a private letter.

Mr. BENNETT. He stated that if the appropriation could be reduced to $5,000 he thought it better than injuring the building there by making no appropriation at all; that it was better to do that than leave the building to go to destruction. He told me privately that it would cost half as much as I now ask to keep up the building.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yields to me a moment to ask a question. Will the gentleman from Idaho inform the House what officer it was under whom it was erected?

Mr. BENNETT. It was built under the direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department. He appointed an agent by the name of J. R. McBride, once a member of Congress from Oregon and afterward chief justice of Idaho. Under his superintendency the building was erected.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was built, then, under the auspices of the Treasury Department?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. How long since?

Mr. BENNETT. About four years ago.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only object of my inquiry is to ascertain who has been guilty of the fraud upon the Government by the erection of a building on a site to which the Government had no title. This is a thing which this House should inquire into. It is the first case of the sort which has occurred for many years.

Mr. BENNETT. The title is in the Government so long as it uses it as an assay office. It is just the same as at New Orleans.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the committee will adopt the amendment. The chairman says I am right about it, and hopes it will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the same members who voted for the New Orleans mint should vote for it; but I am in favor of neither, for neither is necessary.

Mr. BENNETT. It is all I have asked for Idaho Territory this year, and I hope gentlemen will vote for it.

The committee divided; and there were ayes 78, noes not counted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not demand a further count, but give notice we shall ask for a vote in the House.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend by adding, after line 945, on page 39, the following:

Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina:
For assayer, $1,800; for melter, $1,200; for labor, fuel, lights, acids, chemicals, repairs, and other necessaries, $1,000; in all, $4,000.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, my friend and colleague, [Mr. ASHE,] who represents the Charlotte district, in which this assay office is established, is necessarily absent, but he has furnished me with some facts to which I desire to call the attention of the House and which I hope will secure the adoption of this amendment.

This assay office is the successor to the old mint established at Charlotte in 1835. The mint went into operation in 1838. It was destroyed with all its machinery in 1844; was soon rebuilt, and continued in successful operation till 1861, with very great advantage to the country round about it. It was extensively patronized and of great benefit to the public until the war put an end to its operation. During this period, sir, there were coined at this mint between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000 in gold, the production of North Carolina. There was also during the same period coined at the Mint in Philadelphia about the same amount of gold from the same region.

The gold-bearing region of North Carolina is not appreciated by this country. There are very few persons who understand its extent or its value. There is on the southern border of the State an area of about five hundred square miles which abounds in gold. Charlotte is the center of this section. There are also in my own district rich gold mines. There are the Portis mines, the Ransom's Bridge mines, and the Arrington mines in the counties of Franklin and Nash, which have yielded over a million dollars of gold, and have not been half worked or half developed.

There have been recently discovered in the county of Chatham (a county rich in mineral wealth, in iron, in copper, and in coal) gold mines that promise to rival any in the State. They are now being worked.

It is a fact perhaps not generally known that between the year 1804 and the year 1827 all the gold derived from mining throughout the whole United States was furnished by the State of North Carolina; and during the period from 1804 to 1868 she furnished at least one-half of the gold supplied from the mines on the Atlantic slope. The Atlantic States, as contradistinguished from the Pacific States, deposited at the mints from 1804 to 1868, in exact figures, $19,457,297.55. Of this amount the State of North Carolina deposited $9,278,627.57, being about half of the whole amount. During the same period there passed into manufactures and commerce about the same amount; making the yield of the Atlantic States up to the year I have named about $40,000,000, of which North Carolina furnished about one-half, or say $20,000,000.

Now for various reasons which I have not time in a five-minute speech to enumerate, the mines of North Carolina have not been half developed. They have not been thoroughly worked. But is not this an interest of sufficient importance to attract the attention of Congress? Even with this exhibit, is there not enough in it to demand the fostering care of the United States Government, especially at a time when we desire to resume specie payments with an amount of gold in the Treasury entirely inadequate for that purpose?

A gentleman near me asks if this is the centennial town of Charlotte. Yes, sir; it is the old town of Charlotte, in North Carolina, where the standard of independence was first raised on this continent, and the first declaration of independence made, as we in North Carolina assert and are prepared to maintain, even against my friend the chairman of the committee, who comes from within a stone's throw of the noble old Independence Hall of Philadelphia. Charlotte is the county-seat of Mecklenburgh.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask if the gentleman from Indiana will allow me a little more time?

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS. I am informed that the mere fact of the establishment of the mint at Charlotte stimulated the mining interests of North Carolina, increased greatly the production of the mines there, and gave an impulse to them which was felt and continued to be felt down to the late unfortunate war. When the war broke out there were tributary to the mint at Charlotte at least one hundred mines. Many of these were remunerating their owners with handsome returns. The mine at Gold Hill yielded $2,500,000; Rudisill and two others had yielded each $1,000,000; and many others ranged from ten thousand dollars to three-quarters of a million. The production of these mines may be greatly increased and the value produced from them more than quadrupled by the introduction of improved machinery.

Since the war, for the want of capital and labor, (everybody knows how depressed our section of the country has been,) these mines have not been restored to their former degree of productiveness. And, besides the want of labor generally, there have been in the last two years two railroads completed, one from Wilmington to Charlotte, and one from Charlotte to Atlanta in the State of Georgia, which drew off a large amount of labor that would otherwise have found employment in those mining sections. These railroads are now completed and this labor will soon return to its old channel, and then capital will seek investment in mining lands.

The continuance of this assay office at Charlotte will be of immense value. It will give confidence. It will direct and fix the attention of capitalists and encourage investments. It will stimulate the production of gold; and not only that, but it will furnish the miners the great advantage of having at their own doors, of having at hand ready and convenient means of ascertaining the value of their bullion; and it will not be open to the objection of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] who does not believe in mints, because the coin is sent abroad and becomes an article of commerce. All we want is that there shall be, convenient of access to this people, an assay office by which they can ascertain the value of their bullion, and put it in the market, and let it go as an article of commerce. We wish to have this assay office if we cannot now get the old mint, which will be re-established some of these days when the bright and golden future of North Carolina shall render it of sufficient importance to demand it. At every session of Congress since the war except the last an appropriation was made for this office. At the first session of the last Congress there was an appropriation made of $4,500. The necessary buildings are all there, and we only ask for this small sum of $4,000. And I desire to say just here, because I believe it to be true, that there is not perhaps a State in all this Union which has been, relatively speaking, the recipient of so few favors and so few appropriations from the Government as the old State of North Carolina. The Director of the Mint, Dr. Linderman, recommends this appropriation of $4,000. I have his letter, which I desire to be read at the Clerk's desk. And now let me ask for North Carolina, a State which has asked very few favors at the hands of the Government, that this appropriation be made. I trust the Committee of the Whole will adopt the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Office of the Director of the Mint, February 22, 1876.

DEAR SIR: Acknowledging your letter of the 21st instant, in reference to the necessity of continuing the assay office at Charlotte, I have the honor to state that while the condition of the gold-mining interest of that locality is not such as would justify the establishment of an assay office if it were an original question, I am of the opinion that it would be proper to continue assaying there on a limited scale, and for which an appropriation of $4,000 would be sufficient.

Very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN, Director.

Hon. THOMAS S. ASHE.

Mr. RANDALL. Is there no other assay office recommended there? Let us get them all in at once.

Mr. HOLMAN. This plastic gentleman who presides over the mint department is a source of great embarrassment to the Committee on Appropriations. We had taken it for granted that the assay office at Charlotte was finally disposed of. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DAVIS] to a few facts.

The assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina, was kept up until last year, and the last report we had from Charlotte under the full appropriations was a deposit of bullion to the amount, all told, of $6,562.12. That was the entire deposit at that mint during the last fiscal year. No appropriation was made for the fiscal year, for Congress saw that we could not afford to keep up an assay office where the amount of bullion deposited was so small.

Now, what were the expenses of that establishment for that same year? The expenses of salaries were $4,340.54, or, in other words, the expenses of the office were within $2,000 of the whole amount of bullion taken there to be assayed.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to say, in answer to what the gentleman from Indiana has said, one thing; and it is this, that we are just beginning to work there. I have already called his attention to the fact that the laborers formerly at work there had gone to build these two railroads; but they will return to their work in the mine this year if you will give us this appropriation; and if we do not furnish triple and quadruple next year what we did last year, then in behalf of North Carolina I will say that you may strike out the appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. The argument from year to year in favor of keeping up this assay office has been the same, except as to railroads. We have appropriated at least $40,000 for this mint within the last eight years; and there never has been much more bullion deposited there in any one year than the amount I have stated. We abandoned it last year, because an assay office certainly ought not to be kept up for the purpose of assaying $6,000 in bullion. Now my friend asks for $5,000.

Mr. DAVIS. No; only $4,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, that is within $2,000 of all the bullion in gold and silver that would go there, according to the report made by the Director of the Mint. I am willing that you shall have all the gold and silver bullion that you can get out of the mines there, but to ask Congress to appropriate four or five thousand dollars to keep up the mint at a point where so little bullion is deposited is asking too much. It seems to me that my friend must observe that there is really no excuse for keeping this mint or assay office.

Mr. RANDALL. If I recollect rightly, last year we proposed to give this assay office to the State for educational purposes; that is my recollection of it; but there is really no necessity for an assay office there. I would now like to have a vote.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. DAVIS; and on a division, there were—ayes 60, noes 49; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. As no quorum voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to my colleague on the committee that it will save time to take a vote on the amendment in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we ought to take a vote in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. We cannot get the yeas and nays in the House on it.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, we can.

Mr. HOLMAN. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, thinks that the better plan is to take the yeas and nays on the amendment in the House, I will not insist on the call for tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. With the understanding that we are to have the yeas and nays in the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. You can have a vote in the House on each amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. But we want to have the yeas and nays, and I would like to have it agreed that the yeas and nays should be taken as in the case of the other two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be understood that the vote is to be taken in the House on this amendment by yeas and nays. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to offer a verbal amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I am a little afraid of you. Your amendments go in.

Mr. BENNETT. An amendment was adopted a little while ago on motion of the gentleman from Colorado, [Mr. PATTERSON,] which authorizes assay offices to issue gold certificates; at that time the amendment in relation to Boise City had not been adopted, or it would have been provided for. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado be amended by inserting after the word "Helena" the words "and the assay office at Boise Bity."

Mr. RANDALL. That is going back, and it is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is a proper amendment if the other amendment is to prevail.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, let it go in.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now desire to submit to the House the question whether we shall sit as a committee until six o'clock or rise now and have an evening session? I have no wish on the subject myself one way or the other.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Say half past five o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no; six o'clock. Unless some one moves now that the committee rise I shall conclude that the committee are desirous of making the first arrangement I suggested, that they will sit until six o'clock.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope the committee will sit on until half past five or six o'clock, as we would do more business during that time than we should in a whole evening session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that no motion is made for the committee to rise.

Mr. RANDALL. But by general consent it is understood that the committee will not rise until nearly six o'clock.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES.

Territory of Arizona:

For salary of governor, $3,000; chief justice and two associate judges, $2,500 each; secretary, $2,000; interpreter and translator in the executive office, $500; in all, $13,000. And hereafter the salaries of governors of Territories shall be $3,000 per annum each, and the salaries of chief justices and associate justices shall be $2,500 per annum each, and the salaries of secretaries of Territories shall be $2,000 per annum each; and sections 1845 and 1879 of the Revised Statutes and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions herewith stated are hereby repealed.

Mr. HURLBUT. I move to amend that paragraph by striking out in line 949 "$2,500" and inserting, in lieu thereof, "$3,000," and in lines 954 and 955 I offer the same amendment.

My opinion is that the Committee on Appropriations have made a mistake in reducing the compensation of the judges of the Territories. My recollection of the law is that it allows $3,000. I know no reason in the world why these salaries should be reduced. I know that of all classes of officers that are known to the Government there are no men so badly paid as the judicial officers of the United States in the Territories, in the district courts, in the circuit courts, and in the Supreme Court.

It is my opinion that no man of the proper legal attainments and standing can be found to go into the Territories of the United States to fill this high office for the salaries proposed by this bill without some personal political ambition prompting him, which should never influence a judge. I do not know any lawyer fit to occupy this position who would consent to give up the comforts of home and his professional emoluments to accept a temporary office, limited to four years, at the salary of $2,500.

I wish to state to the committee what undoubtedly nearly all the members of it know, that the jurisdiction of these territorial judges is very large in all those matters upon which the territorial court has a right to pass; it is large as regards the rights of persons and the rights of property. There are some of these Territories in which, with the present earnest conflict going on everywhere for the amassing of money in a sudden and speculative way, it is not fair to put a judge to pass upon that class of questions, with an insufficient salary, a salary that might have a tendency to lead him to listen to considerations other than those which should influence a judge I hope the Committee of the Whole without any hesitation will restore the salaries of the territorial judges to what they are now under the law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] if he has considered the fact that the salary of $2,500 a year, as fixed by this bill, was until a very recent period the salary that was fixed by law; that none of these officers received more than $2,500 until 1870, 1871, and 1872? They were not all raised at once. Prior to the year 1870 and during all that expensive period of our recent history the salaries of these officers were $2,500 a year, and we had the same class of men holding office then that we have had since the salaries were raised.

Mr. HURLBUT. I will ask the gentleman whether he knows any lawyer in good standing and with a fair practice anywhere in the State of Indiana, or in any other western State, who would surrender his personal liberty, his chance of promotion, and his emoluments to accept the salary of $2,500?

Mr. HOLMAN. In the State of Indiana the judges receive a salary of $2,500 a year, the same as is fixed by this bill. And that is an increase of a comparatively recent period. That salary commands the very best talent furnished by the legal profession in the State. In the State of Michigan, in the State of Vermont, and in many other States of the Union the salaries of the judges are still less. I have observed that in the States where the salaries are comparatively small the integrity of the judiciary is beyond all possible question, and the weight of their authority is far above that of the States where more expensive salaries are paid.

Mr. HURLBUT. If reducing salaries makes a better judge, would it not be better to cut the salary down to $1,000?

Mr. STEELE. I move to amend by striking out the last word, in order that I may say that I hope most earnestly that this amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] will be adopted, as it certainly ought to be, whatever may be said about the reduction of the salaries of other territorial officers. For my own part I must say that I shall see any reduction of these salaries made with regret, for I believe the tendency of such reduction will be to give us an inferior class of men as officers in the Territories. The tendency will be to drive every good man out of office, and only those who ought never to have been in will remain, no matter what reduction you make. Poor compensation gives poor labor all the world over. Especially is that the fact when the laborer is intrusted with such important duties as those performed by the officers now under consideration.

The judicial officers of the Territories have jurisdiction of all matters, both original and appellate. They hold terms of district courts which are nisi prius, and they sit as justices of the supreme court and hear appeals from their own judgments. It will be seen how intimately the prosperity and well-being of the Territories are bound up in the honesty, integrity, and ability of their judicial officers. Not only have they this jurisdiction under the laws of the Territories, but they also have jurisdiction under the laws of the United States as judges of the district and circuit courts of the United States. In this connection I ask the Clerk to read a resolution which was adopted unanimously by the Delegates from the Territories in this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Delegates from the Territories, That they enter an earnest protest against any reduction of the salaries of the judicial officers of the Territories, believing it to be against public policy, and that it will prove most injurious to the best interests of the people they represent.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to say that that resolution met the unanimous judgment and approval of the Delegates in this House, without reference to politics. The Delegates are about equally divided politically, but in reference to this matter they have no politics; they believe it is a subject which ought to be beyond the reach of politics, that this class of officers should be above any mere consideration of party politics and should be above any consideration of cheap salaries. The lives, liberty, and property of every citizen in the Territories depend upon the fact whether these judges are intelligent, honest, and capable.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says that they pay their judges in Indiana only $2,500 a year. Now, he himself is a striking example of the fact that a man in a judicial position in Indiana who honestly performs his duties can look forward to something better, can expect to come to the Congress of the United States. Our judges are not citizens of the Territories; they are not elected as Delegates to Congress. We want them to have at least a compensation that will secure for us ability and integrity. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] may be accepted by the Committee on Appropriations, for we do not desire to antagonize that committee in reference to the salary of any other officer in the Territories than the territorial judges.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. STEELE] takes his seat I beg leave to ask him a question. He has been in that Territory, I believe, a number of years——

Mr. STEELE. Quite a number.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, it is only recently that these salaries were increased from $2,500; and I wish to ask my friend whether he has discovered any increase in the learning and ability of the gentlemen holding these judicial offices in the Territories since the salaries were put up to $3,000?

Mr. STEELE. I will say in reference to this matter that in 1870 and in 1873 the Congress of the United States undertook to re-adjust the entire system of salaries for the Territories and to prohibit the Territories themselves from paying compensation to their own officers. Previous to that time the Territories had been in the habit of increasing the salaries of their own officers by payments from their own treasury—from money raised by taxation of their own people. That has now been done away with.

Mr. HOLMAN. As to all of them?

Mr. STEELE. All, or nearly all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not nearly all, I think.

Mr. RANDALL. The change with reference to governors was not made till 1873.

Mr. STEELE. That is the fact; but there is a positive prohibition in many of the Territories in reference to any increase by the Territorial Legislature of the salaries of judges, governors, or secretaries.

Mr. BENNETT. I want to say a word to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] Formerly in the Territory of Idaho, when the judges received $2,500 from the United States, the territorial Legislature added $2,500, which was paid from the territorial treasury. But this Congress by a direct act prohibited the territorial Legislature from enacting any such law in reference to any of its officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. That was very proper.

Mr. BENNETT. Another thing is to be considered. The judges are paid in greenbacks, which of course are good money; but it so happens in most of the Territories, especially the one I represent, those greenbacks are shaved down to eighty-five cents on the dollar; so that a nominal salary of $2,500, when converted into money which can be used in that Territory, is only equivalent to about $2,250, upon which no judge can live respectably.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. Chairman, I beg to occupy the attention of the committee on this question for just a few moments. If there is any one thing which is of infinite importance to the people in a Territory, as it is to the people of the States, it is a good judiciary. It is important that the best possible talent should be obtained to fill judicial offices. The salary proposed to be paid these judges by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is $3,000 a year, the salary now provided by law.

I wish to give the committee some idea of the expenses to which a judge in one of these Territories, and particularly in New Mexico, is subjected. The chief justice of New Mexico has a district comprising seven counties. He holds the United States courts twice a year at Santa Fé, in that district, and territorial courts in each of the counties, the latter courts corresponding with the State courts in the States, as distinguished from the Federal courts. In order to hold two terms of court in each of these seven counties during the year, he travels seven hundred miles, at an expense of twenty-five cents a mile, saying nothing of the cost of boarding and other expenses incurred by reason of his absence from home.

The terms of many of the territorial courts in the various counties last two weeks. The United States and territorial courts at Santa Fé hold four weeks. It is fair to say that the chief justice is occupied about six months during the year holding the courts in his district besides the session of the supreme court, which lasts about one month, making seven months of his time given to the actual sessions of courts, besides work at chambers.

The jurisdiction of these courts is very extended. They have the same jurisdiction that the circuit and district courts of the United States in the States combined have, and therefore have more duties to perform than the judges of these courts. In addition to their United States jurisdiction, they hold territorial courts, as I have said, corresponding to the State courts. Thus the labor imposed upon these judges is greater than that resting upon any of the judicial officers in the several States. The questions arising in the Territories are frequently complicated and sometimes involve the adjudication of millions of dollars in a single case, and I submit to this House to say whether $2,500 is a sufficient salary to compensate officers having such heavy labor and responsible duties to perform. Even $3,000, proposed by the amendment, I claim is not fair compensation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the bill now under consideration the Committee on Appropriations propose to allow the judges of the district court of the District of Columbia, whose labors are not near so great, and the jurisdiction of whose courts is not so enlarged, and who are able to remain at their homes during the entire year, who, therefore, incur no extra expense in traveling, a salary of $4,000 a year. I would like to know from any member of the committee why the district judges of the District of Columbia should have this preference and partiality at their hands over the judges of the district courts of the United States in the Territories. It is manifestly unjust. If these judges of the District of Columbia are entitled to $4,000, the judges in the Territories should receive $5,000; for they incur heavier expenses in the discharge of their duties, they hold more courts, they sit more months in the year, and do more duty.

I wish also to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the reduction here proposed upon the salaries of the judges of the Territories is more than 10 per cent., a greater percentage of reduction than is proposed as to the salaries of Congressmen or of clerks and other officers in the Departments. Why this distinction? Why do you want to visit upon the judges and officers of the Territories a greater reduction than that proposed in regard to other officers? This reduction of $500 is much more than 10 per cent. of their present salary—nearly 20 per cent.

If this House feels an interest in the welfare of the Territories, in the character of the territorial judiciary, in the proper administration of the laws, and the protection of the people, their property, and lives, it will adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. That proposition is entirely just; and I think on reflection the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations himself will agree to it. We have not objected to the reduction contemplated with reference to the territorial governors, secretaries, or other officers, although I am of the opinion it is very unjust. We protest now only against this reduction as applied to the judges. These judicial officers are appointed in the respective Territories without any choice of the people; and if we are to have them, we want the salary sufficient to justify good men, and at least fair lawyers, in accepting the positions. Beyond this we have no interest in this question. It is rarely the case that one of our own people is ever appointed to these offices. Our only wish is to have good men in these positions; and therefore I trust that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. Mr. Chairman, to show the estimate in which this matter is held by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Utah, I will state that at the recent session of that Assembly $6,000 was appropriated for the payment of the salaries of judges for two years, making an addition of $1,000 annually to the salary of each judge, and giving to each an aggregate compensation of $4,000. The reason for this action was that the salary as now fixed by the United States was regarded as quite insufficient for the responsibility of the position.

There is a large amount of litigation in our Territory, as in all Territories where there are valuable mines the ownership of which is frequently in dispute, and it was deemed proper that the salaries of judges should be increased. There has been no restriction placed upon us by Congress to prevent the Legislative Assembly making the salary sufficient to induce capable men to accept and retain the position. I myself am opposed to Territories contributing to the salaries of officers in whose election they have no voice, but under the circumstances it is no more than right that men holding such responsible stations as these judges do, having such important interests coming before them to decide upon, should have such salary as will induce men of character to take the positions, and I hope in the interest of the Territories this reduction will not be made.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. Chairman, I should not have spoken on this question but for what seems to me the grave and serious statement made to the House by the gentleman from Utah, which is that the judges of the United States, appointed by the authority of the Government, representing the Government in their judicial capacity, accept salaries or increase of salary from another source. It seems to me that is an abuse which would justly warrant the impeachment of any judge against whom it could be proved. It was one of the most important causes of the revolutionary war and of the conflicts which preceded it that Great Britain claimed the right to pay the colonial and provincial judges, thereby taking away their dependence upon the colony for which they sat in judgment and making them in whole or in part dependent upon another power.

Now, if a judge of the Territory of Utah should undertake to accept a salary when his salary is fixed here by the Government of the United States, when his duty is to declare invalid and unconstitutional the acts of the Territorial Assembly of Utah, if a judge should presume to accept another in addition to the salary fixed by this Government he should be impeached and removed from office.

Mr. STEELE. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts know that by express enactment of Congress judges of the Territory are allowed to sit—not compelled, but allowed to sit and administer the laws of the Territories as district judges of the Territories, and that for that reason the Legislative Assemblies imposing on them by their acquiescence additional burdens think they may very properly pay them additional compensation without the judges laying themselves open to any such grave charge or imputation as that mentioned?

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that to be the statement of the gentleman from Utah at all.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. That is the law and that is the precise position of the judges in the Territories; not in the Territory of Utah alone, but in all the Territories. They act in a dual capacity. For six days, or as much longer as needed, they act as United States judges, and for the balance of the time they act as territorial judges. There is no impropriety in their accepting pay under such circumstances. Neither would there be any impropriety in the Territory paying them entirely, except for the service they render as United States judges.

Mr. HOAR. So far as the judge of a Territory is authorized by act of Congress to hold a territorial office and receive compensation for his services in that office, of course he is all right; but that was not the statement of the gentleman from Utah as originally made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to be heard a little further.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I rise to oppose the amendment, and yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. The gentleman from Utah originally stated, as an argument for the increase of the official salaries granted by this bill, that these salaries granted by the United States were so insufficient the Legislative Assembly of his Territory was in the habit of eking them out by an additional grant of salary to these judges. That was the abuse of which I complain.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I wish to say that I did not amplify this point as I might have done and fully explain it. I supposed every gentleman on this floor familiar with the affairs of the Territories would understand my statement. This action of the territorial Legislative Assembly is in consequence of the meager salaries of the judges; and it is distinctly understood by all who are familiar with the affairs of the Territories that the judges act in a dual capacity, and there is not the slightest impropriety in their accepting this additional pay.

Permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, that I do not believe any exception would have been taken to this action if it had been any other Territory than that of Utah. The territorial Legislative Assembly of Utah have done this in good faith, as other Territories have done it, and not for any improper purpose, recognizing the propriety of giving their judges a sufficient salary.

Mr. MAGINNIS. If there is any of my time left, I rise to say, in answer to the gentleman from Indiana who made the point that the salaries of these territorial judges were raised in 1870, that my Territory, besides the $2,500 allowed by Congress, gave them $3,000 a year; but the chairman of the Appropriation Committee [Mr. GARFIELD] at that time, in re-arranging the salaries of territorial officers, fixed the salary by the Government at $3,000 and cut off all territorial compensation. Now, the Delegates from the Territories do not wish to antagonize the reduction as to governors and other officers, but they trust the House will allow the salaries of the territorial judges to remain as they are. They are all political opponents of mine.

I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the amendment.

The discussion on this question of salaries is just such as we have been accustomed to lately. In the Forty-second Congress we had this whole matter gone over; and the higher class of services which it was alleged you would get by an increase of salary was deemed a sufficient reason at that time for raising salaries. The salary bill was adopted, but the country disapproved of it, and the next Congress repealed it. And so far as I am aware there was no appreciable change in the degree of talent that was brought to the national Legislature in consequence of that raising of salaries. We find that this salary is equivalent to that in many of the States. As has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] the salary in that State is $2,500. I remember very well it was stated in the last Congress that Judge Poland, then a very distinguished member of Congress from Vermont, had served for years for the sum of $1,800. I think in the State of Michigan it does not exceed $1,800. A gentleman from that State tells me that it is $1,500.

All these facts show that the salary is not the measure of the talent required. If gentlemen will go back to the legislation prior to 1870, they will find that in some of the Territories the salaries which have been allowed by law were not even so great as that proposed by the committee. What was the status of the judges then? Was there any complaint of an inefficient judiciary? Has there been any assurance to this House that by reason of the salary then being smaller than it is at this time there was not a supply of men to take these places capable of discharging the duties attendant upon them? Not at all. There have been no statements made by any gentleman to the committee to that effect. On the contrary, we have been assured that there has been no change in point of talent.

Mr. ELKINS. In my Territory there has been a change. We have had better talent since the salary has been increased.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think the gentleman stated that by his own personal influence he got in a man whom he liked better than the man who was there before. But he stated to the committee that the talent that there was in that position before was entirely satisfactory.

Mr. ELKINS. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee so understood him.

Mr. ELKINS. O, no.

Mr. BLOUNT. Whether that be true or not, I say that the salary is not the measure of the talent. Such is not the experience in any State. Such is not the experience in the judiciary of the Federal Government.

Mr. ELKINS. Why, then, do you not give a salary of $50 a year, if the amount of salary makes no difference to the talent?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not propose to be absurd in carrying out these measures of economy.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to say just one word. Why do you give the judges in the District of Columbia, $4,000? Why not cut down their salaries to $2,500? I have had the experience of living in both places, and I can live cheaper here than I can in Idaho, and I know the judges here have not half the work to do that they have in Idaho.

Mr. BLOUNT. I propose to take one thing at a time. When we come to the District of Columbia, if the gentleman proposes then to compare the litigation in these little Territories with a population of twenty or thirty thousand with the litigation in the District of Columbia with a so much larger population, we shall be ready then to enter into that comparison.

Mr. ELKINS. We have twice the litigation in New Mexico that there is in this District and as many people.

Mr. BENNETT. As to the amount of litigation, will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to say that there are more cases in these Territories, and cases involving mines, one of which may involve more money than any case in the District of Columbia for ten years? There are frequently cases which involve immense sums of money.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have not time in a five-minute discussion to go into all these questions. But I think it utterly absurd to talk about the salary of a judge in a Territory, the duties being such as they are, and to place it in comparison with the salary of a judge of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BENNETT. That is simply because you are not acquainted with the business out there.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, has my time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; a good deal of it was occupied by other gentlemen.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say one word further in reply to the gentleman from Utah. I am in favor of giving all these territorial judges honorable and ample salaries; but I am informed that the abuse which he has stated exists in his Territory has been corrected by Congress in regard to nearly all the other Territories, in regard to every Territory to which the attention of Congress has been called; so that he commits an act of injustice when he says that with reference to any other Territory than Utah this objection would not have been made.

The objection has been made heretofore, and the evil has been corrected. And I say again that you cannot conceive a greater abuse in principle of the judicial office than to enact that any other power whatever shall have the right to increase or to fix the salary of a judge than the Government to which he is responsible.

And to say that the Territory of Utah in its existing condition, or any other Territory in its existing condition, shall be permitted to come in and grant a sum of money to these judges, whose duty it is, representing the Government, to restrain the local legislation of the Territory, is a flagrant abuse which should never be permitted; and I understand it is expressly prohibited in regard to nearly every other Territory. I further repeat what I said before, that that was one of the constitutional and political principles contended for by our ancestors at the time of the revolutionary war. The power which fixes the salary of a judge makes the judge its dependent; and if the Territory fixes the salary of the judge, he will be at the beck and under the control, unless he is superior to ordinary human passions, of the population who compose that Territory.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I am very glad that in my previous remarks I took the precaution to state that I do not approve of the Territories paying United States officers, because it explains my position and saves my consistency; and that is exactly the feeling which I had upon this question when I learned that the Assembly of our Territory had supplemented the salary of the judges of the Territory. I think when the Government selects officers for a Territory, officers in whose choice the people have no voice, they should be paid proper and suitable salaries by the Government; either this, or they should be left entirely dependent for salary upon the people to whom they are sent, and who can judge of their capacity and the value of their services. The Legislature of Utah considered that $4,000 was a proper salary for the judges of the Territories, and therefore they appropriated a sufficient sum to make it that amount.

Mr. LORD. I ask the gentleman from Utah to yield to me for a moment that I may move that the committee rise, to enable the House to serve a surrejoinder in the impeachment case that must be sent over to-night. It is a mere formal matter.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LORD. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. RANDALL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

Mr. LORD. I rise to a privileged question. The managers on the part of the House have prepared a joinder in demurrer and surrejoinder which should be adopted by the House before it is filed with the Secretary of the Senate.

The Clerk read the paper, as follows:

In the Senate of the United States sitting as a court of impeachment.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA vs. WILLIAM W. BELKNAP. } By the House of Representatives of the United States, April 25, 1876.

The House of Representatives of the United States, in the name of themselves and of all the people of the United States, say that the said first replication to the plea of the said William W. Belknap to the articles of impeachment exhibited against him as aforesaid and the matters therein contained, in manner and form as the same are above set forth and stated, are sufficient in law for the said House of Representatives to have and maintain the said articles of impeachment against the said William W. Belknap, and that the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment has jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine the same; and the House of Representatives are ready to verify and prove the same, as the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment shall direct and award: Wherefore, inasmuch as the said William W. Belknap hath not answered the said articles of impeachment or in any manner denied the same, the said House of Representatives, in the name of themselves and of all the people of the United States, pray judgment thereon according to law, that the said William W. Belknap be adjudged guilty of the high crimes and misdemeanors aforesaid, and that the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment do adjudge accordingly.

And the said House of Representatives as to the first and second subdivisions of the rejoinder to the second replication of the House of Representatives to the plea of the defendant to the articles of impeachment, wherein the said defendant demands trial according to law, the said House of Representatives, in behalf of themselves and all the people of the United States, do the like; and as to the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth subdivisions of the rejoinder of the said defendant to the said second replication they say that the said House of Representatives by reason of anything by the said defendant in said last-named subdivisions of said rejoinder above alleged ought not to be barred from having and maintaining the said articles of impeachment against the said defendant, because they say that, reserving to themselves all advantage of exception to the insufficiency of the said subdivisions of said rejoinder to said second replication, they deny each and every averment in said several rejoinders to said second replication contained, or either of them, which denies or traverses the acts and intents charged against said defendant in said second replication, and they re-affirm the truth of the matter stated therein; and this the said House of Representatives pray may be inquired of by the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment.

Wherefore the said House of Representatives, in the name of themselves and of the people of the United States, pray judgment thereon according to law, that the said William W. Belknap be adjudged guilty of the high crimes and misdemeanors aforesaid, and that the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment do adjudge and determine accordingly.

Mr. LORD. I move that this joinder in demurrer and surrejoinder be adopted by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. LORD. I now move that the Clerk be directed forthwith to file this surrejoinder with the Secretary of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

Mr. PAGE. Pending that motion, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the House refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken on Mr. HOLMAN's motion; and it was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The pending question was on the amendment offered by Mr. HURLBUT.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose the gentleman from Utah [Mr. CANNON] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. The people of the Territories, Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt would be quite willing to allow the General Government to pay the Government officers such salaries as Congress see fit without having to take anything out of their own treasury to pay them. I do not suppose they esteem it a privilege to have the opportunity of supplementing the salaries of the judges. My reason for alluding to this matter at all was that, when remarks were made respecting the non-action of the Territories in adding to the salaries of the judges, I felt it was due to the people of Utah to state what the action of their representatives had been upon this point. I am now informed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that he did not intend his remarks to apply especially to Utah more than any other Territory that might be in the same position; but he understood that the rest of the Territories were prohibited from doing this. The action of the Assembly of Utah has been in all kindness and innocence, and with the intention alone of aiding the judges to live respectably.

Mr. PATTERSON. Before the Delegates from the Territories contemplated this amendment they took under consideration every proposition relating to the salaries of officers of the Territories. They desire heartily to co-operate with the Committee on Appropriations upon every matter where they thought retrenchment could be made, and they determined to make no request of this House on the question of salaries, save in connection with the judges of the Territories.

Those gentlemen who oppose this amendment urge, as the strongest argument against it, that judges in the State of Indiana and in other States receive no higher compensation than $2,500 a year. Grant that such is the case, and that that salary is sufficient in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and other States. Is that a proper argument in support of a proposition to place the salaries of judges in the Territories upon precisely the same footing?

In the first place, the judges in the Territories must travel a much greater distance in the performance of their duties than do the judges in the States. In many of the States the judges are limited to one county; rarely does their jurisdiction cover three or four counties, and when it does those counties are grouped together and the extent of territory is limited. In the Territories the number of counties in the circuit of a single judge runs up to seven, eight, or nine; and many of the counties are so large that you could put any one of the New England States in them and it would not touch their edges.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. Is there now any difficulty in finding proper persons for $2,500 a year?

Mr. PATTERSON. I say it is exceedingly difficult to find any lawyer of ability and judicial learning to take a position in the Territories for a salary of $2,500 a year.

But I was proceeding to illustrate my argument. In the State of Indiana you can travel on a railroad for two and a half or three cents a miles, while in the Territories of Colorado, New Mexico, and Utah you have to pay from twenty to twenty-five cents a mile for traveling in stage-coaches. There are but few Territories that are not compelled to import their flour, meat, and everything else that enters into domestic economy. The result is that there is scarcely any article of family consumption or of clothing that does not cost from 25 to 100 per cent. more in the Territories than in any one of the States. Now when these territorial judges have to travel five times the distance and to pay ten times as much for traveling that judges in the States have to do and when everything used in their familes costs from 25 to 100 per cent. more than in the States, is it fair to make the salaries in the Territories the same as in the States?

Mr. BENNETT. And the State judges only hold county courts.

Mr. PATTERSON. I was coming to that. In addition to acting as nisi prius judges, these territorial judges act as supreme-court judges. After they have traveled over mountains and across plains, after they have got through their terms of courts in their various circuits, these judges must go to the capital of the Territory and board at a hotel at a charge of from three and a half to six dollars a day, and remain there for from two to five weeks holding terms of the supreme court to decide cases appealed from their circuits.

As has been said, the cases that arise in these Territories as a rule are cases that demand the highest judicial ability and experience. Now, if you insist upon reducing the salaries of our judges, so that we must content ourselves with lawyers who pettifog about the police-courts of the Eastern States and who cannot make a living at home and are sent out to the Territories and quartered upon us, as a matter of course we of the Territories must submit. We are tied to the wheel of the car of progress and cannot resist after the fiat of Congress has gone forth. But before that fiat goes forth on a question that involves the dearest and best interests of the Territories, we have the right to raise our voices in protest against it.

I contend that a salary of $3,000 a year is not sufficient; but if you will not give us more than we have been receiving, do not make it less. There is not a gentleman on this floor at all acquainted with the expenses of living in the Territories who, if he will sit down and figure a little, will not come to the conclusion that our judges, traveling and living as they must do, will find it difficult to eke out even a miserable subsistence on the amount now allowed.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentlemen from the Territories are through, I hope the debate on this subject will cease.

Mr. JACOBS. While I do not believe that the salaries of any of the territorial officers are too high, yet in common with the other Territorial Delegates here I have agreed not to make any opposition to the reduction of the salaries of the other territorial officers, but to try to save the salaries of these territorial judges.

The district courts of the Territories have more extensive jurisdiction than any other similar judicial tribunals in the United States. They have all the jurisdiction of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and they have jurisdiction over all those things that are taken cognizance of by the courts of the States. Then the whole criminal and civil statutes of the United States, as well as all the equity and admiralty codes, so far as the Territories are concerned, are in the hands of these territorial judges. If you wish to secure a proper and economical administration of the laws of the United States as well as of the Territories, it is necesssary to have competent men on the bench—men whose legal knowledge is not only extensive but accurate. After a long residence in the Territories, I cannot say that we have always had such men on the bench, for that has not been the case.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. JACOBS. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. Did not the gentleman himself hold the position of judge in the Territory of Washington for the salary we propose in this bill?

Mr. JACOBS. For the short time only that I was judge in Washington Territory I received a salary of $2,500 a year, but afterward the salary was raised. It has been a common practice in the Territories—my Territory, however, did not follow that practice—to pay to the judges an amount in addition to the salaries they were paid by the Government of the United States. And why? The excuse urged for that action by the Territories was that it was utterly impossible for a judge to live upon the salary allowed. Take Idaho, for instance. For several years flour was not less than twenty-five cents a pound, often fifty cents a pound, and everything else in proportion. How was it possible for a judge under such circumstances to support himself on a salary of $2,500 a year?

Washington Territory has an excellent bench, composed of three thorough lawyers. I have no doubt that the result of the passage of this bill in the form proposed by the committee would be the resignation of every one of those judges. From a residence of twenty-five years in Oregon and Washington Territory, from a full knowledge of all the facts in the case, I aver, feeling the full responsibility of the averment, that $2,500 a year is not an adequate compensation for the services of those men. In all the States and Territories west of the Rocky Mountains the currency is gold coin; greenbacks are not received at their face value, but only as worth eighty-four to eighty-eight cents on the dollar; so that when this salary of $2,500 is reduced to the currency of the Territories you are paying these judges less than $2,200 a year. Yet all the necessaries of life in the Territories are from 25 to 50 per cent. higher in gold than they can be bought for in greenbacks in the States. How, then, can a judge in one of those Territories live upon a salary of that amount?

The United States is deeply interested in this matter. In one of the districts in Washington Territory there is a large amount of admiralty business. From fourteen hundred to fifteen hundred vessels enter Puget Sound every year; and the commerce of that section of the country is over $5,000,000 a year. The judge of that district is constantly employed in attending to these admiralty cases. He has been in the habit of going to different places to hold court whenever persons were accused of crime under the navigation laws of the United States and hearing these cases under the law for summary proceedings. Suppose that judge should refuse to go at his own expense to all these places. While the United States might save $1,500 a year upon his salary, they would lose thousands in other directions.

Mr. RANDALL. If there be no other gentleman from the Territories to speak, I ask that debate on this amendment close. I will merely state that the committee found that the salary of the judges had been increased in 1870, and that of the governors in 1873; and we thought it right to put the salaries back to just where they were at those respective dates.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will allow me to correct him in one particular. In this bill the salaries are higher than they were in several of the Territories at the dates mentioned.

Mr. MAGINNIS. But at that time extra compensation by the Territories to their judges was not forbidden.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HURLBUT, there were—ayes 54, noes 61; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HURLBUT and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 49, noes 59; no quorum voting.

Mr. HURLBUT. If gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations will agree to allow a vote in the House on this amendment, that is all I ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that a vote be taken in the House on this amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLIKEN. I object.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the question whether there shall be a vote in the House on this amendment entirely dependent upon the discretion of the gentleman in charge of the bill? If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] agrees to a vote in the House, no one else can prevent it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania agree to a vote in the House?

Mr. RANDALL. Objection has been made.

Mr. HURLBUT. It may as well be withdrawn.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I insist on my objection.

Mr. HURLBUT. Then I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Rule 106 provides that—

Whenever the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or the Committee of the Whole House, finds itself without a quorum, the Chairman shall cause the roll of the House to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the Chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal.

Under this rule the Chair will be compelled to direct the Clerk to call the roll.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that if the Chair would call attention to the fact that no quorum has voted and that a call is imminent, a quorum might be found voting. There seems to be a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the tellers will resume their places to receive the votes of those members who have not already voted.

There was no objection.

The tellers, having resumed their places, reported after some time—ayes 54, noes 67; no quorum voting.

Mr. HURLBUT. I understand that the objection is withdrawn to a vote in the House on this amendment; and, if so, I will not insist on a further count.

Mr. CONGER. Then I suppose the amendment will be regarded as adopted; otherwise a vote in the House cannot be had.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no! The meaning of the arrangement is that the chairman of the committee will allow this amendment to be offered in the House and voted upon.

Mr. HOAR. It depends on the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether or not the amendment shall be moved in the House before the demand for the previous question, and whether or not, of course, there shall be a vote on the amendment by yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. I say that I am willing to allow a vote on this amendment in the House by yea and nay vote, although it failed to receive a majority of the votes through tellers in committee. Not wishing, however, to break up the committee by lack of a quorum, I ask that the amendment shall be considered as rejected, promising to allow the amendment to be offered in the House and a vote to be taken on it.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to, and it will then go to the House for a vote.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, that is not the understanding. This amendment is not to be reported to the House as agreed to, for it has not received a majority of the votes cast in committee, but no quorum being present and voting the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, having charge of this bill, agrees before the previous question is demanded to allow the amendment to be moved and a vote to be taken on it by yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. What was the vote in committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty-four ayes to 67 noes.

Mr. RANDALL. The record will show that the amendment was lost on the vote by tellers, but to save the committee from being broken up by lack of a quorum, I agree to let the gentleman from Illinois move his amendment in the House and to have a vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the amendment will be considered as rejected.

Mr. PATTERSON. Of course, with the understanding stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that he will allow the amendment to be moved and a vote taken on it in the House by yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the understanding; and I will so arrange the matter that no gentleman can have any ground of complaint.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of saving trouble hereafter, and that is whether it is a part of the understanding the amendment to be voted on shall cover all of the Territories?

Mr. RANDALL. Of course the understanding will control in reference to all the Territories.

Mr. STEELE. That is all I wish to know.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Idaho:

For salaries of governor, chief justice and two associate judges, and secretary, $12,500.

For legislative expenses, namely: For compensation and mileage of members of the Legislative Assembly, the officers and clerks, and the contingent expenses thereof, $20,000.

For contingent expenses, to be expended by the governor, $500.

Mr. BENNETT. I intend to stand to the agreement in reference to the salaries of the territorial judges, but there is another matter to which I wish to call attention. I move an amendment to the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 995 insert the following:

For rent, postage, printing, fuel, stationery, light, and incidental expenses of the secretary's office $2,000.

Mr. RANDALL. They receive that every other year. This bill appropriates $20,000 to Idaho Territory.

Mr. BENNETT. That is for legislative purposes, and does not include rent, postage, printing, fuel, stationery, light, and incidental expenses of the secretary's office.

Mr. RANDALL. We considered the whole thing and the paragraphs in the bill are right.

Mr. BENNETT. The estimate for the legislative expenses of the Territory of Idaho was $25,000 as made by the secretary and recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. That has been cut down to $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. It is the same in reference to all the Territories.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not propose to object to that, although in detail I can show by figures it will come to $2,000 more than that. There is no provision in that estimate for the office of secretary, for his rent, fuel, light, and other incidental expenses, as in the case of the other Territories.

I want to say—and I think the committee will concur with me—that the secretary cannot draw any of that appropriation for legislative expenses. Then how do you propose during the year the secretary can provide rent, fuel, and light, for which you make provision in reference to the secretaries of the other Territories? You provide in the Territory of Colorado that the secretary shall have $1,700 for rent, light, fuel, stationery, postage, and printing. You provide the same thing for the secretary of Montana Territory. In reference to the Territory of Idaho you appropriate $20,000 for legislative expenses, but there is no provision for the expenses of the secretary's office.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is nothing appropriated in gross.

Mr. BENNETT. But allow me to say that in reference to Idaho the gross sum of $20,000 appropriated is for legislative expenses.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will cover everything.

Mr. BENNETT. I know that the rules of the Department will not allow the secretary to draw anything for his office out of an appropriation for purely legislative expenses. He cannot draw a cent of it. They will not pass a single voucher of his on that account. If you intend any of the $20,000 for the secretary, you ought to say so.

Mr. RANDALL. It is all right and they will follow the custom.

Mr. BENNETT. This does not follow the custom; it is a mistake.

The motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Utah:

For salaries of governor, chief justice and two associate judges, and secretary, $12,500.

For contingent expenses of the Territory, to be expended by the governor, $500.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the printing of the laws of the Territory, to be added to an amount which has been appropriated by the Legislative Assembly, this amount to be drawn and expended for this purpose under the direction of the governor of Utah Territory, $4,000.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the following amendment, to come in after line 1014.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, fuel, stationery, printing, postage, pay of messengers, and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Territory of Wyoming:

For salaries of governor, chief justice and two associate judges, and secretary, $12,500.

Legislative expenses, namely: For rent, fuel, light, storage of the Government property, stationery, printing, postage, messenger hire and other incidental expenses, $1,000.

For contingent expenses of the Territory, to be expended by the governor, $500.

Mr. HOAR. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, No salary shall be paid to or accepted by any judge of the supreme court of any Territory except what is paid from the Treasury of the United States or by express authority of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. Is not that an existing law?

Mr. HOAR. I understand it has been the habit in most of the Territories to eke out the salaries of judges by additional compensation. That has been prohibited by act of Congress in regard to each one, when attention has been directed to it, except in the case of Utah.

Mr. CANNON, of Utah. No, sir.

Mr. HOAR. I believe there are a few, but in most of them Congress has prohibited it.

Mr. RANDALL. I agree there ought not to be this double payment, and therefore have no objection to the amendment, so far as I am concerned. I cannot accept it because I am not so instructed by the committee.

Mr. STEELE. I hope this amendment will not be adopted, because it will be necessary if the House shall reduce the salaries of these judges to $2,500 a year, which is not settled yet, to do either one of two things: to lose every man who is fit and competent to sit on the bench to administer the laws or allow the Territories, all of them, to add to their salaries.

Mr. RANDALL. I venture the opinion that the reduction will not cause a single resignation.

Mr. STEELE. There will be a resignation of every good man. And all the incompetent men whom you send there that nobody wants will stay on. That is the kind of men we want to get rid of, and if your legislation would get rid of them only there is not a man in the Territories who would say a word against the reduction of their salaries. But your reduction strikes at the good men. And certainly if the Congress of the United States are not willing to pay a judge in the Territories enough to enable him to live as a decent man ought to live, they ought to allow somebody else to do it for him.

The question being taken on Mr. HOAR'S amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Now let the committee rise.

Mr. RANDALL. When the next paragraph is read, I will agree that the committee rise.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Secretary of War, $8,000; one chief clerk, at $2,250; one disbursing clerk, at $1,800; two chief clerks of division, at $1,800 each; five clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; twelve clerks of class one; eight messengers; and three copyists, to enable the Secretary of War to have the rebel archives examined and copies furnished for the Government, $2,700; seven laborers; five watchmen for the Northwest Executive building; in all, $67,110.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. RANDALL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the special order, being a bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 608) to enable Harvey Lull, of Hoboken, New Jersey, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a self-locking shutter-hinge.

CLAIMS FOR INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in conformity with the act of May 29, 1872, making appropriations for the contingent expenses of the Indian Department, claims of William Copeland and others for property destroyed by certain Indian tribes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CHEROKEE INDIANS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to House resolution of the 28th ultimo, a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs relating to the appointment of agents to the Cherokee Indians in North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ARMY SUPPLIES FOR POSTS IN TEXAS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting copies of all contracts for transportation of Army supplies for posts in Texas; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LYDIA MILLER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in the claim of Lydia Miller; which was referred to the Committee of Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was given as follows:

Mr. OLIVER, for three weeks on account of important business.

Mr. VAN VORHES, for ten days on account of sickness.

Mr. KASSON, for a few days on account of the sickness of a near relative.

Mr. HANCOCK, for two weeks on account of business.

Mr. HYMAN, for ten days.

Mr. BAKER, of New York, until May 13 on account of important business.

Mr. ODELL, for one week on account of important business.

Mr. WADDELL, indefinitely on account of illness in his family.

Mr. MAGOON, for one week on account of sickness in his family.

Mr. BAGBY, until May 12 on account of important business.

Mr. BOONE, for two weeks from to-morrow.

UMATILLA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. TERRY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1004) to provide for the removal of the Walla Walla, Cayuse, and Umatilla Indians from the Umatilla Indian reservation in Oregon, and for the sale of their lands; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

SECTION 658 OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina, (for Mr. WADDELL,) by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3257) to amend section 658, chapter 8, title 13, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. HOLMAN, (at five o'clock and fifty-five minutes,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama: The petition of workingmen and citizens of Cherokee County, Alabama, that the tariff remain unchanged, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee: The petition of Patrick Guinan, A. M. Westlake, G. W. Day, A. J. D. Thurston, and 27 other citizens of Gibson County, Tennessee, representing the depressed condition of industries of every description, the great shrinkage in property values, private and public indebtedness, attributing the same to a mistaken financial policy, and asking as a remedy that Treasury notes be made the exclusive currency of the country, and receivable for all dues to the Government, and interchangeable with interest-bearing bonds, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the petition of F. L. Sidebottom, for compensation for property taken and used by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DANFORD: The petition of J. N. Ogier and others of Cambridge, Ohio, against the manufacture, printing, and sale of envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and postal cards by the Post-Office Department at or below cost, and distributing the same through the mails free, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HATCHER: A paper recommending the passage of House bill No. 3095, relative to embezzlement by attorneys at law in the District of Columbia, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOUSE: The petition of Martha Somerville, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

By Mr. JENKS: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Kerr's Store to Limestone, Pennsylvania, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. KIDDER: A paper relating to the establishment of post-routes from Sioux Falls to Brûlé City by way of Wall Lake and Rockport, and from Fort Thompson to Marshfield by way of Flandreau, Dakota, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. RANDALL: Six petitions of citizens of Philadelphia and vicinity, against placing bicarbonate of soda, sal soda, caustic soda, and alum on the free list, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. WALSH: The petition of M. F. Holman, for compensation for property destroyed by the United States forces at Williamsport, Maryland, September 17, 1862, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of Charles Embry & Son, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Dodd & Holenberg, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of John Farron, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Lewis Chaney, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of W. Stiffy & Son, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of John A. Lemaster, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Jacob B. Masters, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Owen Ardinger, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Adam Shook, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Samuel A. Waltz, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Henry J. Ensinger, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of William A. Woolf, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of George W. Harris, of similar import, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Shook & Lefèvre, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. WELLS, of Missouri: The petition of the Merchants' Exchange of Saint Louis, Darby & Day, Charles E. Slayback, Obear White & Co., Charles F. Meyer & Co., J. E. Manks & Co., and others, for the definition of the powers of officers of the internal revenue, and to further provide for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS: The petition of workingmen of Jackson (Michigan) Chemical Works, against the placing of bicarbonate, sal or caustic soda, or alum on the free list, to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin: The petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, for compensation for goods destroyed by the tearing down of the old Northern Liberty market-house, Washington, District of Columbia, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WILSHIRE: The petition of Elizabeth J. Hampton, for a reconsideration of her claim disallowed by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 26, 1876.

Prayer by the Rev. E. R. CLARKE, of Vernon, Michigan.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2676) to regulate the assessment and collection of taxes for the support of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 104) for the relief of Edward O'M. Condon was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, for the information of the Committee on Military Affairs, a copy of a report of the Adjutant-General in the case of Benjamin F. Pope, assistant-surgeon, United States Army, discharged with a year's pay, under section 3 of the act of July 15, 1870, and whose discharge was subsequently revoked, and recommending the passage of a bill to determine the status of this officer; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 19th instant, in relation to the present situation of Indian disturbances in the Sioux reservation, a copy of a report from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with accompanying copies of papers therein referred to; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

IMMIGRATION OF CHINESE.

Mr. SARGENT. Some days ago I had laid upon the table a resolution with reference to Chinese immigration, the resolution stating that the Senate advises the President to enter into negotiations with the government of China to effect a change in the existing treaty so that the immigration to the United States of Chinese may be lawfully restrained. I desire to say that at as early a day as possible I shall seek to call up the resolution and have the action of the Senate upon it. I am aware that to-morrow we enter upon the impeachment proceedings, and it may be difficult to have this action immediately; but at the very earliest day possible I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate, in order to have this matter considered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of P. R. Sawyer, of Marine, Illinois, remonstrating against the passage by Congress of enabling acts admitting new States into the Union until they have a sufficient and suitable population to entitle them to not less than six Representatives, and against the admission of any State that permits polygamists, minors, or women to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAMILTON. I present a memorial of delegates of the civilized Indians in the Indian Territory, remonstrating against the passage of any law by Congress transferring them and their property to military control. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless there is some special reason, I object to the memorial being printed. It is against the rules of the Senate to print petitions and memorials. Probably this paper is long—I see that it is in print—and it ought not to be printed by the Senate unless the Committee on Indian Affairs desire it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio objects, and the memorial will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs without being printed.

Mr. WADLEIGH presented the petition of Lydia F. Davis, praying the passage of an act authorizing the removal of the charge of desertion against her late husband, John P. Hutchins, private in Company D, Sixth New Hampshire Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Ohio; which was read and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A joint resolution requesting our Representatives and instructing our Senators in Congress to have the pension law amended.

Whereas a large number of wounded soldiers of the late Union Army, from various causes, have failed to make application for pensions within the time specified by law, who are anxious to do so, but who are now barred by limitation of law: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That our Representatives in Congress be requested, and our Senators instructed, to use their earnest endeavors to have the law so changed or amended that those entitled to pensions may now be permitted to make application for the same.

Resolved, That the Governor be requested to forward to each of our Senators and each member of Congress from Ohio a copy of these resolutions, together with the action of the General Assembly thereon.

C. H. GROSVENOR,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

THOS. L. YOUNG,
President of the Senate.

Adopted March 27, 1876.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of chiefs, braves, headmen, and members of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians, praying the passage of a law authorizing the sale of their reservations in the States of Nebraska and Kansas and the removal of these tribes to the Indian Territory, reported a bill (S. No. 779) to provide for the sale of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska; which was read and passed to the second reading.

Mr. CAPERTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 770) for the relief of Judson S. Post, of Missouri, late disbursing officer of the United States Navy, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 915) for the relief of F. M. Blount, of Chicago, Illinois, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of J. B. Jeter and others, trustees of the Richmond Female Institute, praying for compensation for the use and occupancy of the institute building by officers of the United States Army in 1865 and 1866, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 780) for the relief of the Richmond Female Institute, of Richmond, Virginia.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to state as a member of the Committee on Claims, that I dissent from the report just made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I wish also to note my dissent to the report from the Committee on Claims with regard to the Richmond Female Institute.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 648) for the relief of Andrew J. Barrett, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2161) for the relief of R. H. Buckner, reported it without amendment.

Mr. COOPER. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2286) to further provide for the building of a custom-house, post-office, court-room, &c., in the city of Memphis, Tennessee, to report it back with an amendment and with the recommendation that it pass. The bill is to provide for the acceptance of a site from the city of Memphis by the Government for the building of a custom-house already provided for by law. If there is no objection I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think it had better lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts objects, and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. NORWOOD, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2287) for the relief of Peters & Reed, naval contractors at Norfolk navy-yard in the year 1860, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 19) for the relief of Peters & Reed, naval contractors at the Norfolk navy-yard in the year 1860, reported in favor of its indefinite postponement; and the report was agreed to.

SALE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 772) to facilitate the printing of public documents, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. It is hardly necessary to put this bill upon the Calendar. If Senators will allow it to be read subject to objection, I will explain it in a moment, and I think there will be no objection to its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It amends section 3809 of the Revised Statutes by striking out, after the words "the estimated cost thereof," the words "and 10 per cent. thereon;" so as to make the section read:

If any person desiring extra copies of any document printed at the Government Printing Office by authority of law shall, previous to its being put to press, notify the Congressional Printer of the number of copies wanted, and shall pay to him, in advance, the estimated cost thereof, the Congressional Printer may, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Public Printing, furnish the same.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, the present law allows any extra documents ordered by Congress to be printed for any individual upon his paying the estimated cost thereof and 10 per cent. in addition to the Congressional Printer, in advance. This bill allows such documents to be so printed on paying the simple cost. We have been in the habit of printing a great many documents for gratuitous distribution. We are desirous of encouraging the sale of these documents, which is the way they are disposed of in England, France, and other countries where they print public documents. The bill merely strikes out the 10 per cent. additional to the cost, so that any citizen or any member of Congress may buy documents by paying the simple cost thereof, instead of the cost and 10 per cent. in addition.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MERRIMON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 781) for the relief of Margaret Ireland, widow of Amos Ireland, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NORWOOD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 782) for the relief of the Macon and Western, Southwern, and other railroads in the State of Georgia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 783) providing for the extension of the time for completing the survey and location of the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTURES BY THE SHENANDOAH.

Mr. MCDONALD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States, if not incompatible with the public interest, be, and is hereby, requested to furnish the Senate with copies of all correspondence with the State Department, not heretofore furnished or printed, relating to the claims upon which judgments have been rendered or that may now be pending before the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, arising from captures by the rebel cruiser Shenandoah.

I desire to state simply that information has been given to me indicating that the awards which have been made in regard to the Shenandoah captures very greatly exceed the value of the vessels and cargoes as they were estimated at the time of capture, and that there is evidence which was not within reach of the officer representing the Government that might have lessened these awards very much. This resolution of inquiry will bring before the Senate such information. When it comes, if it is of the character that I understand it to be, it is my purpose to move its reference to the Judiciary Committee, that they may examine and determine what ought to be done. Undoubtedly awards have been made, unless the information which I have received is very much in fault, greatly in excess of the actual value of the captures.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

SPECIAL GOVERNMENT AGENTS.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate how many persons are now employed as special agents or as revenue or internal-revenue agents; whether appointed under sections 2649 or 3152 of the Revised Statutes, or under any other provision or authority, giving the date of their appointments respectively, the rate of compensation, and the expenses paid to each; whether in any case special rewards have been paid to or received by any of such agents; whether moneys have been disbursed or contracted to be disbursed by any such agents; also whether any such agents, and, if so, which of them, have been or are under the direction of any person other than the Secretary of the Treasury and not a subordinate of the Treasury Department, and, if so, by virtue of what statute or other authority.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 3022) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 99) concerning special-tax stamps, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OTHO R. SINGLETON, of Mississippi; Mr. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania; and Mr. HENRY WALDRON, of Michigan, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes; it agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ERASTUS WELLS, of Missouri; Mr. JOHN D. C. ATKINS, of Tennessee; Mr. EUGENE HALE, of Maine, managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 608) to enable Harvey Lull, of Hoboken, New Jersey, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a self-locking shutter-hinge; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AUSTIN-TOPOLOVAMPO PACIFIC ROUTE.

Mr. CONKLING. I move to reconsider the vote by which was indefinitely postponed yesterday a bill authorizing a survey of a railroad from a point mentioned to a point on the west coast of Mexico. I enter the motion to reconsider the vote by which that bill was indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from New York to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 92) to survey the Austin-Topolovampo Pacific route was postponed indefinitely will be entered.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire, as the bill was ordered to be printed last night, to offer an amendment that it may be printed at the same time with the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] to the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin. I submit the amendment which will be offered by me, and move that it be printed.

The motion to print was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MORTON. I move that the Senate take up for consideration Senate joint resolution No. 15, in order to enable me to submit some remarks, which will occupy but a few minutes. It is a joint resolution which I introduced some days ago, and it was reported adversely yesterday from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 15) authorizing the qualified voters of the District of Columbia to vote upon the question whether they desire Congress to establish a government for the District for the regulation of domestic affairs, the officers of which shall be chosen by the qualified voters of the District, and for laying the result of the election before Congress for information. It authorizes the qualified voters of the District of Columbia to assemble at the usual places of voting on the 16th of May, 1876, and to vote by ballot on the following question: "Is it the wish of the people of the District of Columbia to have a District government established by Congress to regulate and control their domestic affairs, the officers of which shall be chosen by the qualified voters of the District?" The voters desiring to answer this question in the affirmative are to have written or printed upon their ballots the word "yes." Those desiring to answer the question in the negative are to have written or printed upon their ballots the word "no."

The commissioners of the District of Columbia are to appoint inspectors and judges of election to hold and conduct the election in accordance with the provisions of the law of 1871 for holding elections in the District of Columbia, with the exception of registration, which shall not be required.

The commissioners of the District are to certify to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives the result of the election, to be by them laid before the two Houses.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I will occupy the attention of the Senate but a few minutes while I present certain considerations in reference to the adoption of this resolution.

It is said that the people of this District do not desire a popular government for the control of their local and domestic affairs. On the other hand it is averred that a very large majority do desire the establishment of such a government. In order to test that question, I propose to submit it to the qualified voters of the District. I understand and believe that there is a very respectable minority of the people here, with whom members of Congress chiefly come in contact socially and whom they meet principally about these Halls, who are opposed to such a government, and desire that this people shall be governed by commissioners, or by an appointed government. If there is any considerable number of this people who desire that their streets and alleys, door-yards and cisterns and fire department and all the small affairs that pertain to their government here shall be controlled by appointed officers, that will be shown by submitting the question to a vote of the people. On the contrary, if it is true, as I am informed it is, that the great body of this people desire to have a government of their own for the regulation of their local and domestic affairs, like other cities and towns in the United States, that fact will be manifested in the way proposed by this resolution.

Mr. President, the present condition of affairs in this District is anomalous, and I believe that the present form of government is not only injurious, but in conflict with the fundamental principles on which our institutions are established. We may sum up the leading principle of the American Government in this, that it is local and domestic government; that the people shall control their local and domestic affairs. Our State governments are predicated upon that idea, and it is a principle that cannot be neglected or disregarded with impunity. Congress cannot trample this principle under foot in the District of Columbia and expect it to be faithfully regarded and preserved intact over an imaginary line in the State of Maryland or in the State of Virginia; and the destruction of popular government here and the control of 150,000 or 160,000 people in this District by three commissioners or by half a dozen commissioners is an entering-wedge against the principle of suffrage. It is already quoted against us, and being done by the National Government, it will be used as an argument and an illustration in the States where there will be, and is now, warfare made upon universal suffrage.

In 1870 the population of this District, as shown by the census, was 131,700. It is fair to assume now that it is 150,000, or perhaps 160,000. The increase in population since that time has been very rapid. Assuming it to be 150,000, that is a larger population than is to be found in four or five States in this Union; and yet these States have not only two Senators each on this floor, but they have a Representative in the other House; and they have their local State officers and their Legislatures to look after their interests; but here are 150,000 people who are totally disfranchised, governed by pro-consuls, having no voice in the administration of their property, their domestic affairs, utterly powerless, as much as are the serfs of Russia. They are only 150,000, it is true, but enough to make a State if they were differently situated; and can it be said that we can deprive 150,000 people of all political and civil rights with impunity?

Why, Mr. President, when this District was formed the first thought of Congress after taking possession of it was to give to this people a local government. Congress assumed jurisdiction of the District in February, 1801, and in 1802 they passed a law giving to Washington City a municipal government.

In the first place, the law provided for incorporating the inhabitants of that portion of the District known as Washington as a body politic and corporate by the name of the mayor and council of the city of Washington. Then the act provides for a council, to consist of twelve members, residents of the city, upward of twenty-five years of age, to be divided into two chambers. It then goes on to provide that they should be elected by the free white male citizens of the District, and in section 7 enumerates the powers conferred on this council, being all the powers in substance that are given to ordinary city governments or to the ordinary State governments, leaving out of view however the operation of certain general laws of the States of Virginia and Maryland extended over the District.

For nearly three-quarters of a century the people of this District had a domestic government of their own choosing. In 1871 this government was abolished and then a mixed government was established; a legislature was provided; the District was described as a Territory, with a territorial government, and a board of public works to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, a board which substantially absorbed to itself the whole powers of the District; and whatever trouble may have come upon this District, it cannot be said to have come from the elective government.

Every argument against suffrage in this District is good in every State and city in this Union, and I call upon Senators who argue the danger of universal suffrage in this District to take notice that that argument, if it has merit, is just as good in the State that that Senator represents as it is here; and will any Senator who argues against universal suffrage in this District go home and present the same argument in his own State against universal suffrage? Will he contend that the cities and towns of his State shall be put under a pro-consular government, subjected to an authority over which they have no control or power whatever?

We now tax these people 2 per cent. on their real estate. It is taxation without representation, a violation of the fundamental principle of free government. That was one of the leading grounds upon which our fathers inaugurated the Revolution, taxation without representation. The British Parliament said, just as it is said in Congress: "Parliament has power to tax the colonies; we are under no obligation to consult the rabble of the colonies." They spoke of "the rabble of the colonies" just as a portion of the voters of this District have been spoken of in both Houses of Congress. They assumed the power to be clear and complete to tax this people without consulting them, and they did so; and our fathers laid it down as a fundamental principle in the Declaration of Independence, and it has been reiterated in every State constitution from the time of the Revolution up to this period that there shall not be taxation without representation. This people are here heavily taxed without being represented, without being consulted even by a Delegate, without being advised with in any way, and their money is expended by officers over whom they have no control, from whose action they have no appeal, and for purposes that they cannot direct. It is a despotic government in every phase. I do not care how intelligent or how honest these commissioners may be, they are after all but pro-consuls placed there by the Government of the United States; and if it is good to govern 150,000 people in this District in that way it is good to so govern five hundred thousand or a million people anywhere else. You cannot trample on this principle with impunity. All examples are dangerous in government, and if we now, at the end of nearly one hundred years after our Government was formed, can trample on the very principles for which our fathers fought, what have we to expect in the future? It is retrogression, it is going back. Why, sir, when our fathers accepted the cession of this District, they never thought of depriving this people of the power of self-government in their affairs. Their first care was to give them an act carefully and deliberately framed, conferring on them all the powers that belonged to people anywhere over their local and domestic affairs.

Now, Mr. President, let me say to you that this Government by commissioners, by regents, cannot administer the interests and the welfare of this people. It is not possible. There is not a town of five thousand inhabitants in the whole country that has not got its town council or its city government. They divide their towns, however small, into wards, and each ward elects its councilman or its representative. Why? Because he is presumed to understand the interests of that part of the town; he represents them, he brings them to the attention of the council, sets them forth and maintains them. In your State Legislatures every county has its representative. You do not have a few wise men who are to govern the whole State, but every county has its representative to present the peculiar interests and conditions and wants of that county; and in that consists the excellence and the superiority of our Government. Every part of the people, however small, is represented by somebody who comes from them, who belongs to them, who understands their particular wants and their condition. Now you have three commissioners here, excellent good men, to whom I am personally friendly, who will do just as well as they can; but what do they know about the local wants of this people? What do they know about that part of the town or the other part of the town—about the streets over the canal, or on the Island, or in the upper part of the city? What local knowledge have they? Can they represent these interests? Will they? They cannot do it. As I said before, every town is divided into its wards, and it sends to the council its councilmen from those wards who understand their interests; but here are 150,000 people who are governed by three men, perhaps strangers. They are strangers brought from abroad, and perhaps that will be the case hereafter. They do not sympathize with these people; they do not know their local wants; they cannot understand them. They cannot take care of them as these people can take care of themselves; it is not in their power to do it, whatever may be their desire. Their subordinate officers are not responsible to the people; they are not bound to consult the wishes of the people; they are not even bound to be polite. They may be insolent and indifferent to them. In the summer time these commissioners of course cannot afford to stay here. They must go away to where it is cooler or more comfortable. We have had an example of that kind in which the government of this people has been left in the hands of some subordinate officers; and this you call providing for 150,000 people at the capital of the United States!

Sir, the present Government is a shame in its principles and practical results; and what is the condition of the city and what will it be in a year hence? There are many streets in this town that are almost impassable now, and yet the people living on those streets have no power to stick a spade in them, to pull up a rotten block and put down a sound one, to make a macadamized pavement, or to fill up a hole. There is nobody to take an appeal to. If they appeal to these commissioners their appeal may be heard or it may not. In the multiplicity of their business it may be forgotten or overlooked. If a wrong decision or determination is made, they have no relief. Where shall they go? If there should be a whole section of the town neglected, and the streets become impassable, who is to remedy them? There are many streets in this city that you cannot haul a load of wood over in a year from this time unless something is done, and that you cannot drive a carriage over now, and they are breaking the springs of their fire-engines almost every day by running over these streets. Many of them will become absolutely impassable to the fire engines in a very short time; but the people are helpless.

I think, Mr. President, it is our duty to allow this people a voice in their own affairs. First it is duty in fidelity to the principles of this Government. I know it has been said by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] that Congress has power to govern this District and it is bound to do so. Well, power is given to Congress to govern it; but from the very beginning it was understood that that power with regard to all local and domestic matters could be deputed to the people and should be, and it was from the very start and for three-quarters of a century they had a local and domestic government of their own choice. That clause of the Constitution received that uniform construction. No, Mr. President, there is no soundness in that objection.

Congress has the right to govern this people through themselves, and it is the best way to do it; and whatever you may say about the abuses of suffrage they are nothing. There are some abuses, especially in the large cities, not the greatest in this city by any means, but they are nothing compared with the abuses of irresponsible government. If these commissioners are guilty of wrong, either of commission or omission, of indifference or ignorance, where is the remedy? Will you come to Congress and impeach them? That is a very slow process. Congress is not apt to take notice of matters of that kind in the form of impeachment unless there are some very grave considerations at stake, some great political advantage, or some very important matter. There is no remedy in the form of impeachment of these commissioners.

I may therefore say in general terms that this government and any appointed government will be an irresponsible government, that this people may be taxed without representation, their money expended without their consent and in ways to which they are not consenting and in which, perhaps, they are not interested.

But, sir, after all, the greatest objection in a broad point of view—I put it as a principle—is that the destruction of suffrage in this District is a blow at suffrage throughout the United States; and when the Congress of the United States, after a local government of nearly seventy-five years, shall strike down popular suffrage here, it will be used as an argument in many of the States, where universal suffrage is not popular, for doing the same thing. In every point of view, in my opinion, it is dangerous, it is unjust, it is anti-republican, and it is an example that will come back to plague us.

I believe the great majority of this people want to take care of themselves, and I believe they will do it; and if one elected government is guilty of abuse, the next will remedy it. The people always have an appeal to the ballot-box, and a dishonest mayor or a dishonest council will not come back the second time. But as the matter stands now, they have no voice; they are bound hand and foot. As I said before, the best appointed board of officers of two or five cannot take care of the interests of this people; they will not understand them, they cannot understand the local wants of the different parts of a great city. Hence it is that in every other city there are representatives from each locality to present the wants and interests of that locality. So it should be here.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, while I agree with much that has been said by the Senator from Indiana in regard to the government of this District, I do not at this moment accept his proposition, and I can state my objection to it best by asking the Senator from Indiana what he proposes to do if the qualified voters of this District under his resolution vote that they do not desire to have a government which shall be administered by officers elected by themselves? That question is the sum of my objection to his proposition. I think the principle which he has laid down is a true one and one that ought not to be abandoned in the District of Columbia. Nevertheless the Constitution undoubtedly has given to Congress power to govern this District in its own way, either by popular government or by a government set up without regard to the popular will of the District. I am inclined to the opinion that it is not only consistent with the general principles of this Government that we should have a popular government here, but that such a government in the end will prove better for the people of the District than any which can be established by Congress and maintained independently of their will.

I believe that the chief difficulty in establishing and maintaining a wise and reasonably virtuous system of popular government in this District is due to the fact that the people of the District have from time to time looked to Congress for appropriations and contributions, and have made expenditures in the expectation that those appropriations or contributions would be made; and the first thing, I believe, for Congress to do is to put an end to that expectation. An end to that expectation can be put in one way only, as I think, and that is by the Government of the United States declaring explicitly what part of the expenditures incurred in this District shall be paid from the public Treasury, and what part shall be paid by the people of the District, and allow the people of the District to incur and regulate the expenditures which they themselves are to meet as they are incurred by the people of other municipalities in the country.

And in view of the objection which I suggest to the proposition made by the Senator from Indiana, I move to strike out the whole of the resolution and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to prepare and report a bill for the government of the District of Columbia, the officers of which shall be chosen by the qualified voters of the District.

Mr. THURMAN. Is this resolution up for consideration now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. THURMAN. I did not expect that it would come up this morning, and I have very little to say upon it now. When it comes up in any proper way or any bill founded on it, I may have something to say because of the somewhat considerable attention I have given to the affairs of the District.

The first thing that strikes me a little singularly is that if the people of this District feel themselves as much oppressed as one would infer from the remarks of the Senator from Indiana, they have not manifested their sense of that oppression. I have not seen a single petition to Congress at this session praying for the restoration of what the Senator calls popular government in this District. I did see that some move was being made in that direction. I saw it so stated in the newspapers, and it may be that some such petitions have been prepared and presented; but I think they include but a very small number (if any such have indeed been presented) of the people of this District; the names upon them I mean are the names of but a very small portion of the people of this District; at least I think it must be so. The American people are not very likely to live quiet under grievances. Whenever they think or any portion of them think that they are suffering under a grievance, they are very apt to make themselves heard by petitions to the law-making power for redress; and it does seem to me that if the people of this District felt that they were oppressed, they would make their appeal to Congress.

But, passing that, I do not know for myself how, upon the principle the Senator from Indiana advocates, he can answer the question put to him by the Senator from Massachusetts: what will he do if a majority of the people of the District vote against his popular government?

I have one or two words, however, to say in respect to some of the statements made by the Senator from Indiana. He calls our attention to the fact that there are fifty-odd miles of streets in this city going so rapidly into decay that in a year or two you cannot, to use his expression, drive a wagon over them. The attention of the Senate has been called to that matter before. But under what government were those fifty-two miles of wooden pavement laid, for those are the pavements to which the Senator refers? It was under a government that had a Legislative Assembly the popular branch of which was chosen by the electors of this District. It was that very government, as popular in its form, I suppose, as the Senator from Indiana would desire, that inflicted the greatest wrong which in all its enormities it did inflict on this District by the laying at an immense cost of fifty-odd miles of worthless wooden pavements. That was done under that government.

Another thing. The Senator says that the commissioners cannot know the wants of the people. I do not know why they do not know the wants of the people. Three commissioners in my county know the wants of the people of Franklin County, and its territory is six times as large as the territory of the District of Columbia, and there nobody complains that they do not know the wants of the people of that county. But in reference to what the Senator says that these commissioners may be strangers, whose fault is it that they are strangers? Certainly it is not our fault that they are strangers. I took occasion to say when the bill for the abolition of the old government was up, that the appointment of commissioners was a mere temporary expedient, and that all that it was necessary to do was to appoint three able-bodied, God-fearing men in this District as a temporary government of the District for the time being; but instead of that the Executive saw fit to go outside of the District and appoint gentlemen of great name and distinction. I thought it was a mistake then, and I have thought so ever since, and I say that without disparagement to them. If these commissioners, or two of them at least, were men of high character and standing and ability, resident within this District, the business of the District would be taken care of much better than it can be by mere strangers; and that remedy can be applied at any time.

But again——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired. The Chair will call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the silver bill so called, Senate bill No. 263.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I ask the Senator from Ohio to allow that bill to be laid aside for the present.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know of no objection to its being laid aside informally; but let it stand as the unfinished business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I desire to call up Senate bill No. 334.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 334. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. Subject to the regular order, which is the unfinished business.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 169) giving the consent of the United States to the county of Dubuque, in the State of Iowa, to construct county buildings in Washington Square, in the city of Dubuque, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the following acts were received by the President on the 13th of April, and not having been returned by him to the Senate within the ten days (Sunday excepted) prescribed by the Constitution, had become laws without his signature:

An act (S. No. 192) for the relief of Caroline M. Purviance and Francis Wyeth; and

An act (S. No. 309) for the relief of William L. Nance.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 334) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, the measure I have called up to-day has for its object the aid of common schools and some further assistance to the national colleges. Other propositions are pending, both here and in the other House, in relation to this subject; but with all earnest men, if the leading purposes mentioned can be secured, the details will be of minor importance.

I start with the proposition that all of our public lands, which are hereafter to be sold and are not called for as free homesteads, should be held exclusively for educational purposes—purposes that tower high above and dwarf all others. Should any exception to this rule ever be suggested, let it then be considered on its merits.

SCHOOL LANDS DONATED.

We have already given to States, without regard to their population, 140,000,000 acres of land for the support of common schools, and eighteen of the States thus aided have a school fund of $43,866,785. The western or new States, as to common schools, would appear to have been liberally provided for. In the North and East the system of common schools has long held a foremost place in the hearts of the people, and cheerful contributions to their support by self-imposed taxation are made with all the regularity of the seasons. At the South they are far less advanced, and having no accumulated school funds, their people are at present unequal to the task of establishing and adequately maintaining such schools without some national assistance, not national control, although not unmindful of their utility and fully appreciating their urgent necessity. When even in Spain it is no longer immoral for women to know how to read, and when Sweden and Turkey engage in universal education, no American State will be found to hold back.

All statistics are dry—interesting to few and entertaining to none—and some are by no means pleasant or even tolerable to contemplate; but legislators, like surgeons, must probe the ugliest sores, and courageously examine even such facts as those I am reluctantly about to expose.

SCHOOL POPULATION.

Our school population of five years of age to seventeen inclusive is 12,055,443, or nearly one-third of our entire population. A mighty host, led now and controlled by us, but soon to control us and lead the van of civilization in the land of their fathers. Only about one-half of this number, or 6,545,112, attend schools of any sort, and among all of the four or five million of colored population only 180,372 attend school, or hardly enough to furnish a silver lining to a cloud so dark. Five million and a half of our population cannot write and four million and a half cannot read. Of illiterate male adults, twenty years of age and over, we have 1,611,213, of which number 748,470 are whites. There are thus more illiterate voters, among either white or colored, than the usual majority of any party taking part at any national election. They are, therefore, the potent auxiliaries of all parties, the decisive make-weights, and must more or less control the destinies of the country. Can any happy augury of ages to come be drawn from these dismal facts? "Do men gather grapes of thorns?"

The liberty and equality of an immense number of illiterate people, unmarked by intellectual eminence of any sort, empty of all virtuous gratitude springing from the memories of childhood and the schoolroom toward a parental government, is not such a state or condition as freemen toil for, nor such as they can be expected to maintain, love, and cherish. Along with entire liberty and equality before the law we behold among mankind the foremost and the hindermost as well, and there will be distinctions and differences in both the power and the industry of mankind, and both of hand and brain, with no two alike among them all, good or bad. It should be the mission of American legislators to offer sure means for the greatest possible development of this power and industry, and to diminish inequality by leveling upward and not downward. Thus only shall we be able to prove that republican institutions, quick to perceive and to foster the most exalted personal merits and qualifications, will neither dwarf the state nor the people. Thus only shall we show that our boasted equality is not inferiority to everybody else.

The several States are greatly interested in the removal of the deep-seated illiteracy to which I have referred, but by no means exclusively, as the interest of the General Government covers the same territory and embraces all and the same voters. The election of President of the United States and of members of Congress cannot be reckoned as less grave and important work than that of State governors and Legislatures. The parts are not greater than the whole.

Through the latest action of the people upon the national Constitution we have bestowed universal suffrage upon our fellow-citizens in all of the States. The nation is primarily responsible for this action, and, while accepting of its advantages, must shield itself as well as the States from the resulting possible perils. The increased magnitude of the burden which has been imposed by the sovereign will of the nation manifestly ought to be borne by the nation. Universal suffrage must be made a blessing and an honor to our country, not a curse to the citizen, nor to the States and the nation. Every one of our citizens has been crowned with equal power in the guidance of national and State affairs; but they have thus far had too little of our aid to fit them even to guide themselves. Many of the States resolutely assume their full share of the great responsibility, and raise by taxation and expend nearly $100,000,000 annually for common schools; and, when so much more is obviously required, shall the General Government look on with total indifference, contributing nothing?

CONSTITUTIONAL POWER.

Not only is the General Government profoundly interested in the enlightened and virtuous character of our whole people, but it has the exclusive power touching the disposal of the public lands, the largest and most appropriate educational resource by which that character has been and may be elevated and its deficiencies remedied. The language of the Constitution is:

> The Congress shall have the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

No grant of power could be more ample, none more explicit, and it must be exercised. It should not sleep and it cannot be delegated to other parties. Congress itself must dispose of the lands and make such rules and regulations as it chooses. If it appears needful and proper to dispose of this property for educational purposes, the noblest of all purposes, the power of Congress is supreme, and it can and ought so to ordain. Even if the pathway were less obvious, we have an unerring guide-board in the great ordinance of 1787, reflecting so much honor upon our ancestors, which not only provided the flaming sword to keep the great West free from "slavery and involuntary servitude," but also proclaimed this educational purpose in the strongest and most unequivocal terms, as will be found in one of its prominent articles, namely:

> ART. 3. Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.

These terms, made and declared at the time of the cession of the lands as "a compact between the original States," are mandatory as to our duty—national duty—in the premises. "Schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged," not by States alone but by this national fund. The logical concomitants of religion, morality and good government, could not otherwise be secured. We must adhere for all time to this compact, or be justly charged with a plain and palpable breach of a sacred trust.

The Government promised what it would do when it took charge of the land fund, and that promise cannot be avoided by the cranky plea that the Government has nothing to do with education. American citizens are not dependent paupers, and it is no humiliation for them, in spite of all cant phrases, to ask for what is their due. They form a great co-partnership, having, among other privileges, an equal interest in the education and perfection of all its members, and the poorest member is entitled to something better than his unaided resources might otherwise have afforded. If this were not true the association would be a failure, and, after all, the best form of government, controlled by illiterate bunglers, might prove to be the worst. The great crises of our so-called political experiment have passed away. Even the greed of territorial acquisitions and the passion to extend our rule over foreigners, the terrible fanaticism of republics, it is to be hoped has been satiated, and, with ample resources for prosperous trade and commercial independence, it now remains to us as our chiefest concern to establish a more solid basis of hope for our future career through a broader and higher education, adapted to the genius and taste of the American people.

If Congress has a binding duty to perform relative to education—next to religion the highest concern of mankind—it has also a duty scarcely inferior in its scope as to the discharge of an important trust, no less than that of the disposal of the residue of our whole public domain, in such manner as will best promote the present and future welfare, moral and material, of a great, enterprising, and exacting people, and in strict accordance with the terms of our compact.

Is it not a providential conjuncture that, while this moral exigency looms up before us, a national resource of ample dimensions is also waiting as a remedy for this very exigency—a resource unexhausted even by unthrifty husbandry, and which the common voice of the country will agree by acclamation should not be disposed of without a full equivalent, nor for any purpose less than the most sacred? The high duty of ownership, the great trust of the original States, long swaying to and fro, can now be fully, fittingly, and nobly discharged.

The present depleted and unsatisfactory financial condition of many of the Southern States, however substantial the latent elements of their future prosperity may be, needs neither proof nor illustration. None of us can remain unmindful of their wants, and Congress will in any constitutional manner move with alacrity to their relief when it can be done without detriment to the Republic, as here it may be, and done patriotically, with national as well as local advantage. These States need all the aid we can properly grant for both common schools and colleges, and they will still have to rely, in the race with their sister States and the world, largely upon their own efforts and enthusiasm to place themselves on the road to equal rank with those where educational institutions are more deeply rooted and where they have already given promise of good and abundant fruit.

EDUCATION THE RIGHT OF AMERICANS.

But while general education must be recognized as the common outfit of all men and the indisputable right of Americans, special and a more comprehensive education has become more than ever necessary to qualify each citizen for his own peculiar duties and position in life. Our latest civilization and the division of labor have opened new destinies and greater fortunes to mankind by wondrously multiplying the more productive and more remunerative occupations in modern society. New educational wants, keeping pace with a century and a half of marked original research, have been rapidly created, and nowhere perhaps more conspicuously than in the United States. The older colleges and universities have served well and, although the relative value of studies is not settled, with the modifications going on, will serve well to continue the eminence accorded to their system of literary education for those who are to obtain subsequent professional or special training; yet, as the sole reliance and last resort of the whole people, they are not only unequally distributed, but they have been hitherto either unable or unwilling to indulge much curiosity for any explorations outside of moss-covered traditions, and have given too little prominence to such scientific studies as might be most useful to the largest numbers, and strangely because of an obsolete theory that such would be accounted as of some use in practical life. A still more serious objection lies in the fact that the usual college course now costs triple the sum required fifty years ago. This objection is a growing one and should be overcome by larger public patronage or be checked by wholesome competition. The ladders by which boys climb from common schools to a college education should not be placed beyond the reach of the common people.

There is, therefore, a boundless field to be occupied by colleges which can and will give to students nowhere else provided for a greater proportion of time to the learning, which is not only disciplinary, but really valuable for its own sake and helpful as some part of the foundation to a chosen sphere in the affairs of a busy world. The tardy process of self-culture, by which men of mark have sometimes made their way, and which to large numbers, postponed until maturity points to other tasks, is the only process available, should be aided at the earliest moment by colleges that will enable a larger portion of those who cannot live without earning their living to bring forth and temper all the advantages of genius and talent with which by nature they have been endowed. Uncomputed numbers, with unknown and uncomputed power, ought not to be suffered so largely to run to waste. We are often sad to think of the greater possibilities which even men not destitute of all fame have barely missed through some slight mischance or short-coming, but we rarely mourn and ponder over the wide possibilities of the unknown multitude fated to live in the shade without culture or sunshine and who fall at last, like crowded trees in the unvisited forest, with all their latent strength and beauty to slumber forever with the moldering past. Among our people there is much of this valuable timber that a Republic promising so grandly as to race, position, and period cannot afford to leave in the background to utter waste. No; each one is—

> A living thing,
> Produced too slowly ever to decay;
> Of form and aspect too magnificent
> To be destroyed.

DISCONTENT OF LABORING-MEN.

Throughout the world, not excepting our own country, there is a deeply-seated feeling of discontent among laboring-men, not that they must labor, for that they are not unwilling, but that so large a share of labor is wholly rude, unlettered, and so rarely loved or respected. Necessity binds them to an unending routine, often transmitted from one unskilled generation to the next, with no training and no guidance up the steep ascent to a higher plane of more congenial toil and to a better intellectual and social life. They feel that much of the existing intellectual superiority with which they have to compete is not entirely natural, but largely artificial, or only the usual and inevitable advantage bestowed by schools and colleges, which, as they believe, ought to embrace a broader field to which they might furnish a much larger proportion of recruits and by which they could make their leisure hours too precious to be spent in idle dissipation. Something of the legitimate distinction conferred by human approbation, now and then a prize among so many blanks, even workingmen, the most industrious and upright, have a laudable ambition to achieve, or to have their children achieve, as they might, if the gate-ways of toil bore not too generally that fearful motto, "All hope abandon, ye who enter here."

Pent-up discontent in worn and weary hearts is not less explosive than pent-up steam. Among the stern wrestlers with the world there are many striving for the mastery of the bottom knowledge and skill—now more than ever necessary—to do more and better work, and thereby to obtain not only somewhat greater pecuniary rewards but such honors as they may fairly earn; not specially political honors, for they know as well as those who have tasted such that they are but ashes in the mouths of even the most voracious. Let them be qualified for any service, but above the need of political employment. A slight difference of earning-power often determines human happiness or human misery. Some opportunity for improvement, for that training which the wisest of men are eager to obtain and find indispensable must be conceded and tendered to this vast human force, which, if not wisely directed, may be mischievously directed, or, if not directed by those to whom it belongs, it will be directed by demagogues to whom it ought not to belong and whose trade ought not to be encouraged. The ever-active toilers, pursuing their vocations with an absenteeism of the heart, are visibly restless under what seems to them the unescapable servitude of their whole class. Each one harbors Shakspeare's mistaken conviction:

> Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
> And almost thence my nature is subdued
> To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.

An opportunity only is wanted by good men to acquire such qualifications as will afford through diligent effort some hope of creditable eminence even while earning their daily bread or some chance to make laborious employments here and there blaze with a few examples of their own shining lights, and possibly to perpetuate the memory of genius, enterprise, and greatness based upon honest industry and worthy manhood. No one here feels that poverty is a disgrace, but the disgrace arises when there is no effort by industry and education to escape from it. Our Government, the United States, provoking so much attention as it does in the history of the world by its unexampled growth, can afford neither cowardice nor indolence, and should awake to its grave responsibilities by being foremost to respond to educational demands so earnest, so reasonable, and so easily satisfied.

NATIONAL CHARACTER.

Some learned sophists have claimed that the National Government is not responsible for the national character, that it has no personality, and no duties as to moral elevation or as to education of any kind; and they have also even averred that education can give no guarantee to republican institutions. This is an extreme enunciation of the doctrine of nihilism or of the governmental do-nothing policy, and it follows that the Government should have no conscience, no sense of honor, and be as unmindful of itself as the thistle-blow, when wafted hither and thither by whatever windy currents chance to prevail, with no power of will to choose whether to grow or to perish by the way-side, and if by chance to grow, with no power to propagate anything but thistles. The denial of governmental personality is the disease of atheism, which covets all the sorrows but none of the joys or hopes of life, and is compatible only with a ruling despotism.

But this doctrine is alien to the fundamental idea of our form of government and wide away from the mile-stones which mark its pathway from the start. It was intended that our Government should have special regard to its own character, should exhibit the foresight and statesmanship of the people, and, finally, that it should live and not die. It was never intended that its sole functions should be to punish crime, keep the peace, collect taxes, and put down rebellion, and after that to let the world slide. Though we have freedom, wealth, and courage, and have not character, have not virtue and knowledge, we are nothing—less than sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal.

Long ago that sturdy puritanic republican, John Milton, set forth the doctrine, by no means alien to our own era, that "a commonwealth ought to be but as one huge Christian personage, one mighty growth and stature of an honest man." Again he declared, that "to make the people fitted to govern will be to mend our corrupt and faulty education." The formula of John Locke was that "the end of government was the good of mankind." These were some of the principles that guided the robust founders of our own Republic. In the very heart and core of our institutions all the virtues were to find a home. The people here ordained and established a government for the people; their obedience under it was to be obedience to themselves; and they have always felt and always will feel that to it attaches some responsibility for their own national character and that of their posterity. They strove here in the New World to exalt the race of mankind and to build up model institutions. The good of the governed, in the highest political sense of perennial and perfect health, was the chief object, and that could not be secured by constitutional indifference to their virtue and their moral and intellectual elevation. The national character was not to be exalted by faith without works, but by ideas and sentiments springing from a broader education, which inspire manly efforts, and fill and fructify youthful minds.

The States, it is true, have much to do, but the national Government, superior in its higher nature and wider scope, has more important work to do, having given to each State the guarantee of a republican form of government, a guarantee impossible of fulfillment, as our wisest men have never denied, without general and thorough education. Rich universities abroad, if not at home, possibly with a minimum of outspoken partiality to republican institutions and a Ciceronian contempt for labor,* may be supported by the voluntary aid of wealth or by the generosity of men flickering in their exit from the world, but such aid rarely steps forth to lift up the masses, whose education has never been supported by spontaneous and continued charity, and can only be firmly supported under the auspices and direct inspiration of government. The national Government, however, is not here called upon to do much, but its flag should march at the head of the great uplifting procession, and cannot afford to hide away in cheap non-committalism when the dignity and character if not the future glory of its citizens are dependent upon its leadership.

To support the character of our national Government and its honor every citizen willingly stands ready to sacrifice not only property but life itself; and shall it be said for this the Government is to do nothing in return? Are there no reciprocal duties? Stripped of personality, character, dignity, virtue, and moral elevation as a basis of governmental duties, what would there be left to love, or what that patriotism would rush to defend? What that a Christian would pray might be immortal? The character of a nation clearly does not altogether depend upon its geology, climate, soil, oysters, and terrapins, but very much upon its governmental and educational institutions and upon that growth of manhood which is their ripened product. Great living may be very well, but a great life is far better. No nation is more sensitive to the estimate of others than the American people.

Nor is it enough that "the upper ten thousand" of cities have culture and that each rural village has its luminous ring of the educated minister, lawyer, and doctor. The magic circle should be more broadly expanded and include the whole country instead of scattered microscopic patches. Under a free government the nation acquires rank, not by a few daintily-polished individuals, the bell-wethers of a feeble flock, but by the intelligence and majesty of the entire community; not by one stone superbly cut, but by the proportions and grandeur of the completed edifice.

THE COLORED RACE.

But it may be objected that this policy includes all, without regard to race or color; and why not? Are we to praise freedom and shirk the duty of making it better than slavery? Having emancipated a whole race, shall it be said there our duty ends, leaving the race as cumberers of the ground, to live or to wilt and perish, as the case may be? They are members of the American family—forever in sight—and their advancement concerns us all. While swiftly forgetting all they ever knew as slaves, shall they have no opportunity to learn anything as freemen? They are to be the sources of great strength or of great weakness, of glory or shame. "It is impossible," says a recent English writer, "that the knowledge which is power in one race can be absolutely impotent in another." This appears to me to be a truth, pertinent to us and our times, which we shall do well to consider. Surely the American Congress will not emulate the courtly cruelty of the Duke of Alva, that minion of Philip II, who promised to some prisoners life, but, when they petitioned for food, replied that "he would grant them life but no meat." Shall we grant liberty and then refuse it all nourishment?

ECONOMY.

I well know that the present is a time when, in the interest of sound economy, all worthless schemes, every doubtful expenditure, all windy humbugs, as well as all sinecures, should be—will be—pitilessly slaughtered, and I mean to contribute, as I trust I have never failed to do, my full share of work to that kind of slaughter; but unwise, bat-eyed economy may often be actual prodigality or the saving of seed-corn at the expense of the whole crop; and it would be a portentous omen to the future destinies of our country if aid and encouragement to learning and science, to schools and colleges, should be doomed to crucifixion in such disreputable company. Upon the broadest principles of the purest and most far-reaching economy, the friends of the present bill base its highest claims to public favor, and it cannot be put down by a hue and cry raised to crush measures of a far different character, with which it has neither kinship nor affinity.

It may not improperly be claimed that this measure really plants the seeds of a future harvest of revenue and will in the end not only augment the productions of industry and increase the wealth of the country, but that it will thereby add considerably to the receipts of the Treasury, which always rise or fall with the general prosperity; and beyond all this, so far as a broader education rapidly tends to multiply the number of letter-writers, or promotes the interchange of ideas and courtesies, as well as of commodities, it may be expected to contribute something toward lifting up even the Post-Office Department nearer to a self-supporting condition. The first year of common schools in Great Britain increased their postal revenue over $3,000,000. It is then by no means fanciful dreaming to claim this school and college bill incidentally as a revenue measure, and that its passage will ultimately actually increase the revenues of the country.

In every great enterprise it is true we must consider what we are to lose as well as what we are to gain. By the proposed measure of further aid to national colleges and a very substantial contribution to common schools, we shall gradually part with our title to the ownership of a limited quantity of land—small in comparison with the bulk of our possessions—from which the policy of acquiring ordinary revenue long ago practically ceased. Broad acres we shall still offer free to all who ask for homes. But for revenue purposes the public lands can now furnish no regular basis, and their value ought to be held as far too precious to be bartered for merely moneyed equivalents that must be swallowed up at once in ordinary expenditures.

On the other side, the gain here proposed to be slowly derived from any sales of these lands will be a perpetual educational fund, retained in the custody of the nation and kept, like the heat of the summer sun, forever undiminished, while barely the interest thereon will be annually expended by each State for the culture and enlightenment of all their coming generations.

By this fund we first promote primary education by aiding State systems of common schools, and then we are to have institutions of learning—at least one college—in every State, planted on foundations not very magnificent, it is true, but as broad and firm as the foundations of the Government itself, by which a more complete education in every portion of the Union will be brought within the reach of larger numbers—too poor to seek it in any modern Athens or Rome—and to whom it will give that "crown and scepter" which thorough education always gives, but gives, alas! to too few. Surely, what we are to gain, as indicated even by this tame and stinted recital, is far more precious, far more considerable, than what we are to lose. In fact, it is an error to assume that we are to lose anything when we rescue and preserve for ages that which might otherwise in some earlier or later flood of congressional grants disappear altogether, leaving no enduring trace behind except the record of sundry petty schemes with the "hungry edge" of local appetite for such schemes sharpened rather than satisfied.

But even the relatively insignificant portion of the public domain which can now under any circumstances be appropriated for the purposes here indicated will in many ways contribute to the strength and glory of our country. It will be the disposal of the surplus part of the national farm—of a few back lots—for the permanent improvement of the remainder, and for increasing the skill and all the forces of those charged with its future ownership and productive development.

RAILROADS.

It may be that some friends of further subsidies to railroads would still prefer such projects to any policy of education. It is apparent that the whole world have invested too lavishly in railroads, we more than any others, for the interest of the present generation, however beneficial the investments may or may not prove hereafter. Without any national system in the location, but a "mighty maze" of discordant lines, it is not strange that an immense capital has been sunk. From the present temper of the people, it may be assumed that land subsidies have accomplished all they can accomplish and have spent their force. We have donated to railroads 210,756,807 acres of land, which at double the minimum price, though often fetching much more, will amount to $526,892,017. Will not that suffice? I am sometimes forcibly reminded of the "fable of the lion and other beasts hunting," where it is shown how the lion takes "the lion's share;" having divided the prey into three parts, appropriating the first to himself as king, the second to himself for his share in the chase, and defying anybody to lay hand on the third. Certainly the railroads appear to have taken "the lion's share," having divided the prey and appropriating the first part as king, the second to themselves as their share in the chase, and now will they defy anybody to lay hand on the third? We shall see.

MILITARY AND NAVAL SCHOOLS.

Very early the national Government founded the Military Academy, and subsequently the Naval School. This was done in harmony with the statesmanship of past ages, and in accordance with modern examples, to make the most of the human fighting force of nations. Nothing was to be spared necessary to educate and train men in the most skillful methods of destroying their enemies. A previous national declaration of the purpose, it is understood, makes wholesale manslaughter a glorious achievement. Even an education pointing to such an end as this, embracing a considerable share of science, with the modern languages and much of the martial and naval history and philosophy of mankind, as well as the polish of methodical discipline, has given a certain degree of superiority to those entitled to wear the uniform of their class. Like ancient knights, they outranked the common people, who seemed to shrivel up in their presence, and to this day, often without the merit of heroic services, they are accorded precedence over the most distinguished civilians, with only the oratorical exceptions, perhaps, of "bright particular stars" among the legal profession.

Would this be so if the great masses of the people, engaged for life in pursuits for the support of themselves and the institutions of human government and the adornment of Christian society, received that training of the schools which favors the arts of peace and the knowledge and skill which produces not only men of the highest value to themselves and the world, but which will hasten on the millennium of national arbitrations, instead of more and more sad and bloody pages of human history?

It is not any reproach that military and naval officers master their professions in schools supported by the Government, unless it is done with no intent to render any service therefor, or because the education is esteemed better than is to be found elsewhere, giving, as it really does, a high standard of duty, order, and military honor; but it is a reproach that governmental duties there stop. The defenders of the country are vastly important, in war indispensable; so are all whom they defend, or defenders would not be required. And while the latter are educated and then maintained through life, the former, by whose constant toil not only soldiers and sailors are maintained but the Government itself, ought not to be dismissed as below the military standard in height without some provision that they too may have the proper educational armor to become masters in their own battle-fields of industry.

While the world is in a transition state and all lands do not yet rest from war, the art cannot be wholly neglected, inasmuch as it is still true that "one sword keeps another in its scabbard," and therefore something of military science and discipline as an incident of these national colleges is provided for and will be obtained by all of their students, supplying in any emergency to each State a valuable aggregate of available knowledge, and that without any charge to the national Government.

WHAT THE NATIONAL COLLEGES HAVE DONE.

But the pertinent inquiry may be made, what have the colleges, started under the act of 1862, done that gives room to hope for their success or that entitles them to further favor? It may be too early to seek a full answer to this question, but there is no reason why it should be evaded. To call them a failure "would be," as the president of Dartmouth College lately said to me, "as absurd as to call the day a failure when we had seen but half an hour of it." It is unwise to despise small beginnings, for they often forerun great things. It will at once be noted that nearly one-third of these colleges have not yet had time to get into working order, but by the latest reports which I have examined, twenty-eight of them, while yet in the cradle of their existence, had 3,842 students with 356 instructors, being an average of 137 students and 12.7 instructors respectively. Compare this with the 323 older institutions, the growth of a century, which in 1873 had no more than 25,010 students and 3,108 instructors, or only an average of 77 students and 9.6 instructors respectively. Surely these facts, so early developed as budding evidences of honor and usefulness, will put to flight any doubts as to the amount of work being done or as to the share of public consideration they are receiving, and the national colleges may now fearlessly challenge the support of the most cautious legislators. Upheld by the industrial classes as well as by nearly all of the scientific men of the country, as they are and will be, their success cannot be doubtful; and let me ask for what other 15,000,000 million acres of public land has the Government so much to show?

These colleges are often called "agricultural colleges," perhaps because here for the first time agriculture obtained equal favor, or even any attention, or because several States have given that name to their institutions as an honorable distinction, or possibly the term may be sometimes derisively applied, as though it were an absurdity to expect any growth of science and learning from an agricultural college; but while it is true that all sciences related to agriculture are to be included and must be and are taught in these national institutions, though not to so great an extent as it is to be hoped they yet will be, there is nothing excluded touching any other industrial, mechanical, or even classical interests. The charter is broad, covering no sham, no inferior work, and if it had been made narrower, these colleges would not only have been less useful but even more exposed to narrow and jealous criticism, and certainly would not have escaped the sneers of those who flout the name of agricultural colleges as a damaging epithet or as a brand of reproach. Ignorantly they have possibly bestowed a watch-word of talismanic power which may both plague and shame the inventors. The clubs of jealousy and passion do not always remain in the hands of those who first bring them into the conflict.

By the law of 1862 the several States were to establish at least one college, and, being unrestricted, they could rightfully bestow such names upon their respective colleges as they pleased, so long as they brought the character of the institutions within the terms prescribed by the act of Congress. Is it not puerile to criticise the public taste about mere names? A college is not specially a "union college" because it has been so named, nor is a college merely a town college, though bearing the name of some town.

Not less unreasonable is it to expect that all graduates of the national colleges must become agriculturists and forever follow the plow. They have the right to do that or anything else they choose; to be artists, mechanics, surveyors, merchants, teachers, lawyers, doctors, or ministers; but whatsoever they are, they will be better for being thoroughly and scientifically equipped, and they will also be better able to tender more or less valuable aid to all branches of industry, despising none.

The total number of professional men in the United States educated or who should have been educated at classical colleges is only 146,993,* while agriculturists are numbered by millions and consequently should hold, as they do, prominent privileges in the national colleges; but they neither ask nor hold any exclusive privileges. All the useful arts, all mechanical and industrial employments, are hopefully recognized and offered an impartial support. Classical studies are by no means ignored, but are provided for all those who have time to acquire them and who may have occasion for their future display, and for those who are free from care and solicitude as to present and future maintenance. Scientific knowledge, however, in spite of all doubts, is as sublime and as beautiful as any other—so thought Bacon and Newton and so thought Franklin and Agassiz—and being also both commonly and grandly useful it here has a leading position, and what are usually esteemed as elegant and ornamental courses of study, asked for by the present limited class of the so-called learned professions and by gentlemen of leisure, come in as of secondary importance, as they must come, on the field and in the work-shop, in the counting-room and in the factory.

It is proposed to offer the means for a generous and sound education, not without a body for its feathers and with a steady leaning toward such branches as will assist young men in their work when they reach their ultimate field of duty and prevent them from forsaking that field because of its monotony or because of its exclusion from all the graces and attractions of the schools. Is it in vain to seek to embellish the daily life of physical labor with something of the luster of intellectual discipline? The brain is certainly not to be wholly neglected because it clings to such home-bred allies as bone and muscle, which do more and far better work when wisely guided by a well-trained head.

I find an account of fifteen farms attached to the national colleges, which average three hundred and fifty acres each, and they are rapidly getting to be farms of model excellence, where many of the most valuable experiments are made and where, to some extent, the best breeds of stock are constantly exhibited. What is done is not hid under a bushel. These farms with stock and tools are expensive, and some of the colleges are yet without the requisite funds to secure or to maintain them. Several of the States have already supplied these deficiencies. The aid here proposed would enable all to move more satisfactorily in this direction, while it would furnish resources for more efficient work in many other respects.

If the number of college students proposing to be farmers is less than it should be, so much the more need is there of creating and cultivating a taste in that direction, and it must never be forgotten that lack of means for long terms of study makes all colleges almost inaccessible to the vast majority of mankind. It requires also some intrepidity, even for boys inured to labor, to avow that they are preparing to work with their hands, even with skilled hands, as well as with brains, among associates many of whom are rather too proudly setting out to work and shine only with the latter; but the number attending the national colleges with such earnest purposes is much larger than is supposed or than make any proclamation of their intentions in advance, and the facilities for obtaining all the present available theoretical and technical knowledge of agricultural science has been in most cases, and will be in all, liberally provided.

According to the late census our entire male population, ten years old and over, was 14,258,866, and 5,525,503 of these were engaged in agriculture, besides 400,000 females so engaged. Almost one-half of our whole population, it thus appears, are devoted to agriculture. They have, therefore, in numbers alone paramount claims to consideration, and beyond such claims there underlies the vital problem of a future supply of cheap food, upon the abundance of which hinge the growth and maintenance of a great people with great and constantly expanding wants. No extent of land can be sufficient without a sufficiency of competent and willing labor. The vocation of farming and husbandry must be made both attractive and lucrative, or it will be, as it has been, renounced at every decade by an increasing number of deserters. The pursuit of money-getting alone—all-pervading as the passion may be—is unsatisfactory, and those who furnish food for the whole body of mankind may reasonably demand some share of mental sustenance or at least may demand the crumbs which drop from the tables of the learned.

THE PRODUCTIVE POWER OF FARMS DECREASING.

It is also a fact well ascertained that as a whole our soil is being rapidly reduced in its productive power. I have heretofore called attention to this fact as exhibited in every census return since 1840. Our husbandry appears to be based upon the wants of the nineteenth century alone and refuses to speculate on the wants of the twentieth. Present profits, not the increased and fixed value of farms, absorb attention. By our too general habit of uncompensated cropping it is plain that we are steadily exhausting the fertility of the land in the new as well as the older States. The wheat region retreats westwardly as relentlessly as the march of some fearful epidemic; in the land of the Puritans they are almost as dependent for corn as they were in the days of Miles Standish, when Indians furnished a scant supply; and now the grasshopper plague seems on the wing challenging even the westward empire of the farmer.

The census of 1870, notwithstanding the evidences of a rapid development of wealth and population, discloses some unwelcome facts. With a much larger acreage and millions more of population, as compared with 1860, there was only a small gain in wheat, oats, butter, and potatoes, while there was an absolute diminution, incredible as it may appear, of cattle, swine, corn, rye, rice, tobacco, cotton, cheese, sugar, and molasses.* Improved implements now enable farmers to cultivate double the quantity of land cultivated by their fathers, one man with the reaper doing the work of ten men, and thereby securing with less laborers greater present profits; but by this grasping, broad-gauged husbandry, by too infrequent rotation of crops, by too little reliance upon manual labor and home-made manure, and the dire exhaustion which follows the exportation of cereal crops, they also secure a larger deterioration of the soil, and the general crop per acre year by year grows perceptibly less. Our fast and thoughtless machine-farming makes us forget that the earth can ever grow old and unfruitful.

Surely it will not be improper to give some heed to the lesson brought to our notice by such ominous and irrefutable facts. The only amendment possible is through a better and more scientific treatment of the soil as well as a higher and better treatment of those who are to be its future proprietors. Is there any mode by which that result can be more generally and successfully promoted than through the establishment of these national colleges? Certainly none are offered, none are visible, at home or abroad.

Let it be borne in mind that the products of farms depend not more upon their fertility than upon the intelligence of their occupants. Ireland is a land of great fertility, but has not been overstocked with schools; while Scotland is far less fertile, and has a much rougher climate, but it has long been famed for the universality of its schools. The result is that Ireland has not been free from famine, and her population departs in droves to other lands; while in Scotland, you not only cannot starve a Scotchman, but the population thrive by intelligent industry and is constantly on the increase.

O'er a' the ills o' life victorious—

Notwithstanding the immense interest in farms and farmers, the General Government, possibly still the largest land-holder of the world, has yet done little, very little, for agriculture, even less than many European governments. Only 15,000,000 acres, all told, have been granted under the land grant to the national colleges of 1862, and this covers all that has been done in behalf of a higher education, not only for the millions engaged in agriculture, but for the 2,707,421 persons engaged in mechanical, manufacturing, and mining pursuits. Commerce, with its light-houses, harbors, breakwaters, buoys, coast-surveys, and naval protection, has sometimes absorbed more in a single year than all that for eighty years has been done and all that it is now for coming ages proposed to do for agriculture.

I begrudge nothing to commerce; but agriculture and the mechanic arts deserve a more liberal recognition, and those employed in these pursuits, as worthy as the worthiest, can have but little respect or tenderness for any fallacies or grim humors brought forth to exclude their claims. The grand extent and dignity of agriculture cannot be safely or wisely ignored by any men or any parties in America, where it is probable that more real farms are owned, and practically worked by the owners, than in all of Europe. Tradesmen may fail, commerce may suffer shipwreck, railroads may bring their owners and creditors to grief, banks may stop payment, but the farmers never stop; they face all vicissitudes of trade and of adverse seasons, face even sneering neglect, and, standing to their noble but unambitious calling, are never less than the backbone of the State. Though the world turns round, though the flood comes and the winds blow, every farmer, planted on the deep foundations of his own homestead, feels that beyond all peradventure this is mine.

IMPORTANCE OF SKILLED LABOR.

Perhaps there are few questions of higher moment than the future of our industrial and mechanical trades. The throng of foreign artisans and mechanics annually coming to our shores are eager for places at the head, and our own men must be made superior, or at least equal in skill, or they may be driven from their employments, and perhaps from their homes. In many departments of industry the longer experience of Europe, and more regular apprenticeship, gives to their best workmen some rather formidable advantages. This, with the imported barbarous despotism reigning over our "trades unions," restricting the number of apprentices among the masters, not unlike the tyranny of wild horses, which kill off male colts, is tending to cripple the progressive growth of native mechanics, and the number of young men now seeking to learn trades is unnaturally circumscribed. The only remedy for this is a higher standard of technical education for our own workmen, who should, with all their inborn aptitudes fully developed, everywhere aim to be the best, and no more be outstripped in the quality of their work than they are in the quantity.

A BENEFIT TO ALL OTHER COLLEGES.

A general advance in the scholarship of farmers and mechanics, of merchants and manufacturers, or of the population at large, cannot prove detrimental to men in the so-called learned professions or to literary colleges. All these would be stimulated beyond a doubt to make a greater advance and take up a higher position than that now held, as there is indefinite room; but this should be hailed as a high recommendation, one of the exalted benefits to accrue from the establishment of the national colleges, and could not be construed as incompatible with the standing and prosperity of existing literary institutions. If any officers among the latter should anywhere exhibit skepticism and exceptional jealousy respecting a higher education for the industrial population, as very few have done and less will do, it would justify the charge, not entirely new, that they are too much actuated by either monastic or aristocratic bigotry, and deserve pity for their palpable lack of sympathy with popular institutions. I feel sure that no true American will ever prize his own education higher because there may be others who cannot get it; and the purpose here is to increase the usefulness of the colleges we have created, not the demolition of the old.

AMERICAN INVENTIONS.

Among the conspicuous evidences of comparative intellectual and industrial activity of the people of different States may be reckoned their inventive power, as exhibited by the number of original patents annually obtained for new and useful inventions. These require elaborate thought, intricate and dexterous combination of ideas, and the practical application of scientific principles. Wherever enlightened and active industry prevails, the people will be found to have a decided aptitude for devising and constructing labor-saving instrumentalities—confirming Franklin's humorous definition of man as "an animal who makes tools"—though not so much for the object of saving labor as for increasing the rapidity of production and improving the quality of the product. It is the triumph of brain-power, which once put in motion by schools and colleges never stops, but keeps on to the end of life. One success is an incitement to fresh ventures and the inspiration which leads others to kindred efforts. Perhaps we have no reason to be dissatisfied with our present record when contrasted with that of other nations, as it will show four times the number of patents annually issued compared with Great Britain, notwitstanding that no applicant there is refused, questions of interference being left to the courts, while here nearly one-third are rejected for reasons of conflict, lack of priority, or inutility. It is even possible that we are as widely known abroad for our Yankee inventions as for anything else.

The State of Michigan, largely agricultural, is young and vigorous, just out of its teens, and yet in 1873 there were 356 inventors, or one annually to every 3,326 of her people; but South Carolina, one of the old "thirteen," unfortunately deficient in schools and colleges, had only 25, or one to every 28,224 of her people. The State of Connecticut, crowded with manufactures and the mechanic arts, leads off in the same year with 622 inventors, or one to every 864 of her people; while in New Mexico, nearly barren of educational institutions, there was only one patent issued among a population of over 91,000. Michigan and Connecticut are blest, not only with the best system of common schools, but with higher institutions of learning among the foremost in the land. These States stand in the front rank as to wealth and education, and there can hardly be a better illustration of the fact than the number of patents annually won by their people. They are constantly surprising their contemporaries by something new, that will lighten labor and benefit the world.

Patents were first devised to secure titles of nobility, but when they were at length used to secure the titles of the inventors to the cut-nail machine, the American reaper, the sewing-machine, and the electric telegraph, they were used for a far nobler purpose. Here are titles of nobility, not incompatible with republican institutions, but adorning and giving luster to the pedigree of the humblest citizen.

"The nation most quickly promoting the intellectual development of its industrial population," says Justus Liebig, "must advance, as surely as the country neglecting it must inevitably retrograde."

The world is beginning to comprehend this profound truth. The vaunting of our superiority over what we esteem the less favored portions of mankind, while they are steadily advancing, will beget a complacent stand-still policy, and too late we may find that we have much to learn, as we found at the London exhibition, as the British found at the Paris exposition, and as the French found while held by the mailed hand of better-educated Prussia.

THE CENTENNIAL.

Our Centennial will truly exhibit a young nation of wonderful promise, but the disclosure of deficiencies sure to occur—when we shall "see ourselves as others see us"—will be a lesson not least to be prized if it shall cure the small amount of conceit to which in our modest moods we sometimes slyly and reluctantly confess. Of course we can "whip all creation," nevertheless it may not be well to challenge such a strain oftener than centennially. Modern civilization, the arts, trade, and commerce, bring out the relative value of the masses, and nations no longer conquer and are no longer judged by the brilliant career of a single successful leader. The combined power of the people, their aggregate force and their general intelligence, gives the chief luster to and mainly determines the destiny of nations. The power of educated force and skill is pre-eminently the great gift to man, and brings in its train not only intellectual wealth but material and political independence. It does not attempt to "cut blocks with a razor," nor to fit round holes with square plugs. Why do we at so much cost open many mines only to find at last nothing to show but a hole in the ground? More special previous training might preclude this not uncommon grief. Why are so many of our railroads non-paying investments? Largely because they have been unscientifically located, and then built not only prematurely, or in advance of any business support, but with a lavish disregard of expenditure. It has been computed that not less than several hundred millions of dollars have been lost in the United States by inferior and faulty railroad engineering. Certainly the over $4,000,000,000 invested is now barely worth half the cost. Germany, far better educated in this respect, obtains large revenues from railroads, and constructs them more scientifically, and even with a praiseworthy parsimony, as we might have done, if national colleges in every State had furnished engineers with the appropriate training. In the time of Plato, as he says, "you could buy a common builder for five or six minæ at most, but for a master-workman not even for ten thousand drachmæ, for there are few of them even among all the Greeks." That is to say, the master-workman was then worth twenty times the price of a common laborer. There and here men are no longer slaves, but the difference in their personal valuation has not diminished by lapse of time.

EDUCATED MEN.

But beyond the calculation of mere dollars and cents, it may be regarded as an axiom that where the masses are educated, there will be a nation of patriots, strongly devoted to the principles of civil liberty and observant of the laws of a stable government. Such men build up and do not tear down. One thoroughly educated man exerts an influence over an entire neighborhood, sometimes throughout the state and nation; but the influence of a well-directed college is much more extensive and much more permanent. The latter is a perennial fountain, always pouring forth a living stream of moral and intellectual missionaries. Generation after generation may pass away, but the college never dies. Our national colleges, fitted for their work, are not servile copies of previously existing institutions, whether at home or abroad; but, though different, are intended to be in the progress of time not inferior in character and completeness to any in the world—capable of a continuous and healthy growth, and in entire harmony with the wants and sentiments of the American people and of the age. They will tend to produce unity, amity, and equality among States widely separated, but going hand in hand to the end of time. They will make a perpetual contribution to the political strength and the intellectual stamina of our country, which is to be forever governed by the people; and the great question now to be solved is whether it shall be well governed by an educated, vigorous, and virtuous people, or be dragged down by the preponderance of illiterate and blundering imbecility, as the conspicuous wreck of the last vain hope of mankind.

TEACHERS.

It has been conceded by nearly all of the profoundest thinkers upon the subject that the speediest way to promote general education is first to establish institutions where the highest and most thorough culture can be obtained, as a true standard of excellence, and in order to furnish the best tools for future work, or to supply a full corps of competent teachers for the preparatory and common schools. Expenditures to sustain incompetent teachers are not only a positive waste of money but an irreparable waste of time on the part of scholars. We are young but once, and, if untaught or ill-taught then, few will wonder or lament if our dust shall steal in silence to the "tombs of short memories." The old English proverb ran, "It is as good to be unborn as unbred."

In all of the States there is a great want of thoroughly qualified teachers. The poorly qualified so largely outnumber the better sort and so largely underbid in the matter of wages that they have brought discredit upon the profession. Competent teachers, who should be retained for life, shun the ridicule heaped upon the whole class of temporary pedagogues and jump out of the profession at the first opportunity. Elevate the whole class and there will arise an esprit de corps that will permanently protect its own reputation.

This want of proper teachers is not only very conspicuous in the Southern States, and so to continue until an indigenous supply can be provided, but the want pervades all of the Northern States, apparently becoming year by year more aggravated, and only populous cities and large towns now secure the best class of teachers. The rural districts for the most part maintain school-mistresses, who quickly manage "to step down and out" by getting married, and but a few of the sex of which Dominie Sampson and Ichabod Crane were such shining ornaments.

In the message of the governor* of Pennsylvania of January, 1874, we have the "startling declaration" that 15,003 persons in that great and prosperous Commonwealth received certificates as teachers in common schools, but only 374 of this multitude "were found to have a thorough knowledge of reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, and grammar." Certainly that State is not alone deficient or in danger of falling into the ditch by employing the blind to lead the blind.

If good teachers are sadly needed in Northern States, are there not abundant reasons to suppose that they may be needed elsewhere?

The national colleges in the Southern States are thus far sending out a very large part of all their graduates as teachers. There is a constantly increasing demand for them, and, being mostly to the "manner born," they escape the jealousy to which teachers from distant States have often been and long will be subjected. These colleges will assuredly make large additions to the stock of thoroughly-trained educators, and those that are incompetent are always unattractive and profitless to the pupils most in need. If there were no other work for national colleges, here is enough and sufficiently important to repay all of their present and prospective cost. It is manifestly an indispensable prerequisite to the foundation and maintenance of common schools that a regular army of proper teachers, more than one lesson in advance of the pupils, should first be created and composed of those who will be most in harmony with our civilization, life, and Government.

NO JEALOUSY AMONG INSTITUTIONS OF LEARNING.

The national colleges, unlike some other more favored institutions, have not been so enriched by endowments as to be made too proud to ask for more, nor are they so envious of the prosperity of others as to view with alarm efforts made to multiply American institutions of learning, or to make them stronger and of greater utility. They are young, scarcely half-fledged, and confess their immaturity; but they start at a time when most needed, and, young as they are, show that they are beginning a work of great magnitude, truly American in character, which has not been done and will not be done without their assistance. They modestly but firmly stand on their own merits, interfering with nobody, except to offer a liberal education, not too greatly encumbered by old traditions, and abreast with the advance of the present times, that will be accepted by many instead of by a few, to whom it will be more available because tendered at less cost, and better because of more flexibility with reference to their taste, habits, and position in life. A leading object has been and will be to reach out and to include more of those, to be gathered nowhere else, who can be made of greater value to their country through a higher development of their natural faculties, by bringing out the gold that is in them as well as the iron.

With an institution of this kind in each State, all the local wants, however various and widely apart, can be wisely studied and provided for, and many young men will obtain near at home a sound mental training who might otherwise never have been prompted to make the necessary effort, or, if prompted, might not have been able to afford the expenditure and loss which would be involved in its pursuit by a deduction of four years from remunerative industry, including also a costly pilgrimage to more distant and expensive establishments. Having an opportunity to acquire an education which will plant the foundations that serve to some extent to support pursuits or professions previously chosen, they will not be driven at the last moment to choose abruptly a profession to fit their education.

Some of the time-honored literary institutions, needing nothing, ask nothing for themselves, and it would be passing strange if they should complain of any Government favor to others. Far above the reach of rivalry, grandly subsidized by private endowments, and encouraged by the loyal support of their ever-swarming alumni, it cannot be supposed they would foreclose and deny everywhere to others all support, and, "like an Eastern despot," to use the words of Bacon, "strangle their rivals in order to reign peaceably."

If the Government, however, is to do anything, it cannot attempt indiscriminate aid, and certainly need not help those in no want of help, but must make its selection so as to benefit the largest and most meritorious numbers among the industrial classes who fail to find existing and accessible institutions adapted to their special wants. The proposed grant will place no national college upon an equal footing with many of those which are already rich, and which it is to be hoped will be too proud and too generous to exhibit any jealousy of the prosperity of others; for, with their troops of active friends already organized, even when any calamity overtakes them it only foreshadows a larger measure of prosperity, or proves the signal of fresh bounties from those who seem more ready to give than are the afflicted to ask.

But can a few literary institutions, renowned and opulent as they may be, with all other similar but less favored institutions following with unequal steps in their wake, do the educational work of Texas, of Kansas, of Mississippi and North Carolina, as well as of all the other States? In all or nearly all of the old literary colleges, as has been shown, they have but 25,010 students, of whom less than one-fourth graduate annually; and thus they turn out not many more than five thousand educated young men annually for the whole of our forty-six States and Territories, or not enough to furnish one in ten of the civil service of the United States. Can that be considered adequate to the full requirements of 44,000,000 of people, having an annual increase of males alone of not less than 500,000? On the contrary, it is furnishing a sadly inadequate equipment. One thoroughly educated boy in a thousand is not enough. It will not leaven the whole lump. We require the seeds of a more advanced educational culture to be planted where they will grow and ultimately be diffused over all parts of the land, leaving no Bœotian deserts, and, when diffused, that the benefit shall accrue to all classes of the community and even to the land itself.

No well-established institution fears to be outrun, nor will any one attempt to monopolize the whole work of higher education or seek to stand as a central luminary in whose presence all others must "pale their ineffectual fire." Education as a monopoly would be the direst and most odious of all monopolies. But a broad and popular system should disseminate more universally a higher as well as a common-school education in each and every State. No portion of our country should be left as a possible future wilderness of ignorance. Seats of ample learning on one edge only of the Republic would be like a beautiful garden on one side of an immense estate with all of the remainder left barren and desolate or thick set with weeds and brambles. Men trained and fitted for any and every duty must be grown and ripened in the localities where wanted in order that, whenever a first-class man of science or learning seems to be required in any vocation or position, no State shall be found deficient and be compelled to submit to the weak and uncertain dependenence of transplanting the unemployed surplus, the cheapest floating stock of more distant regions. American States, unlike those of ancient Greece, will ever be reluctant to send to Sparta for commanders.

CONCLUSION.

No Senator ever speaks without some impression, more or less profound, of the importance of his subject. If I have erred in this estimate by trespassing so long upon the patience of the Senate, I crave that charity which others may need when embarrassed by the diversity and abundance of the facts and details to be submitted. I have endeavored to point out—

First. That the fund to arise from all sales of public lands must hereafter be very inconsiderable. Whatever the extent of the public domains may be, it is growing less year by year, and the homestead demands, by foreign immigrants and by the hundreds of thousands of American citizens annually arriving at their majority, are steadily increasing. Surely the small driblets remaining to be actually sold ought to be consecrated, in accordance with the conditions set forth in our title deeds, to "schools and the means of education" for the permanent and universal benefit of the people.

Second. That more aid to common schools of a better type is needed in every quarter of our Union and that it is much wiser to give to youth assurance and faith in a higher life than to provide dungeons for manhood.

Third. That the number of those who are being thoroughly educated is disproportionately small, and that colleges to which many more of all the industrial classes might resort are not only vitally important but are loudly demanded by all those who do not hold an education to be a baneful luxury from which all the indigent and industrious, as so many born dunces, are to be excluded in the lump.

Fourth. That, while it is not proposed to divert any funds from the Treasury that will not yield a fourfold return, the objects aimed at are more precious than gold or silver, and a higher and more universal education will yoke neither the people nor the Treasury with poverty.

Finally, may I not invoke favor to such legislation as not infrequently makes men better than the law, that will tend to kindle a national passion to have Americans as a whole become the best educated of any people in the world, that will attach them more ardently to a free government than to any other known to mankind, that will inspire some ambition to excel in the arts of peace as well as in the arts of war, and bring forth that wisdom which gives security and progress to society, and which may serve to make our native land and its ever-increasing millions of people eminent in the future annals of time for all the virtues required to adorn character or race among the nations of the earth?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. By the order of the Senate the Japanese indemnity bill was directed to be taken up to-day. The chairman of the Committee on Finance will not unnecessarily, I trust, press the silver bill. But as the Senator from Texas wishes to make some remarks on the subject which is now before the Senate, I yield the floor to him for that purpose.

Mr. MAXEY. It is to the courtesy of the Senator from New Jersey farthest from me that I am indebted for the privilege of presenting to the Senate and the country what I have to say on the important measure pending in the Senate to-day. On Thursday last I gave notice to the Senate that when the bill now pending should be called up, I would offer an amendment as a substitute for the bill. I now present that amendment and ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Secretary will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the net proceeds of sales of public lands are hereby forever consecrated and set apart for the education of the people: Provided, That this act shall not have any effect to repeal, impair, or suspend any law now authorizing the pre-emption of public lands, or the entry of public lands for homesteads, nor as limiting in any manner the power of Congress to alter or extend the right of homestead upon such lands: And provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be held to limit or abridge the power of Congress over the public domain, or interfere with granting bounty lands.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause an account to be taken upon the close of each fiscal year, and ascertain the total receipts from the sale or other disposition of the public lands of the United States, including all fees received at the general and district land-offices during such year, and the amount of expenditures during said year incurred or occasioned by the survey, sale, location, entry, or other disposition of such lands, including appropriations for the expenses of the said officers for said year, and shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury the amount of the net cash proceeds from the sale, entry, location, or other disposition of such lands as aforesaid, after deducting such expenses and expenditures.

SEC. 3. That upon the receipt of such certificate, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, on or before the 31st day of July of each year, apportion to the several States and Territories and to the District of Columbia, upon the basis of population of the said States and Territories between the ages of five and twenty years, the net proceeds of sales of public lands for the previous year: Provided, That the said net proceeds of said sales shall be set apart as an educational fund, and shall be invested in the bonds of the United States bearing a rate of interest not less than 4½ per cent. per annum, both principal and interest payable in coin, the interest on such educational fund only to be appropriated as above provided: And provided further, That for the first ten years the distribution of said net proceeds and the interest on said fund to and among the several States, Territories, and District of Columbia shall be made according to the numbers of their respective population, of ten years' old and upward, who cannot read and write, as shown from time to time by the last preceding published census of the United States: And provided further, That one-half of the net proceeds so apportioned to each State or Territory for the first five years after the passage of this act, and one-fourth of said net proceeds for the next five years thereafter, with the proportionate interest accruing on said invested fund, shall be appropriated by said State or Territory to the support of colleges established, or which may hereafter be established, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts:" And provided further, That thereafter one-half of the income arising from said educational fund, and which shall be apportioned to each State or Territory, shall be annually appropriated to the more complete endowment and support of colleges established therein in accordance with the aforesaid act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, until the annual income thus accruing to the said colleges in each State shall have reached the sum of $30,000; then the said amount only shall be annually appropriated to said colleges, and the whole remaining annual income of the aforementioned educational fund shall thereafter, in the manner provided in this act, be appropriated by each State and Territory, including the District of Columbia, to the free education of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen years.

SEC. 4. That the first apportionment under this act shall be made on or before the 31st day of July, 1876, and each of said States and Territories shall be entitled to receive its distributive share of each apportionment, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to its treasurer or other officer authorized by law to receive the same, whenever thereafter it shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury a certified copy of the law of such State or Territory accepting the provisions of this act, and undertaking that the funds provided by the same, whenever paid over to it as above provided, shall be faithfully applied to the free education of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen years, and to the endowment and support of such colleges as have been or may be hereafter established in accordance with the aforesaid act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and as provided for in this act. The distributive share of the District of Columbia shall from time to time be paid over to the commission of said District created by act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," or other officer or officers provided by law, and shall be applied in the same manner as above provided for the States and Territories.

SEC. 5. That to entitle any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to the benefits of this act, it shall maintain for at least three months in each year a system of free public schools for all the children within its limits between the ages of six and sixteen, and shall, through the proper officer thereof, for the year ending the 30th day of June last preceding such appointment, make full report of the number of public free schools, the number of teachers employed, the number of school-houses owned, and the number of school-houses hired, the total number of children taught during the year, the actual daily attendance, and the actual number of months of the year schools have been maintained in each of the several school districts or divisions of said State, Territory, or District, and the amounts appropriated by the Legislature or otherwise received for the purpose of maintaining a system of free public schools. And if any State or Territory shall misapply, or allow to be misapplied or in any manner appropriated or used other than for the purposes herein required, the funds, or any part thereof, received under the provisions of this act, or shall fail to comply with the conditions herein prescribed, or to report, as herein provided, through its proper officers, the disposition thereof, such State or Territory shall forfeit its right to any subsequent apportionment by virtue hereof, until the full amount so misapplied, lost, or misappropriated shall have been replaced by such State or Territory, and applied as herein required, and until such report shall have been made; and all apportionments so forfeited and withheld shall be added to, and become part of, the principal of the educational fund hereby created.

SEC. 6. That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to affect in any manner the existing laws and regulations in regard to the adjustment and payment to States of the percentage of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands within their respective limits as provided in section 3689 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the public domain was acquired by the United States by cessions from Virginia, North Carolina, and Connecticut, by compromise and purchase from Georgia, by cessions from various Indian tribes, by the acquisition of the Territories of Louisiana and Florida, by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, by the Gadsden purchase, and the Alaska purchase.

The system of surveys of public domain now in use was established by act of Congress approved May 18, 1796, and perfected by an act approved February 11, 1805.

The wise and sagacious policy of aiding settlers in the newly acquired territory in the establishment of schools by cessions of public domain was early adopted by this Government.

By an act approved February 15, 1811, one township in the Territory of Orleans, south of Red River, and another north of that river, were granted in aid of seminaries of learning, and by the same act section 16 in each township in that Territory was ceded for the support of schools within the township.

By act approved December 12, 1820, 3 per cent. of the net proceeds of the public lands of the United States in the State of Illinois, which since the 1st of January, 1819, have been or thereafter may be sold, are applied to the encouragement of learning in said State. Like aid has since been extended to other States wherein public domain is situated. By act approved March 3, 1823, section 16 in each township in the State of Missouri is appropriated in aid of schools. In addition to this, Missouri received by the act approved February 15, 1811, two townships, or seventy-two sections, for the support of a seminary of learning.

This policy has been continuously kept up and applied to all the new States and Territories in which the United States owned public domain.

By section 1946 Revised United States Statutes, New Mexico, Utah, Colorado, Dakota, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming each receive sections 16 and 36 in each township for the support of schools within the townships, and by section 1947 Washington Territory is in like manner favored. It is unquestionable that the success in a large degree of the present thorough common-school systems in operation in the States carved out of the public domain is owing to this far-seeing and liberal policy.

It was in my judgment eminently a proper policy. The pioneers who penetrated the wilderness, carrying civilization with them, undergoing every hardship, and braving every danger, were rich only in their untiring energy and unbending integrity. They created new States. It was right to help them educate their children. The people of the whole Union were beneficiaries of their hardy enterprise. It was by their exertion that the seat of empire has been transferred from the East to the Valley of the Mississippi.

The Northern and Eastern States were prosperous and rich when the great West was a wilderness. The accumulated wealth of centuries has enabled them to build up common schools which justly command the admiration of the civilized world. While I believe all the States are equitably entitled to their distributive share of the public domain or its proceeds to aid in the support of common schools, still the old Northern and Eastern States could well afford to postpone their equitable demand until the new States and communities were rich enough to ask no special favors. This they have done. Many of the new States have passed the old in the race for wealth, population, and influence.

Senators from the Northern, Eastern, and Western States are far more capable of speaking for themselves than I for them in respect to their common schools and school systems and their ability to maintain them. It may be asked, Why has the South lagged behind in this noble enterprise? I imagine the good sense of Senators will teach them that it matters not now, for practical purposes, to ask or answer why.

If the fact exists that the facilities for the education of the masses in the South are not so good as in the more favored sections of the Union; and if it be true, and it undoubtedly is true, that the perpetuity of free institutions rests upon the virtue and intelligence of the people; and if the policy of the Government to which I have referred and which has been in successful operation for near three-quarters of a century to help the needy to educate their children be wise, as it undoubtedly is, then there is no better field for its practical application than in the stricken Southern States; and it is in their behalf I plead to-day before the American Senate.

I might say, and with truth, that before war devastated the beautiful South our people were rich. By such common schools as we had, and by private schools, there were few so poor as not to be able to give their children the rudiments of an English education. I might say, and with truth, that every department of this Government has been adorned by the splendid genius, profound statesmanship, and scholarly attainments of southern men. The fame of Washington, Jefferson, Henry, Madison, Randolph, Marshall, Jackson, Houston, Calhoun, and Clay, and their glorious compeers, is part of the heritage of our common country, and will pass on to future generations with the Adamses, Hamilton, Roger Williams, Livingston, the Clintons, Webster, Woodbury, Silas Wright, and their compeers, of the "immortal few who were not born to die." I might say, and with truth, that when we had the means, the poorest boy in all the South who desired an education always found extended to him a helping hand. But war left us for the time stripped of wealth. By the indomitable energy of our people we are rapidly recovering from the prostrated condition in which the close of the war found us, and, God willing, by our own exertions we will soon be a wealthy and prosperous, as we now are a progressive, people.

The close of the war found our labor system broken up, and those who had been held in a condition of servitude were not only emancipated, but perfect equality before the law with the white man was secured to them by irrepealable law. To-day they have the same civil and political rights as the white man. They can acquire and hold property, vote and hold office, sit upon juries, administer on estates, and be guardians of the persons and estates of minors. This Government has bestowed these great rights upon these people. Emerging from a condition of servitude in which their race had been held for centuries, they were necessarily without education and without the means of educating themselves or their children. Hence the great burden of sending the children of these people to school was in a large measure, almost entirely, cast upon the whites of the South, impoverished as I have stated, and with their own children to educate. This was a grievous load, yet our people, to the best of their ability, have bravely borne it.

It has been said that the democratic party was opposed to common schools. Those who thus say have failed to read history aright. The system of granting public lands in aid of common schools, so prolific of blessings to the people of so many States and Territories, was a democratic measure passed by a democratic Congress, and approved by James Madison, a democratic President. The 3 per cent. of the net proceeds of the public lands in Illinois granted that State in aid of schools was a democratic measure passed by a democratic Congress, and approved by James Monroe, a democratic President; and every democratic administration, so long as that party continued in power, carried out the wise policy inaugurated in 1811. I follow the faith and practice of the fathers, and support the measure now pending.

I have already given some of the reasons why, in my judgment, the passage of this bill is especially important to the Southern States; but, to present my reasons in a clearer light, I have approximated as nearly as may be to the number of white children in the Southern States in 1870 between the ages of five and eighteen, and the number of colored children between the same ages at the same period.

The Census Report of 1870 furnishes a column for males between five and eighteen, and another for females between the same ages; but there are no separate columns showing the number of white children and the number of colored children within these ages. But, taking the total whites of all ages and the total colored of all ages in the Southern States in 1870, we can approximate with sufficient accuracy for practical purposes to the number of white children and the number of colored children in those States between the ages of five and eighteen years. This I have done, and now present to the Senate the following tables which I have compiled with the aid of the Census Report of 1870:

Statement showing number of white and colored children between the ages of five and eighteen.

States.	Total males between the ages of 5 and 18 years.	Total females between the ages of 5 and 18 years.	Total white population of all ages.	Total colored population of all ages.
Alabama	173,273	169,703	521,384	475,510
Arkansas	84,645	80,847	362,115	122,169
Florida	32,873	31,024	96,057	91,689
Georgia	206,026	201,490	638,926	545,142
Kentucky	230,491	224,648	1,098,692	222,210
Louisiana	112,520	113,594	362,065	364,210
Maryland	122,932	121,522	605,497	175,391
Mississippi	141,412	137,587	382,896	444,201
Missouri	294,316	283,487	1,603,146	118,071
North Carolina	182,421	177,509	678,470	391,650
South Carolina	118,509	115,406	289,667	415,814
Tennessee	217,922	211,670	936,119	322,331
Texas	145,184	139,667	574,700	253,475
Virginia	200,103	196,709	712,089	512,841
West Virginia	76,879	73,965	424,033	17,980
Totals	2,339,506	2,278,828	9,275,856	4,472,684

RECAPITULATION.

Total males between 5 and 18	2,339,506
Total females between 5 and 18	2,278,828
Aggregate males and females between 5 and 18	4,618,334
Total white population of all ages	9,275,856
Total colored population of all ages	4,472,684
Aggregate of all ages, white and colored	13,748,540

The ratio of whites to colored in the States enumerated is shown by the foregoing table to be a fraction over two to one. For convenience, and as sufficiently accurate for practical purposes, I make the estimates on that basis, with the following result:

Total white males between 5 and 18	1,559,671
Total white females between 5 and 18	1,519,219
Aggregate white males and females between 5 and 18	3,078,890
Total colored males between 5 and 18	779,835
Total colored females between 5 and 18	759,609
Aggregate colored males and females between 5 and 18	1,539,444

I now separate the Southern States in which cotton is not the leading staple, as follows:

States.	Males between 5 and 18.	Females between 5 and 18.	Total whites of all ages.	Total colored of all ages.
Kentucky	230,491	224,648	1,098,692	222,210
Maryland	122,932	121,522	605,497	175,391
Missouri	294,316	283,487	1,603,146	118,071
Tennessee	217,922	211,670	936,119	322,231
Virginia	200,103	196,709	712,089	512,841
West Virginia	76,879	73,965	424,033	17,980
Totals	1,142,643	1,112,001	5,379,576	1,368,824

RECAPITULATION.

Total males between the ages of 5 years and 18 years	1,142,643
Total females between the ages of 5 years and 18 years	1,112,001
Aggregate between the ages of 5 years and 18 years	2,254,644
Total white population of all ages	5,379,576
Total colored population of all ages	1,368,824
Aggregate of all ages, white and colored	6,748,400

The above table shows nearly four whites to one colored. Upon this basis we have—

Total white males between 5 and 18	914,115
Total white females between 5 and 18	889,601
Aggregate white males and females between 5 and 18	1,803,716
Total colored males between 5 and 18	228,528
Total colored females between 5 and 18	222,400
Aggregate colored males and females between 5 and 18	450,928

In the cotton States proper we have the following results:

State.	Males between 5 and 18.	Females between 5 and 18.	Total whites.	Total colored.
Alabama	173,273	169,703	521,384	475,510
Arkansas	84,645	80,847	362,115	122,169
Florida	32,873	31,024	96,057	91,689

South Carolina	118,509	115,406	289,667	415,814
Texas	145,184	139,667	564,700	253,475
Totals	1,196,863	1,166,827	3,896,280	3,103,860

RECAPITULATION.

Total males between the ages of 5 and 18 years	1,196,863
Total females between the ages of 5 and 18 years	1,166,827
Aggregate males and females between the ages of 5 and 18 years	2,363,690
Total white population of all ages	3,896,280
Total colored population of all ages	3,103,860
Aggregate white and colored population of all ages	7,000,140

The above table shows about eleven-twentieths white to nine-twentieths colored.

Total white males between 5 and 18 years	658,274
Total white females between 5 and 18 years	641,754
Aggregate white males and females between 5 and 18 years	1,300,028
Total colored males between 5 and 18 years	538,589
Total colored females between 5 and 18 years	525,073
Aggregate colored males and females between 5 and 18 years	1,063,662

Thus it will be seen that, taking all the Southern States together, they must provide for the education of 3,078,890 white children between five and eighteen and 1,539,444 colored children between the same ages. Counting the States of Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia together, we find those States, with an aggregate white population of all ages and both sexes of 5,379,576, will have to bear mainly the burden of educating 1,803,716 white children and 450,928 colored children. The States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Texas, with a white population of all ages and both sexes of 3,896,280, have mainly the burden to bear of educating 1,300,028 white children and 1,063,662 colored children between the ages of five and eighteen, or an aggregate of children within these ages of 2,363,690.

Now, it cannot reasonably be expected that the colored race so recently enfranchised could have acquired much taxable wealth, nor is it reasonable that they should so soon be keenly alive to the incalculable blessings of education. Yet these colored male children are soon to become active members of the body-politic. The more enlightened they are the better citizens will they make. Ignorance is not limited in its blighting influence to the locality where it may exist and unfortunately it may be found in every section, nor, in this instance, to the race least informed, but it permeates the entire body-politic, and under our free Government impresses itself to a greater or less extent upon the Federal Union. It is therefore wise, and never more so than now, for the Government to lend a helping hand to a struggling people.

The equitable claim of the Southern States, in my judgment, is irresistible. The appeal addresses itself to the sense of justice of the American people. The colored people were made free, and then citizens, with all the rights of other citizens, by the act of the Federal Government. It found them illiterate, wholly unacquainted with governmental affairs. It made them citizens, equal before the law with the most enlightened. It worked this crude material into the political fabric. Is it not wise to furnish them the means of education? And as they are entitled to no other or higher privileges than the children of the whites of the South, who, by the liberation of this race lost so heavily, it is equally the duty of the Government, in my judgment, to furnish the aid impartially to both white and black. In so doing, the white people of the South, who are mainly the tax-payers, will have a burden materially lessened, not borne by any other people in the Union. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the common-school systems of the Southern States, outside of Texas, to speak with accuracy.

The benefits of common schools in Texas since the war have been extended to white and black alike. The schools are separate, as they should be, and it is acceptable to and to the interest of both races that they should be kept separate, for no other system could be maintained. But the school fund has been impartially distributed for the benefit of the children of scholastic age of both races. The constitution of Texas, recently adopted by a majority of over 80,000, requires separate schools to be provided for the white and colored children, and that impartial provision be made for both. I read from the constitution of Texas, as follows:

ARTICLE VII.

EDUCATION—THE PUBLIC FREE SCHOOLS.

SECTION 1. A general diffusion of knowledge being essential to the preservation of the liberties and rights of the people, it shall be the duty of the Legislature of the State to establish and make suitable provision for the support and maintenance of an efficient system of public free schools.

SEC. 2. All funds, lands and other property heretofore set apart and appropriated for the support of public schools; all the alternate sections of land reserved by the State out of grants heretofore made or that may hereafter be made to railroads, or other corporations, of any nature whatsoever; one-half of the public domain of the State; and all sums of money that may come to the State from the sale of any portion of the same, shall constitute a perpetual public school fund.

SEC. 3. There shall be set apart annually not more than one-fourth of the general revenue of the State, and a poll-tax of $1 on all male inhabitants in this State between the ages of twenty-one and sixty years, for the benefit of the public free schools.

SEC. 4. The lands herein set apart to the public free-school fund shall be sold under such regulations, at such times and on such terms as may be prescribed by law; and the Legislature shall not have power to grant any relief to the purchasers thereof. The comptroller shall invest the proceeds of such sales, and of those heretofore made, as may be directed by the board of education herein provided for, in the bonds of this State, if the same can be obtained, otherwise in United States bonds; and the United States bonds now belonging to said fund shall likewise be invested in State bonds, if the same can be obtained on terms advantageous to the school fund.

SEC. 5 The principal of all bonds and other funds, and the principal arising from the sale of the lands hereinbefore set apart to said school fund, shall be the permanent school fund; and all the interest derivable therefrom and the taxes herein authorized and levied shall be the available school fund, which shall be applied annually to the support of the public free schools. And no law shall ever be enacted appropriating any part of the permanent or available school fund to any other purpose whatever; nor shall the same or any part thereof ever be appropriated to or used for the support of any sectarian school; and the available school fund herein provided shall be distributed to the several counties according to their scholastic population, and applied in manner as may be provided by law.

SEC. 6. All lands heretofore or hereafter granted to the several counties of this State for education, or schools, are of right the property of said counties respectively to which they were granted, and title thereto is vested in said counties, and no adverse possession or limitation shall ever be available against the title of any county. Each county may sell or dispose of its lands in whole or in part in manner to be provided by the commissioners' court of the county. Actual settlers residing on said lands shall be protected in the prior right of purchasing the same to the extent of their settlement, not to exceed one hunded and sixty acres, at the price fixed by said court, which price shall not include the value of existing improvements made thereon by such settlers. Said lands and the proceeds thereof, when sold, shall be held by said counties alone as a trust for the benefit of public schools therein; said proceeds to be invested in bonds of the State of Texas, or of the United States, and only the interest thereon to be used and expended annually.

SEC. 7. Separate schools shall be provided for the white and colored children, and impartial provision shall be made for both.

SEC. 8. The governor, comptroller, and secretary of state shall constitute a board of education, who shall distribute said funds to the several counties, and perform such other duties concerning public schools as may be prescribed by law.

Mr. O. M. Hollingsworth, superintendent of public instruction of Texas, under date of February 21 last, furnishes me the following statement of the permanent common-school fund of the State, namely:

Permanent school fund	$2,500,000
School lands located	acres.. 30,000,000
School lands unlocated	acres.. 31,000,000

This is the munificent provision made for common schools by the most thoroughly democratic State in the Union—a State which gave in the recent election for governor and other State officers a democratic majority of 100,000. I make the following extract from the message of Governor Coke, delivered to the Legislature last Wednesday, to wit:

With universal suffrage we must have universal intelligence if we would perpetuate free government, and a system of public education will alone accomplish it. The public sentiment of the enlightened and civilized world has crystallized in favor of public education, and the people who fail to recognize the fact and act accordingly will find themselves laggards in the general march of improvement. Every State in the Union is striving to perfect a system of public education, and Texas must not do less.

You are required by the clause of the constitution referred to "to establish and make suitable provision for the support and maintenance of an efficient system of public free schools." The fund known as the available school fund, consisting of one-fourth of the general revenue of the State, all the poll taxes, and the interest on the bonds in which the permanent school fund is invested, constitute the means placed at your disposal annually for carrying out this provision of the constitution.

From these sources the comptroller estimates the following receipts for the year beginning September 1, 1876:

One-fourth State revenue	$350,000
Poll taxes	140,000
Interest on United States bonds	30,000
Interest on railroad bonds	135,000
	655,000

The substitute under consideration makes further provision for the colleges established for the advancement of agriculture and the mechanic arts. These colleges were established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

In order to avail herself of the provisions of this act the State of Texas, which I have the honor in part to represent, has erected handsome and commodious college buildings on a large survey owned by the State, admirably adapted to experimental farming. The constitution recently adopted requires the Legislature now in session to appropriate, at the present session, $40,000 for the construction and completion of the buildings and improvements, and providing for the furniture necessary to put said college in immediate and successful operation.

Agriculture in this country underlies and upholds every other industry. Knowledge is as essential to the conduct of agricultural operations in the various branches as to any other pursuit. Second in importance only to agriculture are the mechanic arts. That both should be fostered and encouraged to the full extent of just and reasonable aid, by wise legislation within the limits of the Constitution, I think a clear proposition. The substitute under discussion is simple in its provisions, which are easily understood. It consecrates the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands to common schools and to the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of agriculture and the mechanic arts. It retains the power of Congress over the public domain. It does not interfere with homestead or bounty-land laws.

It distributes the money thus raised among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population between the ages of five and twenty years. It in no wise interferes with the management, conduct, and control of the schools and colleges by the State and territorial authorities, wisely leaving all that to the proper local authorities, to be regulated, conducted, and controlled under the laws of the States and Territories, and only so far as the District of Columbia is concerned has Congress any power of legislation, and Congress ought not, and in my judgment constitutionally could not, exercise control over schools established by State authority. It contains the proper safeguards for the faithful application of the funds to the purposes contemplated by the substitute. It provides for a perpetual educational fund, the interest on which only is to be appropriated for the conduct of said schools and colleges. It in no wise interferes with the percentage granted to the States of Missouri, Michigan, Florida, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Oregon, and Nevada out of the net proceeds of public lands within their limits for the purpose of education, or of making public roads and improvements, as provided in section 3689 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

I believe the substitute just and equitable, and right in itself, granting for the first time aid to many of the States for common-school purposes, and this aid thus asked is shared according to the population between the ages of five and twenty years by all the States from the original thirteen to the last admitted, by all the Territories, and by the District of Columbia.

I trust the substitute will receive the favorable consideration of the Senate.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of the Japanese indemnity bill, which motion I make, as I informed the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I should, subject to the call at any time of the silver bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 626) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the doors are closed the Chair will lay before the Senate a House bill for reference.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 99) concerning special-tax stamps was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fourteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at three o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 26, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. LORD. I desire to have the Journal corrected in regard to one or two technical phrases. So long as we are compelled to use them we should of course use them properly. I notice that the words "rejoinder on demurrer" are used when it should be "in demurrer." I notice also that the same error occurs in another place, and that the word "rejoinder" is used where it should be "surrejoinder." I desire to have these errors corrected.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

The Journal, as corrected, was then approved.

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be authorized to have printed for the use of said committee evidence taken, and also tables of statistics.

IMPORTATION IN SINGLE PACKAGES.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2951) to provide for the separate entry of express packages contained in one importation, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

The amendments of the Senate were:

On page 1 line 1, strike out the word "express."

Amend the title so as to read "An act to provide for the separate entry of packages contained in one importation."

The question was taken; and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the request of the Senate for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The request of the Senate was agreed to.

The Speaker appointed the following gentlemen as conferees on the part of the House: Mr. WELLS of Missouri, Mr. ATKINS of Tennessee, and Mr. HALE of Maine.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the request of the Senate for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1594) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The request of the Senate was agreed to.

The Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SINGLETON of Mississippi, Mr. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. WALDRON of Michigan.

E. C. STEVENS.

Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 105) for the relief of E. C. Stevens; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Accounts.

OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a question of privilege, and it is in regard to an officer of this House. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the preamble; whereupon,

Mr. SPRINGER said: I object to the reading of this resolution. It does not involve a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not yet able to say that it does not involve a question of privilege. The Chair thinks it had better be read.

The Clerk resumed the reading, but before concluding,

Mr. SPRINGER again said: I object to the reading of that paper. It is not a question of privilege; it is an article from a newspaper of this city which does not relate to any privilege of the House, and the reading of which is consuming time without any purpose whatever.

The SPEAKER. Suppose that it related to an officer; would it not then be a question of privilege?

Mr. SPRINGER. It would if it related to an officer, but not to a member.

The SPEAKER. This House has some interest in its officers. The Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the preamble, article, and accompanying resolution, as follows:

Whereas the following article has appeared in the Washington Gazette, a democratic paper, in which the Clerk of this House and his subordinates are charged with having conspired together to defeat the reduction of salaries proposed in the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation bill:

"TRAITORS IN THE CAMP—CONSPIRACY AMONG THE HOUSE EMPLOYÉS TO DEFEAT RETRENCHMENT.

"We think it our duty to expose and denounce the inexcusable action of some of the employés of the present House of Representatives in reference to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and to warn them that this course must not be persisted in. The party which recently lifted them to the positions which they now occupy have sufficient opposition to combat among the henchmen of Grantism in their efforts to reform existing abuses and extravagance, and must not be hampered in their action by those who should exert whatever influence they may possess in furtherance of the noble and patriotic purpose of the Committee on Appropriations, instead of against it. We allude at this time particularly to the Clerk of the House and his subordinates. Every effort has been made by these employés in the way of importuning democratic members to defeat the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The success of the democratic party in the approaching presidential campaign is jeopardized by the course thus pursued. The people demand from the present House such retrenchment and cutting down of expenditures in all departments of the Government as will relieve the great financial depression now prevailing throughout the nation; and all blows aimed at retrenchment are just so many blows struck at the life of the democratic party. There is, too, no department under the Government where economy could be practiced with a better grace than in this very Clerk's office. Under the predecessor of the present incumbent salaries in the Clerk's office were systematically worked up till they are out of all proportion to the service rendered by the occupants of the positions. Not only were salaries increased, but places were multiplied beyond the legitimate requirements of the office; and it is the absolute duty of the democratic House to cut down these supernumeraries, and reduce the salaries of those retained.

"The political revolution which placed the democratic party in a majority in the popular branch of the national Legislature was brought about by the universal desire for reform. The party can only perpetuate its power by giving effect to measures intended to reform. And in pursuing this laudable purpose, it must not be stabbed by those who are in duty bound to give it support. No selfish motives should be permitted to sway the mind of any democrat in this war with radical thievery and extravagance. If a traitor be found in the camp, off with his head; and let the good work of retrenchment go on:"

Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and are hereby, directed to inquire into and report, by resolution or otherwise, upon the following propositions: First, whether the charges herein contained be true, and, if true, whether the Clerk of this House and his subordinates have violated any law or done any act inconsistent with their positions as employés of this House; second, whether further legislation be necessary to protect the House of Representatives from undue influence brought to bear upon members in the discharge of their duties by the officers and employés of the House, from whose presence and importunities there is no escape.

Mr. FORT. Is this resolution introduced on behalf of the Clerk of the House?

Mr. RANDALL. Does the Speaker rule that this involves a question of privilege, so as to make it in order at any time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the paper.

After a pause,

Mr. RANDALL said: I will not insist upon my point of order, as there seems to be doubt about it. Let the resolution go to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say, notwithstanding the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] that although this charge, from its utter indefiniteness, goes to the very verge to which any decent matter of privilege should go, yet in the judgment of the Chair it does involve enough of substance in its connection with the House and legislation to bring it within the rule and definition of a question of privilege. The Chair would therefore overrule the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdrew the point of order, because I did not wish to prevent an investigation of any sort as to any matters connected with the control of this House.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WHITE. That this resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The motion was agreed to.

ENGINEER OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a further question of privilege, and ask the Clerk to read a letter written by James McGlensey, now an assistant engineer of the House, relative to the character and incompetency of George C. Ellison, the engineer of the House, together with the accompanying resolution.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

67 MAIDEN LANE, NEW YORK,
March 21, 1876.

DEAR COLONEL: I herewith send you a slip from yesterday's times. I seen the proceedings in the sun of last week the same as you sent me, and I sent a letter to Judge HOLMAN telling him the falt was in the Engineer, and I see the committee have my exact words; and I sent him another letter yesterday which I think will have some effect, and I send you the original printed by Doctor Thiers,* who states that Ellison knows he printed it, and he don't care who knows it, as he will tell anybody he is. I went and seen some of the witnesses. Mr. Delano says he was discharged for stealing pipes and other Government stores, but his record is in the Navy Department. He lives at 115 St. Marks ave., Brooklyn, and is well known in the Navy-yard. He is on the retired list. Mr. Cosgrove, the Master Plumber of the yard in the Department of Construction, was Ellison's Quarterman, and he says so. He is Master Plumber there now. Mr. Jas. Hunter, who is Plumber in yards and Docks, knows all the circumstances of what is in this statement. It was from him I got my information, and if any of them was put on the witness stand they would tell a great deal more than they tell me; in fact, everybody who was in the yard at the time knows of it; it was no secret. As regards to the other matters in the statement, I don't think amounts to much, as some of the parties are dead; but the Dr. says he can prove the most of it. I see him almost daily. He is the man that was poisoned by Ellison, and has the bottle yet. He is well known in Washington by W. W. Woods, (Chief Engineer Navy Department,) Mr. English, who use to be round your office, and Mr. Geer and others. I want you to take good care of this, so it can be returned to me. The Sunday Mercury was burned out and lost its files, and I hunted all over to try and find one but failed. Mr. Collwell, the owner, has promised to see if he can't find it for me. If he does I will send it to you. I think you could get his record in the Na'y Department, as you have the dates. I think if you will see Major Cburn, the Herald, and tell him it's for me he can get you an order from some of the Committee on Naval Affairs in the Senate, as I don't want to touch the the House. I don't want to be known in this matter of Ellison's removal. Now you can act with Mr. Lockwood in this matter, as I think it will take very little to finish Ellison, and let me know how you make out in this; and if you can get my letters before the committee I think they will recommend me. Write and let me know how things are and who is assistant as soon as possible.

Yours, &c.,

JAMES McGLENSEY.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service be directed to inquire into and report, by resolution or otherwise, upon the following: Whether the charges made against George C. Ellison, engineer of this House, by James McGlensey were hushed up in consideration of said McGlensey's appointment to the position of assistant engineer of this House, the position which he now holds; second, whether the charges herein related against the engineer of this House be true, and, if true, whether George C. Ellison is a man of such mental and moral fitness as will warrant his retention in office.

Mr. RANDALL. This should be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WHITE. I object to that reference. I desire to say that the man who wrote this letter which has been read is now assistant engineer of this House under Ellison. If those charges were not believed to be true, why is it that this man McGlensey has been appointed as an assistant of Ellison.

Mr. COX. I hope the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves to amend the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WHITE] so as to assign this examination to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, instead of the Committee on Civil Service Reform.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEIRS OF SAMUEL QUARLES, DECEASED.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3258) for the relief of the heirs of Samuel Quarles, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BANNING. In order not to antagonize the legislative appropriation bill, I ask that the bill (H. R. No. 2935) to promote the efficiency of the Army of the United States and provide for its gradual reduction and consolidation, which was made the special order for to-day, be made the special order for Wednesday of next week at two o'clock, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not to interfere with the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. That will be understood; and if there be no objection the order will be made.

There was no objection.

BENJAMIN BOBB AND OTHERS.

Mr. YOUNG, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 106) for the relief of Benjamin Bobb and others, of Memphis, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES OFFICERS AT NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution, which, as now modified, will not I believe meet with any objection:

Resolved, That a committee of nine members be appointed by the Speaker, with instructions to make a thorough examination into the conduct and management of the custom-house at the port of New Orleans and of the offices of the marshal, district attorney, and collector of internal revenue, and all such other Federal officers as they may discover to be implicated in wrong-doing and violation of the laws, and to suggest such changes and reforms as they may deem necessary; with power to employ a stenographer, to send for persons and papers, to sit in New Orleans, and to report by bill or otherwise as soon as possible; and that the proceedings of said committee shall be public.

Mr. CONGER. To what committee is this matter to be referred?

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to raise a select committee.

Mr. CONGER. Some of the matters referred to in that resolution have already been committed to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice. Still I make no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I object to the words "as soon as possible." I hope the gentleman will so frame his resolution as to require a report to be made to this session of the House.

Mr. GIBSON. I am willing to accept that amendment.

The resolution, as modified, by inserting after the words "as soon as possible" the words "to this session of the House," was again read.

Mr. MOREY. I trust that there will be no objection to the resolution in this shape.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. GIBSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I think we ought to have the morning hour for the call of committees. I am willing to give way for the legislative bill after the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to devote every possible moment to this bill until it is finished.

The SPEAKER. It is in the power of the House to determine what business it will consider.

Mr. RANDALL. The sense of the House can be tested on this motion. If it be voted down, then the business of the morning hour can proceed.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL, it was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER. Before the Committee of the Whole resumes its session, the Chair begs leave, if there be no objection, to take up bills on the Speaker's table that they may receive appropriate reference.

There was no objection; and bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and respectively referred as indicated:

A bill (S. No. 764) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to allow Mrs. Minnie Sherman Fitch to receive free from duties a wedding present from the Khedive of Egypt—to the Committee of Ways and Means.

A bill (S. No. 727) for the relief of Albert Towle, postmaster at Beatrice, Nebraska—to the Committee of Claims.

A bill (S. No. 761) to remove the political disabilities of James E. Slaughter, of Alabama—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. No. 484) for the relief of Julia E. Seeley, postmaster at Great Barrington, Massachusetts—to the Committee of Claims.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House, pursuant to order, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending paragraph on page 43 of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Secretary of War, $8,000; one chief clerk, at $2,250; one disbursing-clerk, at $1,800; two chief clerks of division, at $1,800 each; five clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; twelve clerks of class one; eight messengers; and three copyists to enable the Secretary of War to have the rebel archives examined and copies furnished for the Government, $2,700; seven laborers; five watchmen for the northwest executive building; in all, $67,110.

Mr. FOSTER. I move in line 1041 to strike out "three copyists," and in lines 1043 and 1044 "twenty-seven hundred" and in lieu thereof insert "$6,000."

Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to appropriate $6,000 for the use of the War Department in searching the rebel archives for the use of the different Departments of the Government, of the Court of Claims, of the claims commission, and by the different committees of this House. The amount appropriated for the last two or three years has been $6,000, all of which has been used. By inquiry at the Department, I am able to state the probability is that the use made of this appropriation has saved to the Government annually hundreds of thousands of dollars. Of course it makes no difference to the Department how much or how little is appropriated, they will furnish all the evidence they can with the amount of money that is given to them. If they have $6,000, they can go on perhaps, and furnish all the evidence, making all the searches into the rebel archives, which it is necessary to make by request of the different Departments, the Court of Claims, claims commission, and the different committees of the two Houses. It will result undoubtedly, in the saving of large sums of money to the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. In that service as now organized there are three first-class clerks, $3,600; one second-class clerk, $1,400; and one third-class clerk, $1,600, making in all, $6,600. Instead, we in this bill appropriate for three copyists, $2,700. And it must be remembered that this subject must be taken in connection with another appropriation made last year in the sundry civil appropriation bill of $50,000. Beside the $50,000 there was appropriated last year the amount named by the gentleman in his amendment.

I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio that I have made inquiry about this Bureau, and I find some of these clerks are receiving, as I am informed, double salaries—not exactly double salaries, but salaries from two sources. I do not say that it is illegal, although I consider it not exactly right. They are receiving $50 a month from the appropriation in the sundry civil bill of last year. In fact the chief clerk gets $1,200 from this appropriation, and an additional $600 as I am informed. The other officers are receiving in the same way additional salaries. They ought to draw one salary or the other. They should not draw from two funds, although by the license of the provisions in the sundry civil appropriation bill of last year it is perhaps legal.

I believe three copyists are quite adequate for the purpose of the Government in connection with these claims and the searching of the rebel archives. As the gentleman has stated, these claims are tested in a measure by reference to the rebel archives, and the appropriation provided for in this bill is in my judgment entirely sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. I can assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania and this committee that under the management of the present Secretary of War not one dollar of this money will be wastefully used in any way. The amount I ask for will simply enable the Department to furnish information by searching the rebel archives, which will save to the Government hundreds of thousands of dollars.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has information I know nothing about. I was at the Department this morning and made inquiry in regard to this matter. Their answer was, that it made no difference whether we appropriated for one or two or six clerks, as they could furnish just what information the number of persons allowed by the appropriation would permit. It made no difference to them, but did make a great difference to the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not. I simply aver what I consider a great abuse in connection with the expenditure of this money, and before I get through with the examination of the sundry civil bill I hope to be able to fathom the matter. There are clerks in this Bureau paid from two funds. It is true they are paid for service after hours, but the fact as presented to me is that these clerks' families are engaged in this service as well as the clerks themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the gentleman confound the two subjects, the fifty-thousand-dollar appropriation for the preservation of the archives with this appropriation to search the rebel archives for information?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I do not. I refer to these people employed under this appropriation, that those who are paid out of the $6,000 appropriated last year are also receiving money from another appropriation; so that while their salaries on the face of the bill would appear to be $1,200, they are receiving in fact $1,800.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania can afford to risk this loss to the Government, I will not press the matter further. I merely desire to call the attention of the House to it.

Mr. RANDALL. There will be no earthly loss to the Government. And just here I want to read an expression in a speech of the Senator from California, made in the Senate the other day. I am sure the gentleman will accept that.

Mr. HOAR. I call the gentleman from Pennsylvania to order. He has no right to read the debates of the Senate in this House.

Mr. RANDALL. I propose to give this as part of my remarks. I think this is said so much better than I can say it that I will make it part of my speech and indorse it.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has no right, as part of his speech or otherwise, to refer to the debates in the Senate or read any extract therefrom.

Mr. RANDALL. Have I not a right to read in this House a part of the record of the proceedings of Congress? If not, I do not know what rights or powers I have.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is express, that debates in the other branch of Congress shall not be referred to in this House. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I want to say this on my own responsibility: I believe, in all the reforms—that is, the reductions in the Revenue Department in this direction—in all the reforms we have worked, we have had to do it in spite of tears, prayers, and prophecies on the part of Government officers and those having charge of these men.

I want to say that all these reductions that we have been suggesting have been forced "in spite of the tears, prayers, and prophecies of the Government officers." And if that is not accepted as good democratic doctrine and true, I could, if the rules permitted, give a republican authority. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the only parliamentary way of referring to the Senate is to speak of it as another place which is not mentioned here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to be discussing the pending amendment. The gentleman is out of order.

The question being taken on Mr. FOSTER's amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to offer simply a formal amendment, for I suppose any amendment I may offer will be voted down.

Mr. RANDALL. Not necessarily.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the last word.

I desire to say for the War Department that, at the request of the chairman of the Military Committee of this House, they have reduced and are now reducing their estimates, and have proceeded so far as to be able to say to this House that a reduction of 15 per cent. or thereabouts in the working force of the civil department may be made. The bill proposes a reduction of 26 per cent. I suggest to the gentleman having charge of the bill that he postpone further consideration of the clauses relating to the War Department until we can have a report, which I understand will be out in a day or two, from the able head of that Department, which will show a large reduction, such as he himself will be willing to stand and below which he will consider it unsafe to go.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say to the House that all these reductions were based on the extravagant appropriations of last year and the estimates for this. There is no occasion therefore to postpone the consideration of these clauses because we are not likely to do any harm by this reduction. If, however, there is any decided reduction suggested by the Secretary of War, I would consent to go back to this paragraph and still further reduce upon his new and revised estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. You are very kind, undoubtedly.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I am apprised, and I am glad of it, that there is to be an enormous reduction in connection with the revised estimates of the War Department from those presented at the beginning of this session of Congress. I am glad of this, because it shows clearly that the path that the Committee on Appropriations are traveling is a safe one when we find the very Department, the benefit of whose knowledge we had, now coming in at the suggestion of this House with revised estimates embracing enormous reductions. There is therefore no necessity for us to skip here on this bill, but let us make this reduction which we have suggested on the former excessive estimates, and then I will consent, as I said before, if the present Secretary of War shall show that he can do with less than we have placed here, of course we will reduce still further.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose he says he cannot.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I will not have much confidence in the promised reduction of estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the statement to the House that the reduction will work no harm. I have the statement of the Department that the reduction in the force of the Surgeon-General's Office will cut down the force there to that extent that it will be absolutely impossible for it to keep up with the requests of the Pension Department; that they are behind to-day 11,000 cases, affecting the people of this country who are applying for pensions. And I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] on this score in order to enlist his symyathy for this class of people for whom he has always a warm heart. I wish the gentleman to understand that there are to-day 11,000 cases awaiting the action of the Surgeon-General's Office for the want of sufficient clerical force to attend to them, and the bill proposes to reduce that force 25 per cent.

Mr. RANDALL. When we reach that paragraph I will state what are the facts. The reduction in the Secretary's Office is from sixty-eight clerks to fifty-three; a reduction of fifteen clerks, which is one or two at most above the 20 per cent. reduction in numbers, which we provide for in the increased hours of labor. No harm, therefore, is done. This Office, if it will work the hours provided for by existing law will do the same amount of work which was formerly done with the fifteen additional clerks whom we take off.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

IN THE OFFICE OF THE SURGEON-GENERAL.

One chief clerk, at $1,800; six clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; six clerks of class two; one hundred clerks of class one; one anatomist at the Army Medical Museum, at $1,600; one engineer in division of records and museum, at $1,400; one messenger, at $840; eighteen watchmen and laborers; in all, $161,800.

For contingent expenses, blank books, stationery, binding, rent, and fuel, $6,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I offer the following amendment:

In line 1083 strike out "six" and insert "eight;" so that it will read "eight clerks of class four."

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that with the present force in the Surgeon-General's Office they are eleven thousand cases behind in their answers to the Pension Department.

We propose now to reduce this force about 25 per cent. That simple statement is all I wish to make. I only want to call the attention of the House and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to this fact, and also particularly the attention of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. HURLBUT. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I hope not. We have made a reduction in this Surgeon-General's Bureau. The estimate was for one hundred and sixty-nine clerks. We have left one hundred and thirty-eight employés. The aggregate reduction is thirty-one, which is less than 20 per cent., and if the gentleman will refer to the estimates he will see that twenty-eight clerks employed have heretofore been temporary clerks, so called. We did not strike out all the temporary clerks, but left eight of them. I think the force allowed is quite sufficient, and I believe the committee think so. The aggregate reduction of the expenditure is $41,480.

I should be the last man, I think, to reduce or interfere in any particular with pensions. It has not been the policy of the Committee on Appropriations to interfere in any respect with pensions, either as to the amount of pensions or to the clerical force necessary to the rapid deciding of pension claims and cases. The House will remember that the committee made no reduction whatever in the pension bill, but left it just as the estimate provided, in order to avoid, in fact, a justification for any accusation that we sought to interfere in the least degree with any pension.

Mr. FOSTER. Why not be as liberal now?

Mr. RANDALL. Because with the hours of labor which we provide for the force allowed here is sufficient.

Mr. FOSTER. But they are behind now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the gentleman know that this branch of the service is steadily being reduced?

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the real facts of the case. I do not say that the Committee on Appropriations had any intention of reducing beyond what was right. The question is whether in fact they are not doing it without intention.

Now, there is nothing in the world that the people of this country complain of more than of the delay in getting pension claims allowed. I receive letter after letter on the subject, and I suppose every other gentleman does the same. I have taken the pains to track a number of these pension cases to find out where the delay occurred, and in every case I find it was owing to the practice, which may be a right and proper one, that the claim shall first go through the Surgeon-General's Office for evidence that the man claiming the pension has been treated in a hospital, and the character of the disease. They have now, in addition to that, the work of verifying the signatures of the Surgeon-General. And the Surgeon-General has told me in half a dozen cases—and I presume he has told other gentlemen—that it is utterly impossible for him to keep up at all with the demands from the Pension Office for proper information. They are already eleven thousand cases behind with their present force; and that force is not worked, as the gentleman says, on short hours; they are worked on full hours. So much in regard to the present state of the business; and if you make an additional reduction you increase arrearages and put off the day of payment of the widows and orphans and disabled soldiers who are entitled to these pensions; and you do the country no good, because all these matters have to be settled in the end.

The Surgeon-General is not interested in this matter except to see that the public business is carried out; and it is unquestionably true that the interests of these individuals whom we are bound to protect are suffering every day for want of a sufficient force now to pass upon every claim.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the delay occurs in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. HURLBUT. No, sir; I have followed the matter up carefully myself in a good many cases.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. FOSTER; and on a division there were—ayes 51, noes 88; no quorum voting.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not care about calling for tellers, if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will allow a vote to be taken in the House on this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not so instructed.

Mr. FOSTER. Can you not do it without instructions?

Mr. RANDALL. I never do.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FOSTER and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 75.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not call for a further count.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word, to enable me simply to say a word. The three Bureaus of the Government most intimately connected with the granting of pensions, next to the Pension Bureau, are the Offices of the Second Auditor, the Adjutant-General, and the Surgeon-General. My friend from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] misapprehends somewhat, as does also the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] the cause of the delay in the granting of these pensions. The verification of signatures is not made in the Surgeon-General's Office, but is made in the Second Auditor's Office, at the head of which is Hon. E. B. French, once a very excellent member of this House, and a very excellent and competent officer. The main examination, for the purpose of furnishing the military history of the soldier applying for a pension, is made in the Adjutant-General's Office; and there is the main cause of the delay in granting pensions, and not in the Surgeon-General's Office. That is to say, that the delays between the Adjutant-General's Office and the Pension Bureau are the cause of the extraordinary delay which has occurred in adjusting pensions in recent years. My friend from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] proposes only to increase the number of the higher-class clerks from six to eight. Six clerks of class four is the number proposed by this bill.

Mr. FOSTER. My dear sir, I am not through yet.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend proposes to increase the number of clerks of class four from six to eight. Now, the gentleman must know that to increase the number of these higher-class clerks does not in fact increase in any material degree the efficient working force of the Bureau. It is not the higher-class clerks, who are heads of divisions, that perform the main service, but the lower-class clerks, as his experience and the experience of every other member of the House will demonstrate. This bill provides for one hundred clerks of class one. And right here I want the ear of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FOSTER. I am listening.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have a statement from a very intelligent gentleman fully informed in regard to the business of the Surgeon-General's Office; and he assures me that the force heretofore employed, and even the force authorized by this bill, will be found constantly unemployed, for the simple reason that there are only a given number of records to be examined. The records are not multiplied without limit. There is only a given number of clerks that can be employed at any one time in the examination of these records, leaving inevitably a large number of unemployed clerks in this particular Office. This subject of pensions always excited my lively sympathy and interest; but I believe, from information which I have been able to get, that the number of clerks authorized by this bill is even more than can be efficiently employed in the business of that Office; that is, if my information is reliable, and I believe it is.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to oppose the amendment. Of course my amendment proposed to increase the number of clerks but two, the clerks of class four. Had that amendment been adopted, then I would have moved to further increase the number of clerks in the other classes. But I do not propose to be captious or factious in my opposition to some of the provisions of this bill; it is not worth while to detain the House by moving these amendments.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says that there are other Departments of the Government in which these pension claims are examined, and refers to the Office of the Second Auditor and the Office of the Adjutant-General. That gentleman professes to be a warm friend of the soldier. He admits that there are now 11,000 cases awaiting the examination of those officers. Yet he takes the Second Auditor's Office, and reduces the force in that from one hundred and seventy-six to one hundred and eight—a reduction of 40 per cent. He then takes the Office of the Adjutant-General, another place where these pension claims are examined, and reduces the force there from two hundred and forty-six to one hundred and seventy-three—a reduction of 30 per cent. In addition to that a reduction is made in the force of the Surgeon-General's Office.

Now, it is a notorious fact, which stands here undisputed, that there are 11,000 pension cases awaiting the action of these Offices. And yet gentlemen professing to be friends of the soldier, proclaiming their friendship by passing a pension bill just as estimated for by the Department, undertake by the reduction of this force to delay action on the part of these Offices for the benefit of these poor soldiers who are waiting for their pensions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my amendment for the purpose of renewing it. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] states the matter too strongly. The number of persons employed in the Adjutant-General's Office is one hundred and ninety-seven.

Mr. FOSTER. It is two hundred and forty-six.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; one hundred and ninety-seven.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is one hundred and ninety-seven, according to the estimates, and the number provided for by this bill is one hundred and seventy-two.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is mistaken about the number.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am correct.

Mr. FOSTER. Just refer to your book and you will see.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman overlooks this important fact all the time, that in the Second Auditor's Office, where there has been but little delay, I believe none at all, in the verification of the signature of the soldier, and the furnishing of a part of the military history of the soldier, and in the Adjutant-General's Office there is only a given number of records to be examined, as is the case in the Surgeon-General's Office. Now, you cannot employ hundreds of men there. How many rolls does my friend from Ohio think there are in those Offices subject to examination?

Mr. FOSTER. There are 11,000 cases behind; I know that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The number of rolls to be examined is the important question. The gentleman must see that by multiplying the clerks beyond those who can be actually employed you provide a body of supernumeraries who must wait until their turn comes to examine the rolls. That is all there is about it. There is not a question of information in all three of these Offices upon which the pension is to be granted that cannot be furnished by a comparatively small force. And the most unaccountable thing to me is that there should be any delay.

These records are now made up. The progress of making them up has been going on ever since the war from year to year. The gentlemen at the head of these branches of the Government cannot shield themselves for this extraordinary delay by pretending that they have an inadequate force. These Bureaus employ hundreds of clerks, and yet they have allowed so large a number of applications for pensions as 11,000 to be undisposed of, as I understand from my friend from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER.] Yet the records have been in progress of being made up from year to year with an unlimited clerical force. What has this large force been doing? If the records are made up, why cannot the information be obtained promptly? Does my friend imagine that whenever the Pension Bureau calls on the Surgeon-General's Office for information the whole record must be made up? Certainly not. It has been the duty of that Office to make up those records, so that the information could be promptly furnished whenever called for.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman charge these officers with dereliction of duty?

Mr. HOLMAN. I say there is inexcusable delay.

Mr. ATKINS. I believe there is no practical question before the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For two watchmen and one laborer in the building at the corner of Seventeenth and F streets, and for fuel for warming the entire building, including the Ordnance Office, and for operating the ventilating-fan in summer, repairs of steam-warming and ventilating apparatus, pay of steam engineer and fireman, and for general repairs, and miscellaneous items, $6,000; in all, $8,160.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

For superintendent of building on Tenth street occupied as the Surgeon-General's Office, $200.

I have offered this amendment at the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM,] who is necessarily absent from the city. The amendment was prepared by him. His attention was undoubtedly called to the fact that there was last year an appropriation of $250 for the care and superintendence of this building. I of course am not acquainted with any of the facts, for, as I have said, I offer the amendment at the request of the gentleman from Kentucky; but I would like to hear what reason there is why there should not be for the coming year the same care of this building that there has been during the last year.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman says that of course he is not acquainted with the facts. I will say that of course I am acquainted with the facts.

Mr. DUNNELL. I presume so.

Mr. RANDALL. This appropriation which we have struck out is simply for additional salary for an officer who already receives a salary which we deem sufficient. We have struck out such things in every part of this bill. We think it an unwise form of additional pay.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, $8,000; for compensation of the chief clerk of the Navy Department, at $2,250; one disbursing clerk, at $1,800; four clerks of class four; three clerks of class three; one clerk of class two; two clerks of class one; one messenger; and two laborers; in all, $28,780.

Mr. HALE. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations' to certain reductions in the clerical force of the Navy Department. Its clerical force, as the gentleman well knows, is very much as it was in the years preceding the war; it has not been swollen, as has been the force in other Departments. Any gentleman who will look along at the force in the several Bureaus of the Navy Department, as provided for in the two or three pages of this bill which will next be read, cannot fail to be impressed with the contrast between the clerical force in these Bureaus and the corresponding force in the Bureaus of other Departments, where the expenditure and the business can be no larger than in the Navy Department.

It is a fact (and I state it here in justice to the Navy Department against which considerable outcry and clamor have been raised) that this Department, so far as its departmental force is concerned, is run more cheaply, considering the amount of its expenditure and the business it does, than any other Department of the Government. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will, I think, bear me out in this statement. The force of clerks in this Department is small. Spending as the Department does from $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 a year, there is no Bureau in this Department that has a force of clerks exceeding in the aggregate twelve or fifteen, while in the Bureaus of other Departments a similar amount of business and equally large appropriations of money are represented by twenty, thiry, forty, or fifty clerks. This Department is run on a pretty good civil-service system. It is a Department in which there are hardly any changes. The present Secretary, I venture to say, has not removed a man since he has been in office; nearly all the force there to-day is a force that he inherited. The old clerks are retained.

These things being so, and this not being a Department that has been swollen as others have by the war, but one which is run on substantially the same basis as before the war, I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the reductions recommended in this bill have been agreed upon by the committee on consultation with the head of the Department or respective Bureaus, and whether the committee believe that the work can be done with the still smaller force which is given by this bill? The gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot have failed to be impressed, as I have been for years, with the fact that this Department has been running with a prudently small force.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's statement is correct with reference to this Bureau. We found the aggregate number of clerks fewer in this Bureau than in any other; and consequently we have made, as will be seen, fewer reductions; and the reductions have been made with the cordial acquiescence of the Secretary. It is not certainly in this Bureau of the Navy Department that any censure can be brought upon the head of that Department; it is I believe in another direction.

When we reach the Navy appropriation bill, I think we can make such showing as will indicate to the country the Navy can be run from three to four millions less than now.

Mr. HALE. I understand these small reductions, and I think they are small, are such as the Secretary thinks he can still do the business with.

Mr. RANDALL. The Secretary of the Navy said he believed it was his duty to obey Congress in this respect, or language of similar import, and that he would co-operate with Congress in these reductions. I think it is due to him to so state.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bureau of Steam-Engineering:

For chief clerk, $1,800; one clerk of class two; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $4,660.

For stationery and miscellaneous items, $700.

Mr. HALE. I move in line 1196, after the word "dollars," to insert "one draughtsman, $1,600." I do not think the gentleman in charge of the bill will object to that.

Mr. RANDALL. What Bureau?

Mr. HALE. It is the Bureau of Steam-Engineering. I think it may have been left out inadvertently.

Mr. RANDALL. It was not, but designedly, because the Secretary of the Navy admitted my suggestion to be sound, that an engineer of the Navy could be assigned to duty as a draughtsman.

Mr. HALE. How in reference to assistant draughtsman as heretofore?

Mr. RANDALL. The same thing.

Mr. HALE. Then the gentleman proposes to meet this by assignment of engineer officers?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir; the Secretary of the Navy said he could assign an engineer of the Navy who was not otherwise employed for the purpose of acting as draughtsman in that Bureau, just as naval officers are made heads of these Bureaus. There is an engineer of the Navy chief of this very Bureau, and engineers can be assigned to do duty as draughtsmen. In this way we get the service rendered by an already paid officer without additional expense to the Government.

Mr. HALE. That is perfectly satisfactory. Of course there must be a draughtsman in that Bureau.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

For compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, $8,000; assistant secretary, $3,150; chief clerk, $2,250; eight principal clerks, at $1,800 each; five clerks of class three; five clerks of class two; five clerks of class one, one of whom shall be the telegraph-operator of the Department; three copyists; three messengers; two assistant messengers; and six laborers in his office; in all, $58,530.

Mr. FOSTER. I move in line 1227 to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,000;" so it will read:

Eight principal clerks, at $2,000 each.

Mr. Chairman, as will be seen, my amendment applies to the eight principal clerks of the Interior Department. The salary of these eight principal clerks in the Interior Department was fixed, I think, many years ago at $2,000. These are the gentlemen upon whom the Secretary of the Interior relies for his judgment and his action upon many of the questions brought before him. One represents the Indian Department; two others, one a good lawyer, indeed I believe both lawyers, represent the Land Office; one is disbursing officer; another represents the Pension Department; another the Patent Office, and so on. These gentlemen are his eyes, and his ears, and his judgment, for we impose upon him many times the duty any man is physically able to perform. One of these gentlemen is disbursing officer, disburses over $4,000,000 a year, and signs requisitions for over $40,000,000, and gives a bond of $80,000. He has had this salary for years. It was fixed, I think, in 1857, in the good old democratic time, and we propose here to-day to take away from the present able Secretary of the Interior $200 off the salary of each one of these eight able assistants. We give identically the same class of officers in the Treasury in the Secretary's office $2,600. We give those assistants in the amendment prepared by the gentleman from Pennsylvania $2,100, clerks occupying positions of no more importance than this. In all the other Departments similar officers are paid larger salaries. In all the advance of salaries for the past ten years, this class of clerks has not been increased. I submit it is nothing more than fair, nothing more than just; in fact, it is the duty of this House to affix such salaries to this class of officers as will enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ competent, able men to assist him.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a plain matter and easily understood. These gentlemen are now known as clerks of class four, which under existing law entitles them to $1,800 a year. By referring to the estimates it will be seen they receive by the appropriation bill each of them $200 additional.

Mr. FOSTER. And that they have received for very many years.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course; so that in fact they are now receiving $2,000, precisely the amount at which the gentleman proposes to continue the salary. The committee, however, having adopted the principle of 10 per cent. reduction, applied it to them as well as to all other employés. While we have reduced them to $1,800 on the 10 per cent. reduction principle, we have changed the title of the office so as to provide they shall receive $1,800. It was the only equitable way in which the question could be met and decided.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the gentleman seems to conclude that in consideration of their getting a new title they can afford to have their pay reduced $200.

Mr. RANDALL. We have run all through on the 10 per cent. principle of reduction, and of necessity these eight principal clerks we reduced $200; but in order that they may get their $1,800 we have taken them out of class four and made them principal clerks at $1,800. These clerks are treated precisely as we have treated all other clerks and employés.

Mr. FOSTER. That is true; but nevertheless it is a fact that they have been receiving $2,000 a year for many years.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that.

Mr. FOSTER. And the further fact is true that all of this class of officers in other Departments under this bill have higher salaries.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; it is not so in the Treasury Department, where large sums of money pass through the hands of this class of officers.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the gentleman what clerk in the Treasury Department handles more money than the disbursing officer, one of these clerks in the Interior Department, who disburses $4,000,000 a year and gives a bond of $80,000?

Mr. RANDALL. I have not the facility to answer how much money each clerk in the Department handles. That would be impossible for me to keep in my mind. But I will say that these gentlemen have been treated with great consideration, so as not to reduce them too much. They have been taken altogether out of class four, and given a salary of $200 more than is provided for in this bill for clerks of class four.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying what may perhaps have struck the mind of the chairman of the committee himself, that the class of clerks with reference to whom the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] has moved an amendment furnish an illustration of how unequal as a matter of fairness and justice any horizontal reduction would operate in these Departments. The horizontal reduction adopted by the Committee on Appropriations, the reduction of 10 per cent. on all salaries, goes upon the theory, it must be supposed, that the salaries of these officers in relation the one to the other are right now. It is not an adjusting theory. It is not a reforming theory. It is not a theory that puts men in their proper relations as to salary, compared with other men in other Departments. That is the trouble with my friend's 10 per cent. reduction of salaries.

Now it is a fact that for years the laborious clerks in the Interior Department have not been favorites with Congress. Their wants, their salaries, their needs, have not been attended to as they have been, for instance, in the Treasury Department. And so it has resulted before this committee came into existence, before my friend from Pennsylvania was chairman of it and grappled with the task of reduction, that these men in the race for promotion as to salary were left behind. And when he entered upon this task he found them in that condition.

Well, now, if the gentleman was to reform and set things right and set things even, the horizontal reduction ought not to be applied to these clerks. Take, for instance, in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, the clerk upon whom the Secretary relies for subject-matters coming from the land division. That is a very important and a very responsible division. It is a Bureau in which millions of the population of the country are interested. Or take the Pension Bureau, with its rolls amounting to half a million. The subject-matters coming from that go to a clerk who is at the head of that business in the Secretary's office. And so with the Indian Bureau. Now, the duties of these clerks are just as important, Mr. Chairman, as those of the heads of most of the divisions in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that large amounts of money pass through the hands of the clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury. That is not the fact, with the exception of a very few men. There are very few men in the Department of the Secretary of the Treasury through whose hands money passes. The Treasury Department is the money Department of the Government, but the clerks do not handle the money. Here is a disbursing clerk who handles four millions of money, and I venture to say that you cannot find a clerk in any establishment in the country doing half that business that does not receive double the pay provided here. The trouble with my friend's horizontal reduction is that he does not leave these clerks as well cared for as some others. It would have been better while we were about this matter of re-adjusting salaries to have tried to equalize the different Departments, so that our work when we get through—much of it is good, I admit—will be a work that will endure; a work that has not to be gone at and changed in every changing Congress, but a work so substantial on the basis of equalizing the different Departments that it will be some time before it will require to be revised.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] seem to attach importance to the fact that these officers are called principal clerks. The gentlemen of course observe that they are not chief clerks, and I trust the gentlemen on the committee will observe the distinction made in this bill between a chief clerk and a principal clerk. The term principal clerk here applies simply to gentlemen whose salaries are raised above those of the fourth-class clerks. The chief clerk formerly received $2,500 a year. He now receives by this bill $2,250, while the principal clerks receive each $1,800; certainly very considerable salaries. And I trust the gentlemen will bear in mind another fact. We have been told of the good old democratic times, when it is supposed there was some economy in the matter of salaries. Now the truth is that the salary of the chief clerk was then $2,000, while those of all other clerks under him were either $1,800, $1,600, $1,400, $1,200, or $900.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman is mistaken. The salary of the chief clerk then was $2,200.

Mr. HOLMAN. Two thousand dollars was the salary up to 1860.

Now let me call the attention of gentlemen to another fact: that not only have we increased the salary of the chief clerk, but by this mode of calling these officers principal clerks we have also very materially increased the number of clerks receiving larger salaries, salaries of $1,800 a year. This Department, the Department of the Interior, has not greatly grown in importance. The Bureaus under it have become more important year by year, especially the Pension Bureau and the Patent Office; and the following are the rates of increase: In 1860 the Secretary's office proper cost in salaries $36,900, the highest salary being $2,000, that of the chief clerk, which is now $2,250. In 1867, right after the war, and when salaries ought to have been high if ever, the whole expense of the Secretary's office proper was $41,540, while by this bill we appropriate for the same purpose $58,530. That has been the rate of increase right straight along the line.

Mr. HALE. Does not the gentleman realize about this Department—I am sure he must have thought of it—that it is a Department which, so far from increasing and swelling during the war, as every other Department did, in time of war was neglected and did not increase? Of course the reverse is true that when peace came, while other Departments might be reduced from a war basis, the Interior Department, which deals with peaceable pursuits and with the relations of the people in time of peace, began to get added attention and increased in importance.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend misapprehends. The Pension Office was of as much importance in 1867, if not more, than it is now; and the Indian Department was as important in 1867 as it is now. The Patent Office was nearly so; the Land Office was not. Now, these are the four great Bureaus of the Interior Department. I call special attention to the year 1860, a period of general prosperity in this country, when all of these Departments, with the exception of the Pension Bureau, were in full operation, and when the entire appropriation was but $36,900 as against $58,530 appropriated by this bill. So that, making a reasonable allowance for the growth of the Pension Bureau and the Land Office, still the increase is beyond what would have been reasonable even upon the face of the bill as it stands.

Mr. HALE. I withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. FOSTER's amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

General Land Office:

For the Commissioner of the General Land Office, $3,600; chief clerk, $1,800; recorder, $1,800; eight clerks of class four; twenty-two clerks of class three; forty clerks of class two; eighty clerks of class one; one draughtsman, $1,400; one assistant draughtsman, $1,200; two messengers; two assistant messengers; six laborers; and two packers; in all, $211,380.

Mr. WHEELER. By the direction of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the paragraph:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior in his discretion shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to use any portion of said appropriation for piece-work or by the day, the month, or the year, at such rate or rates as he may deem just and fair, not exceeding a salary of $900 per annum.

Mr. SAYLER. Before the question is put on that amendment I desire to say a word. I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, from some knowledge which I have gained of the affairs of the Land Office during the present session as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, that the committee have too much reduced the force in this Office, depriving them of necessary clerks and copyists, and especially in reducing the pay of draughtsmen to such an insignificant sum that it will be impossible to secure the services of competent men to discharge the duties.

I do not desire to discuss this matter myself, but in this connection I ask to have read at the Clerk's desk a communication from the Commissioner of the Land Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1876.

SIR: Referring to that portion of bill H. R. No. 2571, pages 52 and 53, making appropriations for the service of this Office, I desire to call your attention to the following points:

This bill fails to contain the proviso of similar bills of previous sessions, vesting in the Secretary of the Interior a discretionary power by which this Office was supplied with "copyists," (see United States Statutes at Large, volume 18, page 364,) in the following language: "Provided that the Secretary of the Interior, at his discretion, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to use any portion of said appropriation for piece-work, or by the day, month, or year, at such rate or rates as he may deem just and fair, not exceeding a salary of $1,200 per annum," and also fails to provide specifically for that class of clerks. Consequently, under the provisions of bill 2571 as it now stands, this Office will, at the end of the current fiscal year, be deprived of its entire corps of copyists. The result must necessarily be an entire suspension of one class of work and the serious obstruction of several other classes.

The public at large has been notified by my official report, (1875, page 21,) and to a still greater extent by the wide-spread announcement of the newspaper press, reported from time to time during the past six months, that this Office was engaged in collating the patents remaining on file here and at the several local offices with a view to the delivery of the same to the present holders of the lands.

The sum of this class of patents will comprise from one to two millions, of which there are some 30,000 cases in the State of Ohio, 60,000 cases in Indiana, and 120,000 to 150,000 cases in Illinois, with still larger numbers in Iowa, Missouri, California, &c.

The land-owners in these States, stimulated by the pre-announcement of the purpose of this Office, are aroused to a natural sense of the importance of securing these foundation-titles to their possessions, and the correspondence of the Office abundantly shows that they are impatiently awaiting the completion and publication of the lists.

At the present rate of progress in the work I shall be ready to deliver the patents for the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois within six or seven months. Deprived of my corps of copyists my ability to complete or even continue the work after June 30 next will cease entirely.

The proposed reduction of this particular class of employés will also still further postpone the performance of a labor imposed upon this Office by a law which has stood upon the statute-books for forty years, namely: The indexing of the records of patents, now comprising three millions and a half. This labor is required by the act of July 4, 1836; but through insufficiency of clerical force it has never yet been even commenced.

In view of these facts I have the honor to recommend that line 1265 of bill H. R. No. 2571 be amended by substituting "ninety-six" for "eighty," and that the proviso hereinbefore recited (pages 1 and 2 of this letter) be added to line 1270.

Upon the matter of the proposed allowance of salary for one draughtsman and one assistant-draughtsman, under the pending bill, I beg to state that the sum of $1,400, fixed as the salary of the draughtsmen for the ensuing fiscal year, is not sufficient to retain in the service of the Government a person competent to discharge the duties of that place. Not only should the principal draughtsman be conversant fully and thoroughly with the details, practical and theoretical of the general surveying system of the United States, and with the large body of laws controlling the same, but he should be competent as well to test the accuracy of the work and supervise the intricate computations which have to do with the surveys astronomically made of the boundary lines which from time to time are established under authority of law, and which for all future time are to separate the jurisdictions of the Territories of the United States and of the States hereafter to be created therefrom. In other words, every motive of public economy, safety, and accuracy requires that the principal draughtsman of this Office should be a man of the highest scientific attainments in his profession. Such a man, I repeat, cannot be obtained at the salary proposed to be paid.

In my opinion a salary of not less than $2,000 per annum ought to be appropriated for the principal draughtsman, and an assistant-draughtsman ought to receive not less than a salary of $1,400.

I deem it my duty to further call your attention to the following special matters:

In the appropriation for the current fiscal year provision is made for one clerk at a salary of $2,000 per annum. In the pending bill this is entirely omitted. I presume it to have been an inadvertence, as this was not a new office created by the appropriation bill for the current year. On the contrary, a clerk at that salary had long been provided for by law, although under a different designation.

By reference to the accompanying table it will be perceived that the percentage of clerks allowed this Office at a salary of $1,800 and more under the pending bill is smaller than appears to be allowed, with possibly one exception, to any other Bureau in any of the Departments of the Government. I do not hesitate to say in this connection that, while this is the fact, the requirements of this Office are such as should entitle it to a clerical force of as high a grade as that of any other Bureau.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. S. BURDETT, Commissioner.

Hon. MILTON SAYLER,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. So far as I can remember—and I have heard that letter before, or the substance of it in another letter on the same subject—there are three objections which the Commissioner of the Land Office makes. One of these objections is met by the committee in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which is now pending.

The next objection is that he desires to have restored the number of clerks of class one from eighty, as provided in this bill, to what it now is, ninety-six. The committee will notice that we have reduced this class of clerks less than 20 per cent. Twenty per cent. of ninety-six would be nineteen, while we have only taken off sixteen clerks; and with the increased hours of labor that will obviate the objection. The other objection is as to the draughtsmen. Their salaries were $1,600 and $1,400.

Mr. SAYLER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that they were $2,000 and $1,600.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I do not find it so. I find in the estimates for the draughtsman $1,600, and assistant draughtsman $1,400; $3,000 for the two.

Mr. SAYLER. I only know from the statement of the Commissioner of the Land Office.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I go to the estimates, which ought to be reliable, and which the gentleman can look at.

Now, it will be observed that the reduction in this Land Office is less than 20 per cent. The aggregate appropriated last year was $264,960, while we now appropriate $211,280, which is about 20 per cent., not taking into account at all the 10 per cent. reduction of salaries.

The question was taken on Mr. WHEELER'S amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I move to further amend this paragraph by inserting before "chief clerk, $1,800," the words "one clerk at a salary of $2,000." I propose by this amendment to re-instate a clerk that has been omitted from this bill by the Committee on Appropriations, probably by inadvertence.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is that?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. In the appropriation bill of last year was this clause: "chief clerk, at $2,000;" and subsequently provision was made for another clerk at $2,000, both of them being exceedingly necessary to the proper working of this Office. They are men with a large amount of information in regard to all land matters, and without whose assistance it would be exceedingly difficult for the Commissioner of the General Land Office to get along with the more important and the higher duties of the Office. This bill now cuts out one of the most important clerks there are in the Land Office, upon whose large amount of information the Commissioner of the General Land Office has greatly to rely. I trust therefore that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. We did not deem that officer necessary; we thought he could be dispensed with, and that his duties properly devolved upon the chief clerk, whom we retained.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. And therein the Commissioner of the General Land Office differs greatly with the committee. He says that it is very essential for the proper working of the Office and for the public interest that this officer should be retained.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not the first instance in which the committee have disagreed with the heads of Bureaus and Departments.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I know the committee disagree all the way through, and often without consulting them.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Yes they do.

The amendment of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I have another amendment to move to this paragraph, to increase the number of clerks of class one from eighty, as proposed by this bill, to ninety-six. The necessity for an increase of force over and above the number of clerks embraced in this bill arises from the fact that there is being collated all the land patents in Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, and other Western States, to be given to the owners of those lands. The members of the Committee of the Whole will bear in mind that from the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, read at the instance of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER,] the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, it appears that there are 60,000 cases in Indiana, 120,000 cases in Illinois, and 30,000 cases in Ohio, where the patents to the lands have not yet been delivered. It is a matter of great importance to the gentlemen representing those States, and to their constituents, that this collation of titles should be made, that this information should be given to them by collating the titles and advertising the information in the different States where these land patents ought to be issued.

In addition to that, it is a remarkable fact there has been upon the statute-book for forty years a law requiring that the patents for the public lands should be indexed. There has not yet been a single effort made toward that work, because of the want of the proper clerical force to perform the duty. The Land Department has heretofore endeavored to obtain the necessary clerical force for the purpose of making this index, and of collating these patents, so that the parties entitled to them might know where to apply for them, and the effort of the Department has continually been frustrated by this House.

For years the Land Office has endeavored to get that increase of clerical force. On two or three occasions I have myself introduced a bill for that purpose, and endeavored to get it through the House; but I never was able to get even a day assigned for its consideration, because of the opposition of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] the latter of whom was resisting the very highest interests of his constituents. I think it is a matter of great importance that this force should be increased from eighty to ninety-six, in order that that collation of the land patents should be carried out, and that the indexing of the patents should be proceeded with immediately, which never yet has been done, although the law for the purpose was passed in 1836. I hope that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think any public interest has suffered because of the delay in making out this index of land patents. As to the delivery of the patents, I am very confident that the delay in issuing them is of very little public concern. I have noticed coming up occasionally duplicate land-office certificates issued twenty or thirty years ago, and the holder has been content with his duplicate land-warrant.

I wish to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to two facts. There has been an actual decline in the business of this Land Office, as judged by the disposal of public lands. The land disposed of last year was 2,459,601.63 acres less than the year before. Independent of lands certified to railroad companies, the whole amount of lands disposed of last year was but little rising of 3,500,000 acres. Of that amount 745,061.30 acres were sold for cash, and 2,357,057.69 acres were taken under the homestead law.

Now with this decline in the business of that Office it is proposed to increase the clerical force. This bill reduces the force of that Office but slightly compared with the reductions made in other Bureaus—only about 20 per cent. I find that this is one of the offices growing steadily in expenditures. In many respects, independent of the railroad system and of the lands taken under the homestead law, the General Land Office was of very great concern in 1860, and previous years, when the great States of the West were being formed and the public lands therein sold. The total appropriations for 1860-'61 were $232,290, excluding contingencies. This bill appropriates for the same purpose the large sum of $242,380, more than was appropriated in 1860-'61, when the land system of the United States was much more extensive, and when the operations of that Office were in full operation in the great Western States east as well as west of the Mississippi. I find that in the year 1867 when, after the war, the vital forces of our internal industries began to revive, and, with all the extravagance attendant upon that period, the whole appropriations were but $236,840; yet even this bill appropriates $242,380, and gentlemen are demanding more.

I think this Bureau is one in which the House can very well attempt retrenchment. Most of us are acquainted with the very excellent gentleman who presides over it; but I have found that when a Bureau grows to the extent to which this has grown, it is almost impossible, with the pressure for employment, for even an economical head to keep it within reasonable limits; and I think the only mode by which this can possibly be done is to severely limit the appropriations.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not true that there is no index in that Office?

Mr. HOLMAN. That has been true from the foundation of the Land Office.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it not desirable to have one?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is one of those things that ought to be provided for in the progress of time. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TOWNSEND] has remarked, it has been urged for years, and some progress has been made in making it; but I have not found (I do not know what may have been the experience of other gentlemen) any considerable impediment in the way of investigation into whatever pertains to the records of that Office. Calls for information are as promptly attended to by this Bureau as by any other in the Government. I know that the absence of an index is a very great inconvenience to the Office itself; but it is attended with no material public embarrassment.

Mr. RANDALL. One word further in reply to the remarks of my colleague, [Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania.] He will see that we have not abridged this Bureau at all with reference to the class of clerks that he speaks of. Eighty clerks, working eight hours a day, as we say they should work, will give the Government six hundred and forty hours of labor daily. If ninety-six clerks are retained, working six hours a day, they will give the Government five hundred and seventy-six hours daily. Thus it will be seen that we absolutely secure to the Government from this class of clerks sixty-four hours more work daily than is obtained under the existing law or under existing management. There is therefore no occasion whatever for the amendment. The bill will give the Department more hours of labor daily than it has had heretofore.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line 1263, these words: "Three principal clerks at $1,800 each."

Mr. Chairman, this amendment, if adopted, will restore the provision contained in the last appropriation bill. I am glad that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. SAYLER] has so well brought before the committee and the country the demand for a larger force than that provided in this bill for so important a Bureau as the General Land Office. It ought to be understood—and I think the gentleman from Indiana ought to agree to this position—that while there are some Bureaus which ought gradually to be reduced in force, and will naturally be reduced, the time has not come when the clerical force of the Land Office can be properly lessened. The very statistics which have been read here show the widespread interest in having these one to two million titles settled, and how necessary it is that those holding land by virtue of homestead or preemption entry should receive perfected titles. There are, then, from one to two millions of patents not yet issued.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has not so much connection with the General Land Office as members representing States farther West. I receive letters every day asking that a patent be secured which ought to have been issued one, two, or three years ago. By the delay in the issuing of these patents the people upon the frontier are embarrassed. They are not able to sell, exchange, or mortgage their land, and so are unable to perfect their improvements, simply because they cannot get their Government deed.

I wish to make a single remark in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] He has referred us to the period of 1860; and I desire to say to him that we are to-day in a wholly different attitude as a country, because of the legislation that immediately preceded 1860 and to which he has referred. If there is a single bright page in the history of the two democratic administrations that preceded 1860, it is that they gave to the country an impetus in western settlement such as it never had before.

The gentleman alludes very frequently to what he denominates the railroad land system. Sir, that was inaugurated and carried out by a democratic administration; and I say to the gentleman that that system by which a portion of the public lands was set apart for public improvements is the very policy which has built up the great West and added so immensely to our national wealth and population. The history of this policy is the best page in the record of the democratic administrations of Mr. Pierce and Mr. Buchanan.

In 1860 its beneficence had just begun to show itself. Our growth westward has been perfectly startling; and it has been the result of a policy that a part of the public lands should be set apart for the benefit of the settlers who might penetrate the then Territories of the country and occupy the ungranted portions. The theory of the last few years, that no more public lands should be used for any purpose except for actual settlers, has resulted in that falling off in Land Office business to which the gentleman from Indiana alludes; and thus our vast Territories remain unentered, unapproached, and tardily settled up, because of the narrow and restricted policy which the gentleman from Indiana always so persistently advocates.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while the quantity of lands disposed of within the last year may be less than in previous years, this may not indicate that there is less business to be performed.

To be sure we have no large quantities of land turned over to States and Territories from recent railroad grants, and that is one reason why the lands farther west are not now being taken and settled. Yet there are hundreds of miles in some of the Territories where are to be found as rich soil as a beneficent God ever gave to mortal, but far beyond the reach of railroads and beyond easy approach, and by the course now taken gentlemen in fact say that they shall so remain unoccupied.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] the other day in his remarks on the land question did enunciate, I admit, a great deal of good theory and sound doctrine. Yet now when he comes to argue against the increase of the Land Office force, he forgets that it is in the interest of every settler that his business should be promptly attended to. And, sir, if there is a Department of this Government which comes home to the masses of the people it is this Land Office. There is no other in which the people are substantially so much interested.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. I rise to oppose the amendment, and will yield my time to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. DUNNELL. Now, Mr. Chairman, thanking the gentleman from Michigan for his courtesy, I have represented my State five years in this House and for four years have been a member of the Committee on Public Lands. I do feel intensely interested in the success of the General Land Office. I have offered an amendment providing for three principal clerks. They have been there heretofore, and ought to be continued to secure prompt and efficient service. One of these principal clerks has been put over the important division of railroad lands. There are springing up in that Bureau some of the most intricate questions conceivable, nice questions of law, which call for good lawyers, well-read and well-informed land officers. Thousands of settlers have their homes in the keeping of these clerks. But it is proposed to get rid of them, when a single decision of one of these principal clerks may involve the title to from 200,000 to 500,000 acres of the public land. It is proposed to turn over this important business to a fourth-class clerk with reduced salary. What has been the result within the last four or five years in the Land Office? We have now in private offices in this city doing a profitable and lucrative land business the very best talent which four years ago was employed in the Government service. One clerk after another has stepped out and abandoned his $1,700 or $1,400 position and gone into practice for himself.

But the gentleman from Indiana seems to think it is not unworthy for the Government to ask a first-class lawyer, a man able, well-informed, and perfectly competent, to sit at one of these desks at a salary of $1,600, as this bill provides. It is not good policy. One of these principal clerks may save his salary forty times over in a single month; for this Land Office, as I have already stated, has the settlement of titles to lands embracing millions of acres occupied by actual settlers.

I can use as earnest language as the gentleman from Indiana in behalf of the actual settler. I represent them upon this floor. I have lived among them for years, and know the annoyances and inconveniences to which they have been subjected, and the suffering thereby entailed upon them. I have received hundreds of letters this winter begging me to obtain patents for lands from the Land Office which they ought to have received long ago, but which they have failed to get, the Land Office alleging they were unable to do it because of the smallness of the clerical force allowed it. Yet those men out upon the frontier, surrounded by the embarrassments of frontier life, are still to be baffled and further put off simply because in this legislative appropriation bill the Committee on Appropriations have arbitrarily established the policy of a 10 per cent. or 20 per cent. reduction. I enter my protest against it, not only in behalf of the constituency I represent, but in behalf of that great West, which has been developed so rapidly under the beneficent policy to which I have alluded. This policy, though not perfect and not sufficiently guarded, perhaps, nevertheless inaugurated a period of great prosperity and unexampled national growth.

The settlement and development of the public domain is wholly and entirely in the interest of the settlers. This hostile policy to the frontier has no advocates on the frontier. Ask the Delegates who represent the Territories? Look at those Territories in their inherent greatness and strength, but yet undeveloped. Shall we apply to them the narrow policy which has been thrust upon Congress within the last few years, so unlike that liberal policy advocated by Douglas and those who inaugurated it, and which has given to us the imperial States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, and Nebraska. Those great States are represented here with largely increased delegations, and, Mr. Chairman, the time will come when their Representatives will be doubled and trebled upon this floor as the result of a kind of legislation which has been forgotten in later days.

One word more. This Land Office is the home department of the Government, and I insist it is bad policy to cut down this right hand of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I certainly sympathize with the gentleman from Minnesota in view of these appeals made to him to obtain patents for land, but it is a new idea. I have never known any person anxious to obtain patents for land except it may be either one of two classes: either a railroad company, anxious to overreach some unfortunate settler, taking advantage of their power in controlling the Land Office, or gentlemen in the interest of speculation, who have entered lands supposed to be mineral lands, anxious to obtain patents for fear the fact should be discovered before they were issued. I have no particular sympathy with either class, and my friend need not disturb his soul or lose his rest on account of either of them. The actual settler who enters his quarter section of land under the homestead law or by honest purchase, is perfectly content with his duplicate land certificate. Ordinarily he is as well satisfied with that, as my friend knows, as if he had the parchment evidence of title in his pocket.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman will admit that it would be of less service to him.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is equally good. It makes no difference whatever whether the settler hold the certificate or patent if the entry is honest.

Mr. DUNNELL. As to the title?

Mr. HOLMAN. His title accrues from the time he makes the entry. His title is perfect. The records of the Land Office show it. The patent itself is of no possible consequence in that respect. And I am quite confident that only those two classes of land grabbers to whom I have referred have ever disturbed my friend from Minnesota in their eager anxiety to obtain a patent from the Land Office.

Indeed, as I remarked a moment ago, I have had gentlemen from my own section of the country and farther west sending me duplicate certificates of entries made twenty-five or thirty years ago, and asking for the patent. It was of no consequence to them whether they had the patent or not until perhaps an opportunity for sale occurred, and the purchaser being cautious and timid might suggest the propriety of getting the patent.

But Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is exceedingly anxious to facilitate the adjustment of the claims of these railroad corporations for their lands, and I apprehend the whole of this effort for a large increase of force is simply to effect the more rapid adjustment of the railroad claims on the public domain.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to correct the gentleman if he would pardon me for the correction. There is not an acre of public lands in the State of Minnesota belonging to the State that has not already gone over to the State. I have never been asked for five years to interest myself in the claim of a single railroad in my State. I represent solely and entirely the pre-emptors and homesteaders of my State.

Mr. HOLMAN. I find, Mr. Chairman, that of the 7,071,000 acres of land disposed of last year 3,107,643 acres went to the benefit of these railroad corporations, nearly one-half of the entire domain disposed of accruing to the benefit of a handful of gentlemen under the name of railroad corporations. The growth of this system of land monopoly begins to appear.

But does the gentleman from Minnesota intend to say to the House that these important questions of law, arising under land-grants and claims upon the public lands, are decided by these subordinate clerks, claims which involve millions of acres? Why, my friend certainly is mistaken about that. The clerk makes out the syllabus of the case. It goes to the Commissioner of the Land-Office and is there subject to his careful deliberation and decision; and from him in important cases it goes to the head of the Interior Department for final decision. It would be strange, indeed, and well calculated to excite our apprehensions, if subordinate clerks at a time like this, when railroad corporations have such motives for corrupting the officers of Government, could decide questions involving millions of acres of the public lands, as between the bona fide honest settler and the railroad corporation. It would be perilous indeed.

Mr. BLOUNT obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thank my friend for this courtesy. Having said this much, I desire to come to another question which my friend from Minnesota debated, as he always debates it, ably and well; and that is what he calls the narrow policy of reserving the public lands for the benefit of the actual settler, as against the liberal policy which would monopolize the lands of this country in the hands of a few gigantic corporations. Liberal policy! Liberal to whom? I cannot fail to stop and admire at least the courage of my friend from Minnesota and his frankness, that in the American Congress, as between the landless laboring man who seeks a home on the public domain, which by his own labor shall be made to bloom and blossom, where his wife and children may have shelter and his children in the pursuits of industry become valuable to their country, and the grasping cupidity of a corporation seeking to seize these lands for speculation and monopoly, that my friend should deem the latter as most entitled to favor, fills me with astonishment. The policy of land monopoly through the instrumentality of the land-grant system is, in my judgment, most fatal to our republican institutions.

Does my friend think that it is a good thing in this country that, on pretense of developing the public resources, an ambitious speculator, or shrewd, unscrupulous manager shall become the owner of millions of acres of the public lands at a nominal price or without price? Does he think that comports with the equality of material interests and rights which belong to a Government like ours? Is it to the interest of a Government like ours that Mr. Jay Gould should be the owner of thirty or forty millions of acres of public lands, raising their price entirely beyond the reach of the laboring-men of this country? Sir, if the laboring-men could speak, whose interests are so fearfully involved in this acquisition of the public domain, they would say, "Not another acre of land for monopoly, but every acre of it for the benefit of the actual settler," who will add not simply to his own comforts and prosperity, but will add by the cultivation of his little homestead to the solid and enduring wealth of the country.

I trust, sir, that my friend will not fail to perceive that this policy of land monopoly in the hands of a few adventurers cannot but be attended with the fearful evils apprehended. Why do subordinate officers now leave the Land Office and go into other offices in connection with land agencies? Is it because of low salaries? I will tell the gentleman why it is. The reason is that your land policy is corrupting every branch of this Government. I am thankful in being permitted to say that in my judgment the distinguished gentleman now at the head of that Bureau is an honest man. But I do say that the land grants which have passed this House and the other branch of Congress have done more to demoralize this Government and sap the foundations of the strength of the national fabric than any other series of legislative measures in this or any other country.

They left your Land Office because the facts that they had learned there enabled them to profit by their information. I trust, sir, that not another acre of public lands will ever be granted to a corporation for the purpose of monopolies and to deprive the landless citizen of the opportunity of securing a home. I trust that the views of my friend from Minnesota are entertained by few. My friend overlooks the important fact that it is not merely that 200,000,000 of acres of land have been lost to this country, and that in consequence the chance has been taken from actual settlers to obtain homes, and the landless have been left landless forever under that policy, but, far beyond that, it is a hopeless dishonor to this nation which follows in the track of that policy. Did this nation have occasion to blush until you inaugurated this policy? Did the cheek of an American citizen ever tingle with shame until you inaugurated this policy of subsidies? Sir, what measure has passed Congress granting lands to private corporations which has not resulted in shame and humiliation to the American people?

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. When was this policy inaugurated?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, certainly; I will answer that question with pleasure. There were land grants made away back as far as the years 1850, 1851, and 1852. They were comparatively small grants, the largest not exceeding four and a half millions of acres.

Mr. FOSTER. That was when this system was inaugurated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, it was inaugurated; but my friend will bear in mind that upon this little beginning you have built up these enormous grants of over two hundred millions of acres, embracing the very flower of the public lands of the country, and leaving the mass of the American people to be landless for all time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, obtained the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I think each side has now been heard on this question; and, as it does not pertain to the bill at all, I trust that we shall have a vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I desire to reply to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on a vote on the amendment. This discussion has nothing to do with the bill at all, and I cannot afford to allow all this time to be wasted in general discussion on a subject not connected with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think it comes with a very bad grace from the gentleman from Indiana to charge the republican party with the inauguration of the land-grant policy, when it is a historical fact that that policy was inaugurated by the democratic party—I mean the policy of granting lands to railroads—as far back as 1850; the first large grant being given, if I remember aright, to the Illinois Central Railroad Company; and from that time up to the time when the republican party came into power in 1860 the democratic party had granted to railroads some twenty or thirty million acres of the public lands and had established the policy of railroad land grants.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend must bear in mind that I only referred to that in connection with the inquiry made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER.] I did not say what party was responsible for the policy.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I may remark in addition to that, that from that time forward until within the last two or three years both parties were equally responsible for the land-grant system as applied to railroads. All over the country everywhere whenever a railroad company came before Congress and asked for a grant in aid of the construction of its road, it was freely given. But for the last three or four years both the republican and democratic parties have found that while the system has been in some respects beneficial to the advancement of the great interests of the country by opening out railroads in portions of the nation that otherwise would not have been developed, and thereby enabled those portions to be developed that were within the reach and influence of the railroads, on the other hand it had been prejudicial in allowing a large amount of public lands to be gathered into the hands of corporations, and too frequently withheld from actual settlers.

In 1862, under the domination of the republican party, was instituted what is called the homestead principle, a principle which granted to the head of every family, and to every adult citizen who chooses to take it, a home on the public lands almost free of expense. The whole expense that was liable to be incurred was about $9 at entry, and as many more at the end of the term when the patent might be granted, the only condition being that the homesteader should enter upon, settle, and cultivate the lands selected for the period of five years. The law allowed him, however, under a construction placed upon it, at the end of some eighteen months to sell his land if he thought proper. But it was held that when a man had been upon the land which he had selected for himself for eighteen months or two years he would have sufficiently cultivated it and become attached to it to make his home upon it thereafter forever.

The whole principle and policy of the Government from that time forward has been to discourage the pre-emption principle and to encourage the homestead principle. The pre-emption principle unfortunately was allowed so to be exercised as to gather together into the hands of individuals and speculators large bodies of public lands which were held by them for speculative purposes, waiting until the bona fide settlers of the neighborhood should improve their lands and thereby make the lands of these speculators more profitable. But from that time forward we have endeavored through the homestead principle to get away from that, and in the last Congress I had the honor to introduce a bill here which I was glad to see met the approbation of my economical and conservative friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] doing away practically with the pre-emption principle and confining the settlement of the public land under the homestead law.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote

Mr. DUNNELL. Just one minute.

Mr. RANDALL. You have had ten minutes.

Mr. DUNNELL. I know that; and you have had a great many ten minutes since this bill was taken up. I wish to correct a single statement made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] I think he misunderstands the duties of these principal clerks. It is true, although he may not think so, that these principal clerks write out all the decisions of the Land Office. They prepare all the findings, and they are then taken to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It would not be possible for him to investigate every point submitted to his Office.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] that in the communication read here to-day from the Commissioner of the General Land Office no objection was made on account of these principal clerks, and he does not suggest their re-instatement in this bill.

The amendment of Mr. DUNNELL was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend the pending paragraph so as to make the salary of the draughtsman $2,000 instead of $1,400, and of the assistant draughtsman $1,400 instead of $1,200. The bill as reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations cuts down the salaries of the draughtsman and assistant draughtsman to $1,400 and $1,200 respectively.

It is an erroneous idea in the minds of many, and probably in the minds of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, that the draughtsman is a mere plotter of maps. To be an accomplished draughtsman requires a very much larger amount of information than to be an ordinary surveyor. In the first place, the draughtsman must have a knowledge of the land laws of the country. In the second place, he must have a thorough knowledge of the surveying laws and of the modes and practices of surveying the lands of the General Government. In the third place, inasmuch as these draughts or maps will have reference to the boundary-lines between States and between the United States and the countries north and south, the draughtsman must be an accomplished scientific gentleman, thoroughly acquainted with astronomical calculations, so as to be able to ascertain and define precisely by astronomical observations the locations of the different points along the lines between our territory and the territory of foreign countries north and south of us, and also between the different States and between the States and Territories.

It therefore requires a man of the very highest scientific attainments to be a draughtsman in the General Land Office. He should be a man of as large scientific knowledge as any gentleman connected with the Coast Survey. He should be a man who can thoroughly understand all of the workings of the Land Department from one end to the other so far as these surveys are made. You cannot get such a man or retain him in office unless you pay him a competent salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. When was this office of draughtsman first created?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I do not remember.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was no such office in 1860.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says there was no such office in 1860.

Mr. HOLMAN. At least I do not find any appropriation at that time for such an officer.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. That may very well be. The gentleman goes back to an early period when the Land Department was comparatively insignificant compared with what it is to-day.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I want to say this: that the policy followed up by this House in regard to the Land Department in this country has driven out of that Office, as my friend from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] has said, the very best talent, that which was most necessary for the proper conducting of the business of that Office. Nay, more, I know of my own knowledge that the last Commissioner of the General Land Office saved more to the Government in one single item of information that he was enabled to furnish by his ingenuity, learning, and skill, than would have paid his salary for ten years. Yet he was driven out of office because of the smallness of his salary.

So, too, I may remark again, the very best talent you have ever had there, the most necessary for keeping properly and correctly the titles to lands owned by people of the great West, has been driven to seek employment elsewhere, which employment they have been able to obtain from their great talents and ability, and at a far higher compensation than this Government is willing to give them.

I consider that it is a niggardly economy, not a true and just economy, that would continue this practice. True economy in all the departments of life, whether it be in governmental business or in the ordinary business of private life, would require that whenever you want a thing done you should seek to obtain the very best men to do it that you can find and pay them the full value of their services. But this is not the policy that has been pursued in regard to this Department. By cutting down the salaries of the employés of this Department, by preventing the head of the Department from obtaining the proper force to do his work, you have driven out the best talent and been compelled to hand over to men of inferior ability the most delicate matters of title in regard to the great body of lands that lie in the West.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] awhile ago remarked that the patent to land is of no value at all to the man who holds the land. Sir, it is the highest evidence of his title, and for want of that title, for want of possessing the patents to the land, hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of litigated cases have arisen in the great West. It is because of that want of the best evidence of title from the Government, the original proprietor of the soil, that this great litigation has been continually going on and is still going on at the present day. It frequently happens that two individuals possess the same muniment of title to land.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to correct a mistake into which I have fallen. The appropriation bills in 1860 were so differently prepared from those now before us that I find I omitted several items which ought to be taken into account in ascertaining the expenditures of the General Land Office. I find on more careful examination that in 1860 the compensation of the Commissioner of the Land Office, recorder, draughtsman, assistant draughtsman, clerks, messengers, assistant messengers, packers, watchers, and laborers in his Office amounted to $173,890, and that additional clerical force was allowed to the amount of $58,400, making the amount about the same as in the year 1867, and only about $25,000 less than the sum appropriated by this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that debate on this paragraph be closed.

Mr. SAYLER. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will allow me to correct a statement which I made a few moments ago.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. SAYLER. From an examination of the facts in regard to the pay of the draughtsman in charge, I evidently misapprehended the statement made to me in conversation by the Commissioner of the Land Office, Mr. Burdett. He certainly would not state to me anything which was not entirely correct, and I therefore infer that what he said to me was that the pay of the draughtsman ought to be $2,000, not that it was $2,000.

In this connection I desire to express my entire sympathy with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] and to say that in my judgment it is utterly absurd and ridiculous for this House to suppose that competent men, who have spent all the years of their early life in acquiring a scientific professional education, can be employed at the rate of $1,400 and $1,200 a year, a sum less than is received by almost the commonest clerk in a dry-goods store. I protest against fixing the pay of this chief draughtsman in the Land Office at such a sum as may compel him either to resign or to be dishonest in the discharge of his duties. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be adopted. I am in favor of economy; but it seems to me a false species of economy to give niggardly salaries of this kind to gentlemen who occupy positions so important.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not admit that it is either niggardly or absurd to treat all alike. We have reduced this salary just as we have reduced all; and I had supposed that the democrats came to Congress to reduce the extravagant expenditures of this Government. It was upon that issue, I take it, that a majority of democrats was elected to this House. In accordance with that belief the Committee on Appropriations have reduced these salaries 10 per cent. and have cut down supernumeraries in the Bureau 20 per cent; and we propose to require eight hours labor daily instead of six. For myself I propose to respect the judgment of the people in reference to reductions. There is no reason whatever why these draughtsmen should be made exceptions.

Mr. SAYLER. I wish to correct one statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] I am not opposing the general policy of this bill, as he has suggested; but, as he knows, the reductions have not been made uniform. The reduction proposed in this instance is more than 10 per cent.; and there have been exceptional cases in which the reductions have not been 10 per cent., while in other instances they have amounted to as much as 37 per cent. This is one of the offices in which, in my judgment, there should be no reduction made; on the contrary, I think the salary should be increased, and I believe I have a right to entertain that judgment.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly the gentleman has a right to vote as he pleases. He is responsible to no one except his constituents. But while he votes as he pleases, I want to suggest the grounds upon which, as I believe, the democratic majority entered this Hall.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 49, noes 96.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask that debate on this paragraph be closed.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Map of the United States: For three thousand six hundred copies (including paper) of the map of the United States prepared in this Office, $6,000.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph just read the following:

And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to provide for the sale of such maps and photographs produced in his Department as he may deem of general public interest, at such price, to be fixed by him, as shall be equal to the cost of publication; the proceeds arising from such sale to be turned into the Treasury.

The object of this amendment is that this United States map, one of the most valuable maps ever published by the Department, may be issued in such shape that it may come into the hands of the people of the country. It exhibits all the surveys and all the explorations of the Territories. It is so desirable, that already a great many applications have been made to me for this map.

Then, again, Professor Hayden has produced some very fine photographs, beautiful representations of natural scenery, which should be placed within the reach of the entire people. This amendment, if adopted, will simply authorize the Secretary of the Interior to prepare these maps and photographs and offer them for sale at the cost price, the proceeds to go into the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman, I will state that there is no estimate for this. Besides, I do not think the United States Government should compete with private enterprise in this respect.

Mr. HUBBELL. There is no competition. This is a map which ought to be accessible to every person; and while we cannot send it out at the expense of the Government, it seems to me we ought to allow the people to purchase it at cost, as we do with the Revised Statutes.

Now we allow the Revised Statutes to be published and sold at cost price. A map of such general interest as this certainly ought to be placed within the reach of the people of the entire country.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Michigan must see what a loose mode of doing business this would be to give unlimited authority to the Secretary of the Interior to provide for the sale of such maps and photographs produced in his Department as he may deem of general public interest at such price to be fixed by him as shall be equal to the cost of publication, the proceeds arising from such sales to be turned into the Treasury. That puts the Government right into the business of publishing and selling maps, and to that extent interferes with private enterprise. I do not think the Government should do any such thing. It should perhaps supply maps for its own officers and for conducting its own business, but it ought not to enter into the business of publishing maps to supply the entire people of the country.

Mr. HUBBELL. We allow the post-office map to be published in the same way.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the post-office bill restricts that matter. The Post-Office appropriation, as agreed upon by the committee, contains a restriction in reference to the post-office map, for the very reason the Government of the United States ought not to be allowed to interfere with private enterprise in this respect. This Land Office map was never authorized by law, and gentlemen will find even in the Post-Office Department, where it has been practiced to some extent, it has been without authority of law.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think there has been any material restriction in the Post-Office appropriation bill in regard to the publication of Post-Office maps. It simply provides the money received shall be paid into the Treasury. I take it this Land-Office map does not compete with any private map manufactory in the United States. It is a map peculiarly fitted to be prepared at the Land Office. It is an excellent map, and a great many people all over the country would like to have the opportunity to buy it. There is not a single map publisher in the country who makes any such map. We publish the Post-Office map in the same way, and we publish the Revised Statutes and furnish them in the same way to the people. I cannot see what objection there can be to allowing the same thing to be done in reference to this Land-Office map.

Mr. RANDALL. It is stepping out of the usual path and not at all beneficial. We do not wish to keep up such a loose manner of doing business by the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not suppose private enterprise will undertake the publication of this Land Office map.

Mr. RANDALL. Then there cannot be any demand for it, for American enterprise will take hold of everything which conduces to public information and the people demand.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Michigan will see, if the amendment be adopted, we will have to increase the appropriation beyond $6,000. That is the estimate for the maps to be furnished to the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. Thirty-six hundred maps at $6,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. If you provide for selling these Land-Office maps and turning the money into the Treasury, you will have to make an increased appropriation in this bill. It does seem to me, however, it belongs properly to private enterprise. In reference to the postal maps, perhaps no one can perfect the postal maps but the Post-Office Department. Even there it is objectionable. The gentleman from Maine, I believe, objected to it as well as the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask that all debate be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is closed on the pending paragraph.

Mr. HUBBELL'S amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. It is necessary the Committee of Elections should have possession of a paper in a contested-election case now lying on the Speaker's table, and I move the committee rise in order that paper may be taken up and referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the special order, being a bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SOUTH CAROLINA ELECTION CASE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the papers in the contested-election case of Lee against Rainey, from the first congressional district of South Carolina; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

CORRECTION.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I rise to a correction of the Journal. I am reported as not having voted on the yea and nay vote yesterday. I did vote, and voted in the negative, and ask the correction be made.

There was no objection, and the correction was made accordingly.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to a privileged question. I ask the Clerk to read an article from the Republican of this city of this morning's date.

The Clerk read as follows:

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

The following letter was sent yesterday by Commissioner R. H. T. Liepold, of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, to Hon. B. B. DOUGLAS, chairman of the committee of investigation into the affairs of the bank. It shows the policy which has been pursued by this star-chamber inquisition ever since its sessions commenced. It is not seeking facts or truth of any kind, but secret slanders with which to blast the reputation of honest men:

"In my letter to you of the 2d ultimo I respectfully requested that an opportunity be given me to be heard on the subject of certain charges alleged to have been preferred against me before your committee by one George D. Johnson, and that I be permitted to confront him before you. This was denied me, as was also my further request that I might see his testimony. I have a similar request to make with reference to the testimony said to have been given before your committee by one C. B. Purvis and Mr. Le Roy Tuttle, reflecting upon my conduct as one of the commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company; and in view of the very injurious character of this testimony, I sincerely hope that the favor asked will be accorded to me. The testimony is simply outrageous and wholly devoid of truth.

"I have never attempted, either directly or indirectly, to persuade or induce any depositor of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to dispose of his or her pass-book, neither have I ever paid or offered to pay any money or other consideration for any such pass-book or other claim against the company; neither have I ever had, nor have I now, any interest, either directly or indirectly, in any such pass-books or claims."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, so far as the preface with which the editor of the Republican has seen fit to introduce the letter of Mr. Liepold, and which he states was sent to me yesterday, is concerned, I have but little to say, as I have long since learned the impolicy of undertaking to throw dirt with the editor of a newspaper. But, sir, as against the freedmen who have been defrauded and robbed of their hard earnings deposited in this savings-bank he champions those honest men whose reputation he says this star-chamber inquisition, known as the select committee of which I am chairman, is trying to damage, I think the gentleman himself must be indifferently honest.

Sir, it is not surprising that the editor of the leading republican paper in the city of Washington, and which has the reputation of championing all the rings which are so famous, or, it may be said without indecorum, so infamous in the history of this city for the last few years—it is not surprising that the editor of that paper should come before the country championing the "honest" men who had the management of the Freedman's Bank and slandering the fair name and reputation of a committee which had their misdeeds under examination.

But, sir, I desire particularly to refer to the statement that this letter was sent to me on yesterday, by which it is intended, I presume, to convey by implication the idea that I had received from Mr. Liepold a respectful communication to which I had given no attention. If that, sir, was the intention of the editor or of Mr. Leipold in sending that letter for publication, I pronounce it an unqualified falsehood. That letter was found by me on my table last night, and this morning before or about ten o'clock I called at the office of the Freedman's Bank to see Mr. Liepold, and as he was not in I sat down at the desk and drafted a reply, which I left in his hands, he having come in in the mean time, and I being perfectly innocent at the time of any knowledge that this article had appeared in the columns of the Republican this morning. The letter which I addressed to Mr. Liepold is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., April 26, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I called this morning to see you in regard to the somewhat extraordinary letter I received from you last evening. Referring to its statements, I have to correct you in saying that you had been denied a hearing before the Select Committee on the Freedman's Bank, of which I have the honor to be chairman On the contrary, you were called before that committee and had an opportunity to tell anything and everything you knew about the affairs of the bank, (whether you were personally implicated or not,) and you were called for that express purpose. We did not choose voluntarily to impeach our own witnesses, but you were at full liberty to do so if you had thought proper, and you knew wherein you had been implicated, as your former letter to me clearly proves. As to your request to be shown the testimony of any particular witness, it was not permitted because opposed to the settled rule of our proceedings, and, if once departed from, would have involved us in difficulties which would have protracted the investigation indefinitely and resulted in nothing but a mass of statements and counter-statements. The committee, I am sure, have no disposition to do you injustice; but, as your unsustained contradiction of the witnesses would not be received for much in a court of justice, I cannot see that an investigating committee, sitting very much as a grand jury, was obliged to call for them, though you were at liberty to make them when in our presence. As to your private arrangements and understanding with Mr. Totten and your reasons for resigning your position in the United States Treasury to take one on the bank commission, they are matters that do not concern us or the public, and therefore we do not propose to inquire into them.

Very respectfully,

B. B. DOUGLAS.

R. H. T. LIEPOLD, Esq.

The purpose of the publication in the Republican must be very obvious. This is an attempt on the part of Liepold to escape the consequences of the disclosures by his mere personal and unsupported denial of the facts. There is, however, in his statement just enough of truth to prevent its being a bald falsehood and fabrication from beginning to end. There was such a letter as that to which he refers addressed to me last month; but in it he made a most unreasonable request, as I think the common sense of this House will agree. He requested that he should be permitted to come into the committee, not with evidence to vindicate himself against any charge made against him, but to inspect the testimony, which under the rule adopted by the committee was taken in secret, and to afford him the opportunity to give his personal denial. That was denied to him; it was denied to the press; it was denied to everybody; I mean the opportunity of seeing this testimony until it suited the purposes of the committee to report it to the House or of the House to direct it to be made public.

Now, I say without the fear of contradiction, and in what I say I will be sustained by my colleagues on the committee, that Mr. Liepold has had an ample opportunity of making his vindication before the committee. Since the testimony to which he refers was taken before the committee he has been called there as a witness and has been requested to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. And if he did not choose to avail himself of the opportunity, it was his fault and not ours. Moreover, he was on that occasion distinctly told by myself, as the chairman of the committee, that we did not then discharge him, but would call him again at any time when the progress of the investigation seemed to require it. He is still held under the subpœna, liable to be called before the committee at any time, and he can come when he chooses to do so. Why then this publication to break the force of the investigation and lead the public attention away on a false track? I may end what I have to say on this matter with the quotation:

No man e'er felt the halter draw,
With good opinion of the law.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed the bill (S. No. 772) to facilitate the printing of public documents; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

TARIFF DUTIES ON SAL-SODA, ETC.

Mr. COCHRANE. I ask unanimous consent to present for reference to the Committee of Ways and Means two petitions against the placing of sal-soda, bicarbonate of soda, caustic soda, and alum on the free list, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection; and the petitions were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. They are as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress:

The undersigned, dealers in and consumers of the articles mentioned herein, hereby respectfully remonstrate against the placing of sal-soda, bicarbonate of soda, caustic soda, and alum on the free list of the tariff, and submit the following considerations:

1. The persons engaged in the manufacture of these articles have invested a large capital, and for many years received no interest or return whatever. These investments were made under a tariff imposing a moderate duty on these articles. The foreign producers have been forced to sell their surplus of these articles in this country at reduced rates to compete with the products made here. The production here has gradually increased, and this competition has reduced the price of the manufactured article here to the consumer far below what it was formerly under a very low duty or practical free trade, as the following comparison will show:

SAL-SODA.

Year.	Price per pound.	Duty per pound.
1858	2.07	1/16 cent.
1876	1.37	¼ cent.

BICARBONATE OF SODA.

Year.	Price per pound.	Duty per pound.
1858	4.80	¼ cent.
1876	4.20	1½ cents.

CAUSTIC SODA.

Year.	Price per pound.	Duty per pound.
1858	6.31	¼ cent.
1876	4.12	1½ cents.

The foreign manufacturers of these articles can afford to sell their product at their home market at remunerative rates, and turn over their surplus to our market at rates below what our factories can be operated. They have the great advantage of cheap labor and capital. It is safe to say that the difference in price of labor makes up one-half the cost of producing these articles. It necessarily results that the foreign producer can reduce prices in the American market to such a point as will compel the American manufacturers to suspend their works, and thus, it is believed, there will be deprived of the means of livelihood over ten thousand persons dependent directly on this manufacture. On the other hand, the maintenance of the tariff, by fostering this manufacture, will tend still further to diminish the cost of these products. The factories for the manufacture of these articles are located in New York City, Western New York, Connecticut, Michigan, Western Pennsylvania, and Eastern Pennsylvania. No material interest, it is believed, in this country, is pressing for this removal of duty from these articles. The paper and glass manufacturers purchase only soda ash, and do not use any other commercial form of soda, and were united on the propriety of the rates fixed by the existing tariff at the time of its passage. The same remarks may be made in reference to alum, the duty on which it is now sought to remove.

NATRONA, April, 1876.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, workmen engaged in the manufacture of one or more of the following products, namely: bicarbonate of soda, sal-soda, caustic soda, and alum, do hereby respectfully represent to your honorable bodies that the placing of the above articles on the free list will compel the closing of the works where we are employed and throw us out of employment, and we respectfully remonstrate against the passing of said bill.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Pension Office:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $2,700; deputy commissioner, $2,250; chief clerk, $1,800; medical referee, $2,250; twenty clerks of class four; forty-two clerks of class three; sixty-four clerks of class two; one hundred clerks of class one; one skilled mechanic, at $1,200; twenty copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; eight assistant messengers; six laborers; two watchmen; one engineer, at $1,260; and one assistant engineer, at $1,000; in all, $338,920.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following amendment:

In line 1280 strike out "$2,700" and insert "$3,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For contingent expenses of the Office, namely: For actual expenses of clerks detailed to investigate suspected attempts at fraud, as provided by law; for stationery; for carpets, mats, furniture, awnings, and repairs of the same; for fuel, gas, engraving, and retouching plates; for bounty-land warrants, printing and binding the same, engraving and printing pension certificates; and for other necessary expenses of the Office, including two daily newspapers; in all, $50,000.

Mr. RUSK. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "dollars," in line 1301, add the following: "Provided, That $40,000 of said sum shall be expended for the investigation of frauds, as above specified."

The amount is not divided now.

Mr. RANDALL. We thought it best to leave it all to the discretion of the Commissioner.

Mr. RUSK. He may use it all for the purchase of carpets or something else.

Mr. RANDALL. If he does he ought to be put out of office; but I do not think for a moment there is any danger of that.

Mr. RUSK. There has been $60,000 heretofore set aside for the investigation of frauds, and I am very sure that it has been well expended.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me hear the amendment again, if you please.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I prefer not to agree to that amendment. I believe that some good results come from the expenditures of the Government in connection with the detection of these pension frauds, but not to this extent. The sum the gentleman proposes to devote to this purpose is a large sum of money, and I would rather leave it discretionary with the Commissioner.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am in the receipt of a great many letters from men who have been in the United States Army who have claims on the Department for pensions, and I am informed that the reason why these claims are not attended to is because the Department cannot employ a sufficient number of agents to go out there and inquire into and ascertain facts which cannot be ascertained by any other method. I understand that there are about four thousand claimants at present, certainly deserving soldiers; but I understand that with the force allowed the Department, last year they were enabled only to inquire into fifteen hundred of the four thousand cases. Now if the committee does not appropriate a sufficient amount to enable these cases to be investigated, this deserving class of men must go without having their cases adjudicated at the Department, and perhaps go for years without the pensions which we are willing they should have, and which they would have, provided the Department was put in a position to discharge these duties. I think the chairman of the committee will see the point.

Mr. RANDALL. I assure the gentleman from Iowa that with the number of clerks proposed by the committee and with the change in the hours of labor it will be sufficient. We reduce the number sixty-three in the four classes of clerks and copyists, which is nearly 20 per cent. There are three hundred and four clerks now, and we provided for two hundred and forty-one clerks and copyists, so that the reduction is sixty-three, and a reduction of 20 per cent. would be sixty-one, and this is not taking into account the reduction of 10 per cent. In this case, as in the case of the Land Office, we have not pressed them at all, and we absolutely get more hours of labor under the new arrangement of clerks than is now obtained under the lesser hours of labor from a larger number of clerks. In other words, I have said there are three hundred and four clerks now, and we provide for two hundred and forty-one, and there is a two-hours increase of work, which will a great deal more than compensate for the reduction of numbers.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But here is the point: the gentleman's theory is that by adding two hours a day to the time of work the Department will be able to detail more clerks, but those that are detailed require so much per day for expenses while they are out on the service.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, but I want to suggest another fact, that the Secretary of the Interior is or was recently discharging clerks from the Pension Bureau.

Mr. FOSTER. Because he had not money to pay them.

Mr. RANDALL. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. JENKS,] the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to state what was the testimony of the chief clerk on this subject.

Mr. JENKS. Mr. Chairman, with reference to this Office, if I supposed the reduction would delay the receipt of a pension by a single honest pensioner for one day, I would not consent that any reduction should be made, but the purpose of an appropriation is that that appropriation shall be in honest, good faith applied to procure labor for the Government for the purposes for which that appropriation was made.

With reference to this Bureau, I will say that in 1867 the whole appropriation was $257,920, and during that year there appears to have been about four times as much work done as there was during the last year. For the year 1868 the appropriation was $249,240, and during that year there was about three times as much work done as there was during the last year. The pending amendment refers to what is called the special-service division of this Bureau. That service consists, as I understand, of a number of persons employed by the Department to go and examine what they call cases of alleged fraud, and it is no doubt just as the gentleman from Iowa says, that if he makes inquiry at the Office in regard to any claim, they will say that it is in the special-service division. If a man comes to the Office with his claim made out as perfectly as it can be, they will assume that no man could make out so good a case unless he had got perjured evidence to sustain him, and the upshot of it is that although a case may be the best case that has come into the Office for three months, it is put into the special-service division and stays there until a detective can be sent out to the vicinity to investigate the facts. Another peculiarity which exists in this branch of the service is that the employés always seem to exaggerate its work, and it seems to be considered that late in the summer and early in the fall it is more important to have these detectives sent out than at any other season, particularly when an election campaign is going on.

This secret service ought not to exist in the form it does to such an extent that the Bureau may detail whom they please and when they please for this purpose. The appropriation for this purpose has been so large that you will find these secret agents all over the United States. I constantly receive letters, as I have no doubt other gentlemen do, complaining that this secret service has succeeded in tying up claims for a year or two that have been fully and amply proved. Hence we can see that this is not a very meritorious service, the endeavor to detect frauds in cases established in good faith. It is not necessary that all the cases in this Bureau should be suspected of fraud, and subjected to inquisitorial examination, where the parties interested do not hear the ex parte evidence taken by some man sent from Washington probably clear to Vermont, at an expense of $300 to $400, to inquire into a claim that is entirely free from fraud.

Now in order to show that it is not necessary to have this force, let me say that when a pension certificate is issued notice is sent to the Third Auditor, stating to whom the certificate is issued, the amount per month to be paid thereon, with the date of the issue of the certificate by the Pension Bureau, and all that is entered in a book in the Third Auditor's Office. The same facts are entered in a book in the Pension Office, the name of the party, the number of the certificate, the amount to be paid on the certificate, and the date from which the pension begins to run. This information is also sent to the pension agent where the pension is to be paid. Three different entries are made of all this information concerning the same identical certificate.

Mr. Clark, the chief clerk of the Pension Bureau, testified before our committee that if the Third Auditor was up with his business there would be no necessity for the existence of what is known as the finance division of the Pension Bureau. I understand that seventy clerks were employed in that division of the Pension Bureau last year. That division is utterly and entirely useless. It is doing work that is not recognized at all in the Third Auditor's Bureau. The Third Auditor pays no attention to it, receives no report from that division, and has nothing in the world to do with it. Hence that whole force of seventy clerks might just as well be knocked off.

You will find by inquiring of any honest clerk in the Pension Office that during the administration of that office by Mr. Barrett it was better conducted than it has ever been since, yet the medical Bureau then consisted of but one medical officer, while it now has fourteen clerks. If that is so, then the force can be reduced from fourteen to two, and the business of the Office would be facilitated very largely. Then, instead of running the peculiar rules of the Office in opposition to the law, they would simply decide each case on its merits, as it ought to be tried, and as a case would be tried in any court of justice, and the business would be disposed of twice as rapidly as now.

Mr. RUSK. The chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has traveled away from the pending amendment, which proposes that $40,000 of this appropriation may be used for the investigation of frauds. I would ask that gentleman if he knows how much money has been collected back by this division of the Pension Bureau, in the last year, of pensions fraudulently paid?

Mr. JENKS. In response to that question I will say that I do not know, nor do I believe that any living man knows, or that anybody ever will find out.

Mr. RUSK. I will say that in round numbers it was over $200,000.

Mr. JENKS. Let me finish my answer.

Mr. RUSK. Very well.

Mr. JENKS. I will state that I have received letters from various parties that there has been a very large amount of money collected that has never been accounted for. Whether that is true or not I will not undertake to say. I will not make statements on this floor which I do not believe to be fully substantiated by conclusive and legal evidence.

Mr. RUSK. That is a matter of record. The gentleman does not answer my question. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that my amendment proposes to furnish a certain amount of money for the detection of frauds. The Commissioner of Pensions has issued an order that all pension cases in this division in regard to which there is no charge of fraud shall be returned to the files. After that order shall have been executed, there will be left nearly two thousand claims in this division. I want to know if the gentleman wishes to leave these claims there, and permit these pensioners to remain on the rolls, although they are charged with drawing their pensions fraudulently? If not, then let a sufficient amount be set aside for this purpose, so that they can be investigated and all the facts ascertained.

The amendment of Mr. RUSK was not agreed to; upon a division ayes 44, noes not counted.

The Clerk read the following:

United States Patent-Office:

For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent-Office, $3,600; for assistant commissioner, $2,700; for chief clerk, $2,250; three examiners-in-chief, at $2,700 each; examiner in charge of interferences, $2,250; trade-mark examiner, $2,250; twenty-four principal examiners, (one of whom shall be librarian,) at $2,250 each; twenty-four first assistant examiners, at $1,620 each; twenty-four second assistant examiners, at $1,440 each; twenty-three third assistant examiners, at $1,200 each; one machinist, $1,400; five clerks of class four, (one of whom shall receive $200 additional for services as financial clerk, and shall give bond in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine;) five clerks of class three; twenty clerks of class two; and thirty-five clerks of class one; also, for twenty-six permanent clerks, at $1,000 each; for forty copyist-clerks, at $900 each; for three skilled draughtsmen, at $1,200 each; for one messenger and purchasing-clerk, $1,000; for one skilled laborer, $1,200; for four attendants in model-room, at $1,000 each; for four attendants in model-room, at $900 each; for forty laborers, at $720 each; for six laborers, at $600 each; in all, $370,220.

Mr. RANDALL. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to strike out "$3,600" and to insert "$4,000" as the salary of the Commissioner of Patents.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDEE. I move to further amend the pending paragraph, so that it will read as follows:

United States Patent Office:

For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $4,500; for assistant commissioner, $3,000; for chief clerk, $2,500; three examiners-in-chief, at $3,000 each; examiner in charge of interferences, $2,500; trade-mark examiner, $2,500; twenty-four principal examiners, (one of whom shall be librarian,) at $2,500 each, &c.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment adopted upon the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was the first proposition embraced in my general amendment, so that this branch of my amendment may therefore be waived. As this amendment is somewhat lengthy, I wish to explain in detail its effect.

The present bill as now amended proposes to make the salary of the Commissioner $4,000; it was formerly $4,500. It proposes that the salary of the assistant commissioner shall be $2,700; I propose to make it $3,000. The salary of the chief clerk, fixed by this bill at $2,250, I propose to make $2,500. The examiners-in-chief, whose salaries in this bill are $2,700, will receive under my amendment $3,000 each. The examiner in charge of interferences and the trade-mark examiner will receive under this bill $2,250; I propose that they shall receive $2,500. The salary of each of the twenty-four principal examiners is fixed in the bill at $2,250; I propose to make it $2,500. In short, Mr. Chairman, the effect of my amendment is to allow to these officers the same salary they have been receiving during the last year.

As to the remainder of this paragraph, I think there should be no change. I believe the salaries of the assistant examiners and the clerks have been very properly reduced. But it strikes me under the circumstances that the officers embraced in my amendment should have their salaries restored to the present figure; and I will state my reasons.

I believe this Bureau is perhaps the only one in all the Departments which brings to the Treasury a revenue. I find by the report of the Secretary of the Interior that the number of patents issued during the past year exceeded those of the previous year by six hundred and eighty-five. The total amount received from fees during the year was $732,285.87, and the total expenditure $708,874.35, leaving an unexpended balance of $23,411.52.

Now inasmuch as this is a Bureau which is profitable to the Government, it occurs to me that we should strike no very serious blow at its efficiency. It seems to me further that this is a Bureau in which the Government should employ, one in which indeed it is obliged to employ, the very highest class of employés. They must be skilled in mechanics and have a full knowledge of patent law, besides being in many other respects men of ability. In order to retain suitable men in employment, we should pay them good salaries. It is now very difficult to keep the examiners in the employ of the Department, because as soon as they become familiar with the workings of the Department they leave it to go into the practice of patent law, in which they can make much more money than by remaining in office upon small salaries.

It is to be considered further that every person embraced in the classes to which I propose to restore the existing salary, obtains his appointment through competitive examination, and must be as a matter of course thoroughly posted in all that is connected with the workings of that Bureau in order to succeed, and when once in, I think it very desirable that his services should be retained.

The proposition which I submit adds to the expenditures proposed in the bill the sum of only $8,700. There will then be about $14,000 of surplus arising from the earnings of this Office over and above all its expenditures.

Mr. Chairman, as I have been permitted to submit some further and general remarks upon that part of this bill which relates to salaries I will now proceed to do so.

This question of salaries, especially of Members and Senators, is always very fruitful in debate. It possesses more elements that appeal to the selfishness of members than any other matter of the same importance that comes before Congress. It is a question in which every member has a direct interest, and I have sometimes feared that were it not for the ear of the reporters and the eye of the intelligent and reading voter the salaries of members would not be kept within those limits which the value of their services and the responsibility and expenses of the position demand. But, sir, I am willing to believe that every member of this House when he is called upon to vote upon this bill will do so conscientiously and will be controlled only by the same unselfish judgment and motives which dictate his action on other matters brought before us in which he has no direct personal interest. To believe otherwise would be unjust to my associates here, and a severe criticism upon the wisdom of that clause in the Constitution which gives to Congress the power to regulate and fix the compensation of its members. The duty of settling the question has been placed upon us, and for one I propose to meet it fairly and candidly.

No one man or body of men can judge nearly so well of the value of the services of Senators and Members of Congress, and of the expenses they are obliged to incur on account of themselves and families and in behalf of their constituents, as the members themselves. I do not mean by this that I should be the judge of the value of the services of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] or that he should be the judge in my case, but as a whole I maintain that this House must be the best judge as to the compensation its members should receive.

Mr. Chairman, a few days since the gentleman from Indiana laid down a rule in this matter of members' salaries. It was this: "That as a citizen in public employ should receive the same compensation substantially he would receive if he discharged the same service with the same integrity and competency in a private employment." I think this rule is subject to successful criticism. If the gentleman means what his language expresses, it seems to me that the rule is not susceptible of being put into practice. I admit, if we had any fixed standard of salaries in private employments in this country, or if we were to be governed by salaries paid in private employment in this city, it might and would be a good rule; but we come from every State in the Union, and the same is true of the clerks and other employés in the Departments, and my information is that no two States pay similar compensation for the same service. Official salaries even are hardly alike in any two States. A merchant's profits in New York may be annually $50,000, while the same man perhaps in another section of the same State, in the same business, could not realize one-half or even one-fifth of that amount. The same is true of the clerk, lawyer, or physician. The expense of living and the demands of society incident to the location where the services are performed have much to do in determining the amount of compensation. No, sir; it seems to me that if the rule of the gentleman was enforced, no two members of this House, no two clerks doing the same work here, would be entitled to the same salary, because each must be measured by the value of his services in his particular profession or business at his home.

If our pay is to be fixed by the standard of salaries of New York City we should receive many thousand dollars more than we do now, and if fixed by the standard of Vermont we should receive perhaps less than our present compensation.

In fixing the salary of the members of Congress certain matters should be considered.

First. How many months during a Congress we are detained here in service.

Second. The expense of living in this city during the time we are compelled to remain here.

Third. To what extent the official duties of a member interfere with his attending to his regular business during the recess.

Fourth. Whether the honor which attaches to the position should not be taken into account in determining the amount of pay we should receive.

Now upon the first point allow me to state what is a fact well known to us and the country. We are elected for two years, while under the present law of only one session annually we are kept here only an average of four or five months each year, and during the other seven or eight months every member does or can do much in his profession, trade, or other business to which he has devoted his life. I admit that his official duties interfere more or less during the recess with his private business, but it must be conceded that every member does or can earn for himself more or less while Congress is not in session. In short, Mr. Chairman, we really draw a thousand dollars for every month we are in actual service. This would seem to be a large salary, but when we come to contemplate the expenses and cost of living here, the expenses preparatory to congressional life, the expenses we incur in behalf of our constituents, the demands of charitable and religious institutions, and the cost of social respectability, the sum is not so very large. Of course members with families consisting of a wife and two or three children save nothing, while members with no family or only a wife can, if they will, realize something over all expenses incident to congressional life. We must not be governed by extreme cases either way, but determine the matter upon general principles, and decide as best we can what is fair and just to the members and Senators as a whole.

Now, sir, I maintain, and I judge from observation and some experience, that as a rule members and Senators can live comfortably, dress respectably, and answer all the other demands upon them incident to the position, and save something out of the salary named in this bill. If this is so, we should not hesitate to sustain the committee upon this point, because all will agree that salaries should never be so large as to make them an inducement for office-seekers and unprincipled men to obtain, nor should the compensation be so low as to prevent poor men aspiring to the position, as then these Halls would be filled only by men of wealth; an event which would almost prove that our free Government was a failure.

Generally speaking, low salaries are in the interest of the poor, but when applied to Senators and members of Congress they are in a very important sense in the interest of the rich. Congress is a place to which both classes aspire, and to the rich it is a pleasing position, as it affords an opportunity for display, fine dress, gilded equipage, and society life, neither of which, in my judgment, are essential to the proper discharge of our duties as members of this body.

I can very well see how certain gentleman can advocate and vote for $2,700. To them the salary is of no account whatever. They are rich, perhaps, or have no business or cares, and would be glad no doubt to spend their lives here without pay or hope of reward. But it seems to me when they urge such a proposition they think very little of the condition and the rights of that portion of the members of this House who cannot afford to spend their time here at a pecuniary loss. It is conceded that $2,700 will not furnish the member the ordinary and substantial comforts which he must have while residing in this city and provide the means to pay the incidental expenses of congressional life. No, sir; these gentlemen are doing a certain class of members a great injustice when they undertake to force the salary down to the sum of $2,700.

Mr. Chairman, let us keep the salary where men of ability and integrity, as well as rich men, can come to these Halls though they come from the humbler walks of life.

Now, sir, I am enabled under the present salary to live with my family as well as I desire, and as well as do the people whom I represent; and I should not ask anything better here than the plain, substantial, and healthful fare which my constituents enjoy at home. I can do this on the sum named in this bill. And while I am willing to consent to the reduction proposed in this matter, which will save about the sum of $200,000 to the Government, I protest respectfully but earnestly against any unjust or indiscriminate cutting down of the pay of clerks and other employés of the Government. Most of these salaries were established years before the war and during a democratic administration. At that time and until 1862, or thereabouts, the cost of living, dress, education, and other necessaries, were low and easily within reach of every frugal and industrious citizen. During the war prices went up but these salaries did not, but were left undisturbed. And now, although prices have not receded to the standard existing when the present compensation was established, it is proposed to cut them down 10 per cent., and why? For the purpose, as I maintain, of making up one of the issues upon which to elect a President. This generally occurs on the eve of such an election; and I look upon such an effort for such a purpose on the part of this House as beneath the dignity of the American Congress. As has been said, reduce the force to the lowest number possible, and not interfere with the proper and efficient working of the Departments, but do not thrust the knife into the already low salaries of the poor clerks, which have remained unchanged for the last twenty years.

I do not believe there is any demand by the people or the intelligent men of either party for the reduction of the salaries of a few hundred clerks in these Departments. Many of them have families to support, and the pay is hardly more than adequate to sustain them. They lay aside nothing, and many times when discharged are really objects of charity.

Now, sir, I do insist that while I am willing to have my own compensation reduced, I am not willing that a certain class of these men and women, who are doing the work of this great Government of ample resources and magnificent institutions, and made up of a people of generous impulses who desire and demand only that justice shall be done all its citizens, shall be required to receive less compensation than is now paid them.

If Congress would convene, attend to, and finish its legitimate business and adjourn, and not spend its time and that of the country for long months in listening to "buncombe" speeches and contending simply for the ascendency of party, I believe it would be approved by the people and would much more command the respect of the intelligent, thinking classes than it will by spending its time over an act to take from the clerks in Government employ 10 per cent. of their salary.

We have been in session now four months, and as yet nothing has been accomplished except what it is supposed will bear upon the great political contest now pending. But two or three of the appropriation bills have as yet passed this House. Witness the debate upon this bill. It has been under consideration for six weeks or more, and we just now begin to consider the last half of it. Under the general debate we have had only three or four speeches that had any reference to the bill whatever. We have had several speeches, said to be on this bill, that referred only to the financial questions of the day; one two-hour speech on granting aid to a railway company, and one long, bitter, though pleasantly delivered speech on the rebellion, southern outrages, and carpet-baggers.

During quite a portion of the time this bill has been before us there was pending a bill which, if passed, would put into employment five or six hundred poor people who have been discharged because we have failed to make the proper appropriation, and, as a consequence, many of them have suffered for want of food and shelter. This fact became so notorious as to call forth comments in the press, and contributions had to be taken in the churches and Departments and in other ways for their relief. Is this not humiliating to the American Congress and to this great and free Government? And yet we hesitated, staggered, and blundered along and allowed time to pass until finally the bill passed. No, Mr. Chairman, if we confined our attention to the legitimate and necessary business of the sessions we should spend less time here, and of course would require less pay. I hope members will act independently, break away from the ranks if need be, and refuse to obey the beck of party leaders, that we shall do exact justice by the employés in Government service.

I am quite willing to admit that many of the salaries and the number employed are too large and should be reduced, and whenever the committee has reached these cases I am glad to sustain it. I refer in my objections to the reduction of the salaries of that class of employés whose salaries have long been established at present rates and who are unable to live respectably on less compensation. This is a time for economy, to be sure; but the economy sought to be carried out should be of that character that shall work no injustice, and one that any party can stand by before the people. You may make large reductions now and attempt to make capital out of it in the campaign, but when another winter the deficiency bills are presented, an event certain to occur, which shall show there has been no material saving to the country, then will be demonstrated the sham and the object will be completely unmasked. Let this attempt at economy originate and be carried out from honest and non-partisan motives, and no injury will be done and the country will rejoice in a favorabl result; but, sir, if in the zeal and selfish determination of party leaed ers for power there shall be a wrong perpetrated, unjust discriminations made, and in the end no real saving, then the country will condemn in no uncertain manner the party which inaugurates such false economy, whether in or out of power.

Mr. Chairman, I have great confidence in the committee and shall vote with them for the reduction of the force and expenses in these Departments in many cases, and in all cases where it is recommended and there appears no good reason why it cannot be properly done.

I believe, sir, we shall at an early day reach a firm business basis; that the money of the country will be the money of our fathers; that nothing will be allowed to circulate that is uncertain or fluctuating in its purchasing power; that all circulating mediums will be of equal value, and that our money when offered in other countries will be received at its face value. The country is anxiously waiting for the first light of such a day, and, I believe, will do all in its power to hasten its advent, and a bold move for true economy in salaries, dress, living, and in the mode and expenses of doing the business of the country, both public and private, will be of great power in accomplishing the result.

I have noticed, and I believe it to be a general rule among intelligent, thinking, business men, whether engaged in salaried employments or in private enterprise, that they live within the limits of their salary or the profits of their business. Now, sir, there are exceptions, but they are confined to men who drop suddenly and unexpectedly into large salaries or profits, or to men who become adventurous, or who lack judgment and foresight and never look beyond the tenure of office, or who miscalculate as to the nature and permanency of their business.

Mr. Chairman, in our action here we should not be governed by the exceptional cases, but should determine what are reasonable salaries, such as shall give the laborer, the clerk, and all other employés of the Government a competency for comfortable support, with a proper margin for contingencies and the purchase of the ordinary luxuries of life. Put the employé where he can feel that he is thus provided for, and his motto will be fidelity to his trust and to live within his income; but if he cannot feel this assurance, he will be restive, become negligent, unfaithful, and perhaps dishonest.

It has been said that this is a progressive age. I think, sir, it is a fast age. Progression proper must always be productive of good, must conduce to the healthfulness and permanency of business and the happiness of the people; but an age of high living, fashion, palatial residences with costly appointments, large profits, and inordinate salaries based on a depreciated currency, will always result disastrously to the business and financial interests of any country.

Give us gold or its equivalent, and with it let us go back to the primitive humbleness and honesty of the generation before us in our manner and kind of living and way of doing business, and confidence will be restored, business revive; and then will the truly progressive age take the place of the fast age in which we live.

The men and women in these Departments here who receive too large pay and live with the age save nothing, and if you pay them less their condition would be just as good as now and perhaps better, as it would lead them into a new and valuable study, the study of economy and how to live prudently and within their means; and, as I view the question, this bill, when properly amended, will have the tendency, wherever its influence is felt, to bring about most excellent results. I believe the employés of the Government will generally become more frugal, more solicitous as to their welfare, and hence much more valuable citizens.

Another valuable result of a proper reduction in the compensation of the public servants will be the effect upon the business men and private employés of the country. Their attention will be called to the question, and they will be led to follow the example we shall set. Expenses will be lessened, and economy generally will become, not at once, but gradually, one of the cardinal rules in the conduct of all kinds of business. There will be less clamor and effort for public positions, and the young men of the country will leave the overcrowded cities and make for themselves homes, and build up a permanent, independent, and honorable business of their own in the rural and unsettled districts. In my judgment there is no better place to initiate this reform than Washington, and no better time than now; and I have no doubt it may be done without detriment to the public service, and without injustice to any whom it may affect.

I maintain that this is not and cannot be made a party question. The necessity for a reform in this direction is recognized by the leading men of both great parties, and the republicans are to-day, as they have been in the past, vigilant in bringing the expenses of the Government to the lowest possible sum, and I hope the republicans in this House will co-operate openly and fearlessly with gentlemen on the other side in all just and reasonable reductions of salaries and other expenses of the Departments, and upon this issue you will find the republican party ready and willing to go to the country.

I have said that no doubt many of the salaries paid to employés here are too large; and while I admit this, I wish to say that, in my judgment, the compensation of many of the public servants in the country is perhaps too small, and in many instances I know it is unequal. Officers in the revenue, postal, and other branches of service, who cannot perform their duties without great expense, and who are compelled much of the time to be away from their homes, are none too well paid. Our revenues will always be largest when we have honest, faithful, and efficient officers in service; and the only way to collect the legitimate revenues of the Government and prevent loss and the recurrence of what are known as the whisky and post-tradership frauds, is to employ the best men, and pay them a full, reasonable compensation for their services. I believe the salaries in many if not all the different branches of service should be re-adjusted, and that men doing substantially the same work, with similar outgoes and responsibilities, should receive the same pay. This is not now the case. But I will not at this time pursue this point further, but hope the committee will consider it fully before the close of the session.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the people I represent are intelligent, frugal, and industrious, and noted, I believe, throughout the country for integrity, stability, and sobriety; all most noble traits. They live humbly, plainly, and prudently, and know but little, and care to know but little, of high, fashionable, or society life; and hence, when I vote for that true reform and retrenchment which shall tend to bring the people and the Government to a firm, steady, and economical basis, I know I represent my constituency faithfully, and in this I follow also the bent of my own inclinations.

Mr. Chairman, I have confined my remarks to the question, and wish to say that while I cannot agree with the committee in many of its recommendations, I do not feel it to be a duty to indulge in any severe criticisms or to put myself in the way of its carrying out any just and discriminate plan of economy and reform; but, sir, I believe, and I am led to this by the candid and apparently well-considered statements of members of the committee who have always commanded my respect, that the majority in this House are going so far, and as the consideration of the bill proceeds are following the lead of the majority of the committee so recklessly, that if the bill becomes a law as it will leave this House great injustice will be done, and the Government seriously crippled, and I predict that before November the democratic party will be brought by absolute demonstrations to see and acknowledge its errors upon this most important issue. The people discriminate as closely as do their representatives. They weigh and consider all these questions as candidly, carefully, and impartially as do we. Their stand-point is as safe as ours, and not being moved by the heat of partisan debate and the many other debasing influences which always surround heated contests for power, they will, in my opinion, judge more wisely as to the errors in this bill if it passes in its present form than the gentlemen on the other side now comprehend or will hereafter be willing to concede. The country will attach the blame, if error is committed, where it belongs, and no party, however strong, can shirk the responsibility. There is no sentimentalism in this question, and the people cannot be swayed in their judgments and votes by sensational, unguarded, or colored speeches. With them it is a plain matter of business, and they look to us to settle all such questions upon the most simple, honorable, and practicable business principles. And I wish only to add that when, in my judgment, the committee has reached and proposes to correct an evil I shall try and rise above mere party considerations and sustain it, but when I am satisfied that it is committing an error, I shall oppose it to the full extent of my power, fearlessly and openly, believing that duty leads me thus far and no farther.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HENDEE] I wish to state that this Bureau is the best paid in the Government. The amendment of the gentleman proposes, as I understand, that the 10 per cent. reduction in salaries shall not affect this Bureau, while it shall operate with respect to all the other Bureaus of the Government. Now, in view of the fact that this is absolutely the best paid Bureau in the Government, I think there would be no propriety or equity or sound judgment in adopting the amendment If there is any Bureau in the Government which should be subjected to the 10 per cent. reduction it is this. As to the gentleman's argument that the salaries should be enlarged because this is a paying Bureau, it might as well be argued that extravagant salaries should be paid in the Internal-Revenue Bureau or the Customs Bureau because those Bureaus yield a revenue. It seems to me there is no firm foundation in logic for such an argument. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. HENDEE. The gentleman will allow me to state that I based my amendment upon the ground that the class of employés to whom it applies are a different class from any whose salaries are reduced in other parts of this bill. That a higher order of talent is required, and hence that the old salaries were none too large.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; and they are receiving very high salaries. For instance, examiners-in-chief have been receiving $3,000, while a fourth-class clerk has received but $1,800. The reductions proposed in this Bureau are less relatively than those proposed in any other except the Pension Bureau. Of course we did not want to touch the Pension Bureau unless we felt absolutely certain that no harm could result. In the Patent Office there have been one hundred and fifty-eight clerks and copyists, and we leave one hundred and thirty-one, a reduction of only twenty-seven—much less than 20 per cent.

Mr. SAMPSON. I move to strike out the last word.

Now, it appears to me, Mr. Chairman, there are some facts in relation to this Office which the Committee on Appropriations have certainly overlooked. It is well known this Office is self-sustaining; that fees are collected for all work done and those fees paid into the Treasury; and further, that annual appropriation is made to defray the expenses of the Office. The surplus in the Treasury to the credit of the Patent-Office fund at this time is $952,800; and, if the increase in receipts for the current quarter is as great as for the last quarter, on the 30th of June next the surplus to the credit of this fund will be over $1,000,000.

There is one point, Mr. Chairman, to which I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and to which he has not adverted in his reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Vermont, and that is every dollar of this money is paid by a particular class, by the inventors of the country. The general tax-payer does not pay one cent. This enormous surplus to the credit of this patent fund, which will amount on the 30th day of June next to $1,000,000, has all been paid by inventors and dealers in patents and those procuring trade-marks. It is their money, and it seems but fair the business for which they pay and which is run exclusively upon their funds should be attended to well and promptly. They are entitled at least to that consideration. Of course not a cent should be wasted, but I say the inventors of the country who pay this money are entitled to have their business well and promptly attended to. That is my proposition.

Now, what is the fact? The reduction in the amount of appropriation in this Office below what it was last year is $159,000, and over $113,000 less than the estimate. The reduction in laborers, copyists, pasters, and folders amounts to forty-one. The increase in revenue in 1874 over 1873 was $35,000, and in 1875 over 1874 $5,000. The increase in the last quarter over the corresponding quarter of last year was $35,000. The increase in the number of applications for patents in 1874 over 1873 was 1,188, and in the number of patents granted 735. The increase in the number of patents granted in 1875 over 1874 was 2,689. From this it will appear the increase of the business of the Office is more than 10 per cent. per annum, while the reduction in force of that Office is something like 17 per cent., leaving a difference of about 25 per cent. in the amount of force and labor over the preceding year.

What is the result? According to the estimate of the Commissioner of Patents it will be impossible for that Office to perform the work it will have to do. The work done is paid for by fees, and of course the less the work done the less will be the fees. The appropriation should be sufficient to perform the work to be done, and for which work the Government receive payment by fees. The more work done the more fees will be received. This reduction on the part of the committee, therefore, is absolutely cutting off revenue by reducing the force. There is work to do, and the money will be paid for it when it is done; still they refuse to furnish the force to do it.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman I wish to direct his attention to the fact we have made no reduction whatever in the higher class of officers in this Bureau. If there is a legitimate source of revenue I know of it is from these patentees. There are some here who would like to break up, or at least to abridge the system of giving enormous fortunes to these patentees. Take for instance the sewing-machines. The whole people of the United States are made to contribute enormous sums of money annually on sewing-machine patents, thereby accumulating vast wealth for the few. So, too, with patents for agricultural machines. The wealth realized in this regard from the body of the people is enormous. Yet they now come here and say the expenses of this Patent Office should not be cut down. I never heard of such a proposition before. The trouble is they ought to be made to contribute toward the support of the Government which gives them a monopoly, additional sums of money instead, while taking by indirection out of the pockets of the people enormous wealth.

Mr. SAMPSON. I would like to correct the gentleman. As I understand, he infers that I am in favor of cutting down the fees?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not infer anything. The gentleman stands here and wants these high salaries shall not be reduced, because the fees come out of the pockets of the patentees. He says they ought to be allowed to come in here and have every facility for the granting of patents. I think the policy of this Government should be in a different direction.

Mr. SAMPSON. Then why does not the gentleman abolish the office altogether?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not quite certain whether I would not.

Mr. SAMPSON. If the gentleman is in favor of breaking down the inventors of the country, then let him say so.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not propose it. The gentleman is speaking in my time. I am not quite certain whether the whole system of patents in this county should not be broken up. As I said before, take your sewing machines, take your agricultural machines, and what have they done? They have laid contributions upon the body of the people. I have no idea this Bureau shall have any greater facility than they now have. I re-affirm the fact that the compensation in this Bureau is larger than any other under the Government.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. SAMPSON.

Mr. SAMPSON. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has entirely misunderstood the object of this amendment and the purpose I had in view in advocating it. The reason why I support the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont is that we may receive as large a revenue from this office as possible; that is, that all the business there is there to do, shall be done, and promptly done.

I supposed that that Office was sustained upon the theory that it was the policy of this Government, and a good policy it is, to favor inventors; that it will result in the rapid increase and the rapid progress of arts and manufactures in this country. I supposed that it was received as a fact, a historical fact, that protection to inventors in this country had resulted in rapid progress in the arts and manufactures.

But I did not desire to go into that subject. My object was simply to say that what work there was in this Office ought to be done, and the force ought to be sufficient. Now I desire to say that if the salaries of these examiners are reduced the probability is that those men who have been there for years, or for a considerable time, and are well acquainted with the business, will leave their places; that we will have incompetent examiners; that the work will not be well done; and for that reason I advocate this amendment. I think it is in the interest of economy and in the interest of the people. Now what is the fact? If we have examiners who are incompetent to pass upon these applications for patents the result is that 10,000 frivolous patents will go abroad through the land. They will not be competent to determine what are new and useful. We want competent men there, and if we put in men there who are not competent, who are not skilled, the result is that these frivolous patents are scattered over the country, and a great many patents are granted that never ought to be granted; old ideas are taken up that have been known hundreds of years, and patents are issued for them from that Office through the ignorance of the examiners. I say we need the very best skill, and the best knowledge, and the best experience here in this Office, and we cannot get it if we reduce the salaries of these officers.

I wish to call the attention of the House to the following statement by the Commissioner of Patents. He says, speaking of these examiners:

> The present salary is not sufficient to induce gentleman of adequate skill to remain in the Office. The usual practice is to appoint them to the grade of third assistant, allowing them to work up to the superior grades as their qualifications and the vacancies may permit. Speaking in general terms, it may be said that it requires six months to attain such knowledge of the class as may render them very serviceable in their rooms. Advancing with the various grades, their knowledge of office practice and of the class to which they have been attached becomes more accurate, and by the time they reach the position of principal examiner the knowledge required is such as to render their services in positions outside of the Office worth more than their salary received therein. This difficulty is already quite an embarrassing one to the Office, even at the present figures. As many as five of our principal examiners are understood to be making preparations to leave, and one has already left.

Now, sir, the fact is it is impossible to keep competent examiners there even at the present figures, and I say the people are deeply interested in having competent men in that Office.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not desire to discuss the amendment which has been offered. I wish merely to say that Mr. JOYCE, of Vermont, who was called home last week on account of the death of his mother, had prepared some remarks on this amendment which he desired to have printed in the RECORD, and I make that request on his behalf. I also ask that the letter which accompanies his remarks may be read at the desk.

There was no objection, and the letter was read. It is printed with Mr. JOYCE'S remarks, which are as follows:

Mr. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman, I cast no reflections upon the other Departments of this Government, and do not detract one iota from their just and well-deserved fame when I say that the Bureau of Patents has been, with few exceptions, peculiarly fortunate in its chiefs, and that it is now presided over by a gentleman whose honor, integrity, and capacity is beyond question or reproach.

And, sir, I only echo the unanimous sentiment of all who know him, or have come in contact with him, either in public or private life, when I say that Judge R. H. Duell, the present Commissioner, is in every way eminently qualified for his position, and that he not only performs his duties to the acceptance of the Government, but to the entire satisfaction of all who have occasion to do business at that Department.

The duties and labors of the Patent Bureau not only require judgment, capacity, and talent at the head, but samples of their work disclose the finest and most ingenious specimens of the mechanical skill of the employés to be found in this or any other country.

The importance of this branch of the public service to the people of this country cannot be overestimated, and the framers of the Constitution were so impressed with this fact that they incorporated into that instrument a provision giving Congress the power "to promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries."

In accordance with the purpose disclosed in this provision of the Constitution, Congress and the courts, commencing as early as 1790, have in every way and manner possible encouraged the spirit of invention and discovery among the people, the inestimable benefits of which are now felt in every calling and avocation of mankind.

The people of this country, among all their other eminent and distinguished qualities and characteristics, have always been particularly celebrated for their designing and inventive genius and capacity, and the encouragement this class of citizens has always received at the hands of the General Government has developed these elements to such an extent that there is now no article or machine, from the mammoth steam-engine to the tiny mouse-trap, which has not been remodeled and improved by their creative powers and mechanical skill, until their name has become a synonym for every useful invention and improvement, and the Patent building in this city has become the Yankee's curiosity shop and the wonder of the world.

The inventors and discoverers of this country are among the most intelligent, industrious, and useful of our citizens, and are growing more and more so as they become more skilled and experienced in the silent and unobtrusive work to which they devote their money and their lives.

Their triumphs are among the most noble and illustrious that have ever been achieved in the world's history, and unless their efforts are crippled and their energies paralyzed by a sordid cupidity and mistaken policy on the part of the Government, it will be demonstrated that they are now only in the very inception and infancy of their great and magnificent work of aiding science, relieving labor, and blessing humanity.

In common with the whole country, the people of my State take a deep interest in this matter, and they look upon the policy proposed in this bill, of reduction in that Department, with anxiety and alarm. Many of her best citizens are earnestly engaged in the work of invention and the manufacture of patented articles, and all of them are interested in the proper and efficient working of the Department. Her people furnish the standard scales for the world, and the stone-cutters, saw-mills, water-wheels, forks, and machinery of all kinds for the working of wood, marble, and slate, invented and manufactured by her artisans are famous in every civilized country on earth.

As indicating more clearly than I can do the feeling of business men and manufacturers of Vermont as touching this matter, I desire to have read by the Clerk a letter I have received from one of the best conducted and most enterprising manufacturing companies in my district, which is doing a large amount of business and paying large sums of money annually at the Patent Bureau, and who, therefore, realize more fully the great injustice sought to be accomplished by this bill:

OFFICE OF THE LANE MANUFACTURING COMPANY,
Montpelier, Vermont, March 29, 1876.

DEAR SIR: As manufacturers of patent machinery we are interested in whatever affects the administration of our patent laws, and we would join most heartily in the very general protest of the inventors, solicitors, and machinery-builders of the country against any attempted reduction in the number and pay of officers of the Patent Office, such as we understand is contemplated by House bill 2571.

As long as the Office is self-supporting, we see no reason why sufficient salaries should not be paid to insure the retention of competent help. Even were the case somewhat different, and a deficiency of millions annually arose by reason of the proper administration of the Patent Office, it would be a damage to the country, and especially to important interests that should be fostered, to make efficiency subordinate to cost. It may be questioned whether present salaries are as high as they should be, and perhaps it would be about as well to abolish the Office altogether as to very materially degrade its efficiency. We hear of no complaints in regard to fees nor do we understand that the charges to inventors are to be made any lower in case the bill becomes a law. The circular of the Commissioner of Patents dated March 17, which you probably have before you, presents, as it seems to us, unanswerable arguments in favor of leaving the Patent Office personnel, salaries, &c., as they are.

We beg that you will not only vote against the proposed reduction, but do what you can in other ways to convince members of the injustice of taxing inventors more than other classes for the general expenses of the Government. Doubtless cheaper men may be found for every position in the country; but would it be advisable to give out places to the lowest bidders? A single blunder may cost more than the whole administration of the Office for a year, and what we want is a higher rather than a lower grade of employés in every place in the Patent Office.

Very respectfully, yours,

LANE MF'G COMPANY,
By M. TAPLIN, Secretary.

Hon. C. H. JOYCE, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

There is another thing which merits attention in connection with this subject, and that is that while every other Department of the Government is calling for large annual appropriations this one is not only self-sustaining, but after paying all expenses actually yields a revenue of many thousands of dollars to the Government yearly, amounting in 1873 to $12,012.79, in 1874 to $58,989.76, and in 1875 to $21,795.65, every penny of which, as I understand it, is paid by the inventors and those who manufacture patented article. That Department, as I am confident, is now run on the closest principles of retrenchment and economy, and has the most perfect and effective organization.

You propose in this bill, by cutting off fifty-seven of the three hundred and fifty-one employés now in the Department and reducing the wages of those retained, in the aggregate $153,860, to well-nigh destroy the organization of the Bureau, and so limit its effective working force that it will be impossible to do the current work of the Office. This policy, if consummated, will cause a loss of revenue to the Government, and fall with crushing weight upon the inventor and manufacturer.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the inventors, authors, and discoverers of this country are a class of men the Government cannot afford to limit and cripple, and the men who propose or advocate such a policy are deficient in true statesmanship, and fail entirely to meet the demands of the people or to comprehend their duty as legislators. They are the men who give life and impetus to every branch of science and every material industry of the country. They are the men who met and defeated the combined powers of the Old World at London, at Paris, and at Vienna, and, unless you ruthlessly bind them hand and foot by the withering provisions of this bill, will give you a glorious victory at Philadelphia.

The fact that other Departments have been cut down is no reason why this should be; let each stand upon its own merits and necessities; because you have unwisely impaired the power and efficiency of the others furnishes no argument in favor of destroying the usefulness of this, and quenching a spirit you ought above all things to foster and encourage.

No man or set of men, no interest or calling, no State or section demands this reduction; but, on the contrary, they all with one accord and one voice protest against it.

I hope therefore that the bill will be amended, and that this Department, at least, will escape the ravages of the destroyer and be allowed to proceed with their work, so that the democratic party may at the end of this session have one thing to be proud of.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I move to strike out the last word. I believe I have in me a more unpopular speech on this general subject than it is possible for any other man in the House to make; but I am not going to attempt to make it now. It would take me more than five minutes; but I will say that I have not yet got over the impression made upon me about fifteen months ago on one of the first days after my entrance into this city as a member of the House by seeing four thousand employés of the Government marching out of the Treasury building after five or six hours of work, which was called a day's work. I believe, sir, that the man or the men who enacted by law that eight hours are a day's work did more injury to the laboring-people of this country than this Appropriation Committee can do good in twenty years. We see it here; we see it in every Department of the Government service that the people employed work half a day and are paid for the whole day. I do not hesitate to say that there is not an honest business man anywhere who can prosecute business successfully where the laborers and employés are only occupied six hours a day.

I cannot, sir, approve the general principles upon which this appropriation bill is founded. But it is a step—in my judgment a blind and imperfect step—in the right direction But let me say that that letter which has just been read should receive the disapprobation of every member of this House. Under the existing state of things in this country, when the employés of the Government, especially in Washington, are only expected and only required to work six hours a day, the talk of maintaining the present system of salaries is preposterous. I believe in paying worthy men and competent men in any position what they are fully worth; but I say again there is no business, no manufacturing business, no commercial business, no professional business, no business whatever which can be prosperously conducted in this country on the system of half-day's work which the Government has adopted.

Well, now, what is the remedy? We cannot cure this gigantic evil in an hour, but I am thankful that this bill provides that Government employés shall be required to work eight hours a day, and when they are prepared to work, as all successful men do work in every other employment, ten hours a day, or twelve hours if it is necessary, I will vote to raise their salaries.

Sir, there is not, in my judgment—and I say this deliberately, for it is a thought that has oftentimes come to me—an advocate of the eight-hour law who ever succeeded in life. I undertake to say that there is not a prosperous business man in the United States, not a prosperous clergyman, not a prosperous lawyer, not a prosperous physician, that there is not a prosperous man in the country who has been an advocate, life-long, for limiting the hours of labor. Sir, I am not, of course, in favor of exacting from Government laborers and employés more than eight hours a day at the present time, but I think that this bill ought not to pass without it being distinctly understood that no head of any Department or of any Bureau is at liberty henceforth to employ anybody without the distinct understanding that eight full hours will be required as a legal day's work.

Well, when you have obtained that what have you accomplished? I am confident that under a stern recognition of what is right and what is necessary in that respect, in nearly every Department in Washington two men might be employed where three may be found now. In my brief experience here I have very rarely found a clerk in any of the Departments who is required to do anything like half a day's work, measuring it by the requirements of a first-class commercial establishment.

Mr. Chairman, I had no thought when I rose of going into these matters. I intended to say in a word that I saw no reason whatever why the amendment proposed to this part of the bill should be adopted.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, some of the rules which govern the laws of labor and the emoluments of labor may seem very unjust and very unusual. In the Patent Office the employés are required, all of them, to work eight hours a day, and do it continuously. The examiners work from eight to sixteen hours a day to my certain knowledge.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not reduced them in number.

Mr. CONGER. Not in number, but in salary. I have a word to say about the reasons given by the chairman of the committee, if I have an opportunity to do it; but I want first to answer the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

Let him tell this House by what rule it is that a man who has spent forty-eight or fifty years of his life, not yet gray, has been enabled to pile up a fortune of millions with his work and his labor and his industry when other men far older than he are as poor as Lazarus was at the gate.

Let my friend's philosophy review the whole field of human labor, and let him think of the toiling millions of this country who live from hand to mouth and work six hours, eight hours, fourteen hours, and twenty hours a day, starving as they go; and let him wonder in his philosophical reflections how it happens that he has been so highly favored above all other men that with the amount of labor he has been able to bestow, whether in eight, twelve, or fourteen hours, a day's work, he has accumulated millions which if distributed among the vast mass of the people would bring joy and happiness, to say nothing of food and comfort, to millions of men in the country.

Mr. Chairman, I like to hear men who have gone through days of toil and nights of trouble give their experience and their advice in this House. I do not like that it should be handed down to us from the thrones of the merchant princes of the land to the poor, weary, down-trodden laborers of the country. [Laughter and applause.] There is a philosophy which will teach that the distribution of vast accumulations of wealth adds vastly to the comforts of the poor and of the suffering. They need not be derided in their days of toil. In God's name let them alone. I, too, had when I first came to this Capitol an exhibition of the condition of the clerks here. I saw several hundred clerks following the dead body of one of their number who had been forty long years in the service of this Government, in high and honorable positions as a clerk, and when he did die and when he was borne to his last resting-place, the contributions of his fellows furnished his coffin and paid for the digging of his grave, and he had not one cent in the world for his hours of sickness, nor one cent left to bury him from the gaze of his fellow-men. I saw that spectacle as hundreds did here; that sad body of men wending their way past this Capitol, following a man who commenced his services as a clerk in these Departments before many of these members here were born. That was his last resting-place; that was his history. He was faithful, honest, and true to this Government through it all. And that is not the only instance of the kind.

Now, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, wise above all other men in this House—and I make that assertion because I think the gentleman will not deny it himself, [laughter]—I ask him what possible connection there is between the salary of a clerk or an examiner in the Patent Office and the fortunes of millions that are amassed by the builders of sewing-machines and agricultural machines?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. I will accept the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] as to wisdom, [laughter,] and will ask that the debate on this paragraph may be closed.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I ask the indulgence of the House for one word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I will not occupy more than a minute.

Mr. RANDALL. In view of the assault made upon the gentleman from New York, I must give him an opportunity to hit back. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHITTENDEN. To show the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that he does not know to whom he was talking, I will tell him that I served as a clerk six years; that the last year of my clerkship I had my board and $100 in money. I worked sixteen hours every day but Sunday, and never had one half day's holiday during the year. Now, if after that statement of fact the gentleman wishes to repeat his speech on any future occasion I will listen to it in silence. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. One word.

Mr. RANDALL. O, no.

Mr. CONGER. O, yes.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsyivania [Mr. RANDALL] has the floor.

Mr. CONGER. Then I will wait till the gentleman is through.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order from the House to close debate upon the pending paragraph.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I hope not; I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not propose to cut off amendments.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I want to explain my amendment.

The question was taken on the motion that the committee rise, and it was agreed to upon a division—ayes 88, noes 39.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the special order, being a bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and pending that motion I move that all debate upon the pending paragraph close in one-quarter of a minute.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Say half a minute. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend so as to allow five minutes for debate; and if that motion is debatable I desire to debate it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not debatable.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I move to amend the amendment so as to make it ten minutes.

Mr. CONGER. I accept the amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was not agreed to.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF PENSION LAWS.

Mr. COX. At the request of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I ask that a joint resolution of the Legislature of his State in relation to the pension laws may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution requesting our Representatives and instructing our Senators in Congress to have the pension law amended.

Whereas a large number of wounded soldiers of the late Union Army from various causes have failed to make application for pensions within the time specified by law who are anxious to do so, but who are now barred by limitation of law: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That our Representatives in Congress be requested, and our Senators instructed, to use their earnest endeavors to have the law so changed or amended that those entitled to pensions may now be permitted to make application for the same.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to forward to each of our Senators and each member of Congress from Ohio a copy of these resolutions, together with the action of the General Assembly thereon.

C. H. GROSVENOR,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
THOS. L. YOUNG,
President of the Senate.

Adopted March 27, 1876.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House, pursuant to order, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

The pending amendment was the one offered by Mr. HENDEE.

Mr. CONGER. With the leave of the committee, I will occupy the one minute allowed for debate.

Mr. RANDALL. Only a quarter of a minute.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Chair state what was the order of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the order of the House was that debate on the pending paragraph shall be limited to one minute.

Mr. CONGER. I will occupy that time in calling the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as I attempted to do before, to this question, which he can answer on some other paragraph: What possible connection is there between salaries of employés in the Patent Office and the amount of money which people have received from patents for sewing-machines and agricultural machines?

Mr. RANDALL. I can tell the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. Not in the minute, which is all the gentleman would allow me. The payment of a fee for a patent is the same in each case, whether it be a patent for an improvement in making a horseshoe nail, or for the largest engine or machine that ever was made; there it no difference in the fee for a patent. A patent for a sewing-machine costs no more than a patent for a machine to make a horseshoe nail. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] may not be aware of that. I should not wonder, from the character of this bill, that the gentleman may think that the Patent Office charges in proportion to the profits that may be made from the machine. I am sorry to have to say these things, when the gentleman cannot answer them, but that is not my fault. The gentleman seems to think there is a payment of fees into the Patent Office in proportion to the profits which the patent will bring to the inventor or the assignee of the invention. That seems to be the character of this bill.

The amendment of Mr. HENDEE was not agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I move to amend the pending paragraph so as to provide for "six clerks of class four, (one of whom shall receive $200 additional for services as financial clerk, and shall give bond in such amount as the Secretary of the Interior may determine;) seven clerks of class three; twenty clerks of class two; and thirty-five clerks of class one; also, for twenty-six permanent clerks, at $1,000 each; for fifty copyist-clerks, at $900 each."

Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon this paragraph is exhausted.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I understood the order to be to close debate upon the pending amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. My motion was to close debate on the pending paragraph. The gentleman will recollect that I told him my object was not to cut off amendments, but to close debate.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent, in behalf of my committee, to make a few remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. How long?

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. You can limit me to four or five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, go ahead.

There was no objection.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I offer this amendment to this paragraph by instruction of the Committee on Patents. It is the opinion of that committee that the force of this Bureau ought not to be cut down, or if cut down, it should be done with great caution. As has been stated, the Patent Office occupies a different position toward the Government from any other Department. No taxes are laid upon the people to sustain the Patent Office. It is supported by the inventors of the country; and, as will be seen by the official figures, during the last ten years nearly a million dollars has been covered back into the Treasury from the receipts of this Office. Its business is steadily increasing.

Let me read the receipts for the last quarter:

	Receipts.	Expenses.
January	$72,000	$52,000
February	74,000	52,000
March	80,000	56,000

The excess of receipts over expenses for the last quarter, ending March 31, was $65,891; and the excess of receipts for that quarter over the corresponding quarter of 1875 was $35,000. The decrease in expenses for the last quarter as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1875 was $13,464.

As chairman of the Committee on Patents, I have felt it my duty to look into the condition of affairs there; and I have been assured by those in authority that the force cannot be cut down without retarding the work in the Office. That work is already behind; yet the business is constantly increasing. Some of the inventors of the country have written to me and others have called upon me to remonstrate against cutting down the force of this Office.

Let me suggest that, if you cripple the force in the Patent Office, you absolutely cut off a part of the revenue of the Government; because the work will be retarded, men will not succeed in getting their patents, and consequently the receipts of the Office will be diminished.

In regard to the copyists, I am told that their salaries are paid from fees for copies furnished to lawyers and other parties, and that the force proposed in this bill, forty in number, is not sufficient to carry on the work. I hope that at any rate the amendment which I offer will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. There are about two hundred and sixty employés in this Bureau. As to one hundred and two of the highest officers in the Bureau we have not made any reduction of force. The number of clerks, heretofore one hundred and six, we reduce by eighteen, and the copyists are reduced from fifty to forty. This is the least reduction we have made in any branch of the Government.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 58, noes 83.

Mr. SAMPSON. I move to amend by striking out, in line 1327, the word "four" and inserting "six," so as to provide for "six attendants in the model-room." I would like to make a remark or two upon this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted under the order of the House.

Mr. SAMPSON. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement in reference to this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I object.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SAMPSON. I move to amend by inserting after the word "each," in line 1332, these words: "for sixteen pasters and folders, at $480 each."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Patent Office, namely: For stationery for use of office, repair of model-cases, stationary portfolios for drawings, furniture and labor connected therewith, repairing, papering, painting, carpets, ice, advertising, books for library, moneys refunded, printing engraved patent-heads, international exchanges, plumbing, gas-fitting, extra labor on indexes and abstracts for annual reports, fitting rooms, temporary clerks, laborers, and other contingencies, $60,000; and no money appropriated by this paragraph shall be expended for advertising in newspapers published in the city of Washington other than the Patent Office Official Gazette.

Mr. HENDEE. I move pro forma to amend by striking out the last word. In the absence of my colleague [Mr. JOYCE] who left the letter which has been referred to to be read, I wish to do justice to the parties who wrote the letter. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] has called down upon this letter and its writers the condemnation or disapprobation of this House, which I think was unjust and unkind. Perhaps the gentleman said in the heat of debate what he would not have said in a less excited moment. I am personally acquainted with the gentlemen connected with the firm which has addressed this letter through my colleague to the House. They are known in my section as leading men, men of intelligence and integrity, men of the very highest character, and I believe respected throughout my State. They have couched their letter, which is simply a petition to this House, in the most respectful language. They merely say in this letter that the inventors should not be taxed higher than other classes for the general expenses of the Government; that we should employ a higher grade of men in these positions rather than put them up to the lowest bidder; that the employment of men of character and ability would prevent blunders which might cost more than the entire expenses of the Bureau; and that, as the Bureau is self-sustaining from fees paid by the people, there is no reason why competent men should not be employed to carry on its business.

Now we have always recognized the right of petition on the part of the citizens of the United States; and it seems to me that when persons come here in proper form, couching their request in proper and respectful language, it does not become any member of this House to say aught against the petition or the parties who may sign it.

I make these remarks merely because my friend and colleague [Mr. JOYCE] is not here to defend these gentlemen, who are his constituents, and because I do not mean to see any injustice done to any citizen of the State I have the honor in part to represent.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I did not mean to say anything against the writers of the letter; I was only criticising its principles.

Mr. HUBBELL. I offer the following amendment, which has been submitted to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] a member of the Committee on Appropriations:

Add after line 1350 the following: "The work to be done under the supervision of the Commissioner of Patents, in the city of Washington."

Mr. RANDALL. I supposed the whole of this work is done under the supervision of that officer. I see no objection to the amendment so far as I know. I should like to ask the gentleman whether they do any of it outside the office?

Mr. HUBBELL. It is let by contract. This includes back issues.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentlemen whether this amendment will break up the system of letting to the lowest bidder?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent, namely: Stationery, cases for library, library, current educational periodicals, cases for official records, other current publications, completing valuable sets of periodicals and publications in the library, telegraphing and expressage, collecting statistics, and writing and compiling matter for annual and special reports and editing and publishing circulars of information, fuel and lights, office furniture, contingencies, $1,210.

Mr. RANDALL. I move in lines 1376 and 1377 to strike out "contingencies, $1,210," and insert "$4,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of California, $2,700; and for the clerks in his office, $20,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out "20" and insert "10."

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by striking out "10" and insert "8," so that it will read "$8,000."

Mr. RANDALL. I accept that amendment to make it "$8,000."

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of Nebraska and Iowa, $2,000; and for the clerks in his office, $6,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there is no necessity for appropriating so large a sum as $6,000 for clerical hire in Nebraska; I move to reduce it to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Utah, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $4,500.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out "$4,500" and insert "$5,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona, $3,000; and for the clerks in his office, $6,500.

Mr. FORT. I move to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,500." Why should the surveyor-general of Arizona have $3,000 when other surveyors-general are only allowed twenty-five or twenty-seven hundred dollars?

Mr. RANDALL. Let the gentleman submit his amendment.

Mr. FORT. I have moved to make it $2,500.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Why in Wyoming do we allow $2,500, $2,700 in Montana, $2,800 in Dakota, and $3,000 in Arizona?

Mr. RANDALL. This was done after full consultation upon the facts we then had before us.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I can hardly understand why there should be this difference in salary.

Mr. RUSK. I suggest they all be put at the same figure.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I suggest the committee is very nearly right in this thing, excepting that Colorado and Wyoming should be grouped together, and Idaho, Arizona, and Montana should have the same salary provided for the surveyor-general. That is the way they should be grouped, arising from increased expense of living.

Mr. BENNETT. In Idaho, Arizona, and Montana living is higher.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope all these salaries will be put at the sum of $2,000. The surveys made last year of public lands amounted to 25,000,000 of acres all told, exclusive of railroad grants, while a little rising 3,000,000 acres were disposed of. The surveys in every State and Territory having public land are far beyond what is required by emigration and settlement. The clerical force can be largely reduced, as well as the salaries of the surveyors-general. I suggest these salaries be fixed at $2,000.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I object to going back.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; we can reach it at another time. I move the salary of the surveyor-general of Arizona be reduced from $3,000 to $2,000.

Mr. FORT. My amendment is $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest the gentleman from Illinois will say $2,000. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will yield the floor in the House to move to equalize all these salaries. It is manifest there is no business to be done in any of the States and Territories requiring so large a salary. I am surprised Delegates of Territories seek to keep up these salaries unnecessarily.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Is there any justice in making the salary of the surveyors-general greater than that of a territorial judge?

Mr. HOLMAN. None at all

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent this portion of the bill relating to surveyors-general in the States and Territories be passed over, and I will state why. Another committee of this House has in view a proposition whereby the work of the surveyors-general will be reduced in the various Territories, and at the same time less clerical force will be needed.

Mr. MAGINNIS. In what respect?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio will state the character of the bill. In addition, the Committee on Appropriations have in view a decided reduction in the appropriation for surveys of public lands that will permit a large reduction of expenditures. These facts have just come to the notice of the committee, or they would have been prepared with amendments on these various items.

Mr. WALLING. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Public Lands have under consideration a proposition to limit the surveys of public lands in the Territories. The information furnished them is of this character, that, extending perhaps from the one hundredth parallel to the Sierras, there is not more than 2 or 3 per cent. arable or pasture land. It is proposed that surveys be made by triangulation of that portion and to stop surveys by base lines and section and quarter sections, as now carried on, whereby a large portion of the present expense will be saved. While applicable to the valley of the Mississippi and the valleys of western rivers, the present system is not necessary in the portion of the Territories to which I have referred.

Mr. MAGINNIS. It is not likely we shall ever agree to any plan of that kind, and therefore it is not well to base legislation on any such hypothesis.

Mr. RANDALL. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. WELLS,] is prepared to submit the report of the committee of conference on the deficiency appropriation bill. I ask therefore unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be allowed to consider again the various paragraphs as to the salaries of surveyors-general and clerks in the Territories.

Mr. DUNNELL. And the States.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; and the States. This will give the committee an opportunity to consider this matter. If that unanimous consent is given, I will then move that the committee rise. We are within eight pages of the end of the bill, and I feel as if I now held it in my grasp.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the special order, being a bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I rise to make a privileged report. I present the report of the committee of conference on the deficiency appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered 14, 15, and 17, and that the House recede from their disagreement to the amendments numbered 3, 9, and 20, and agree to the same.

ERASTUS WELLS,
JOHN D. C. ATKINS,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

LOT M. MORRILL,
WM. B. ALLISON.
HENRY G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the amendments be read.

The Clerk read the amendments numbered 14, 15, and 17, from which it was recommended that the Senate should recede, as follows:

Fourteen. Page 8, after line 6, insert "to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for stone delivered under contract for the post-office building at Parkersburgh, West Virginia, if he shall find the same to be a lawful claim, $10,000."

Fifteen. Page 8, after line 6, insert, "to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the claim of A. N. McKimmon, $9."

Seventeen. Page 10, line 1, after "education" insert "exclusively."

The amendments numbered 3, 9, and 20, in regard to which it was recommended that the House should recede from their disagreement, and agree to the same, were read as follows:

Three. Page 2, after line 11, insert: "For the payment of mileage for actual travel only to Senators who took their seats at the session of the Senate convened on the 5th day of March, 1875, by proclamation of the President, and who were not members of the previous Congress, $6,366.

Nine. Page 5, strike out all after the word "held," in line 11, down to the end of line 13, to wit: "Provided, That all officers appointed by the President for the Territories shall be bona fide citizens of the Territories respectively for which they shall be appointed."

Twenty. Page 10, after line 19, insert: "For subsistence of Apache Indians at the southern Apache agency, New Mexico, $25,000: Provided, That the Indian agent located at said agency may, under instructions from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, exchange sugar belonging to said agency for beef or flour.

Mr. FORT. I think the House ought to adhere to their objection to amendment No. 9, striking out the proviso.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois call for a division?

Mr. HOLMAN. All that the House can do is to vote down, if that be thought proper, the report of the conference committee and call for another conference.

Mr. FORT. I am aware of that.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I move concurrence in the report of the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER TO PRINT.

On motion of Mr. WHITEHOUSE, by unanimous consent, it was ordered that three hundred additional copies be printed of the bill (H. R. No. 3162) for refunding the interest-bearing debt of the United States into United States consols having forty years to run and bearing a uniform rate of interest.

DETRITUS FROM HYDRAULIC MINES.

Mr. LUTTRELL, by unanimous consent, presented memorial and resolutions of the Legislature of the State of California, relative to the detritus discharged from hydraulic mines into the Sacramento and other streams; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I also ask unanimous consent that the memorial and resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection. They are as follows:

Memorial.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

First. Your memorialists of the Legislature of the State of California respectfully represent to your honorable body that the detritus discharged from the hydraulic mines located upon the headwaters of the Sacramento, Feather, Yuba, American, and Bear Rivers, and numerous other smaller streams, all of which flow into the Bay of San Francisco, is having the direct effect of filling up all of those streams with sand and mountain débris, until many of them have now reached their highest banks, thereby threatening the villages and towns located on or near them with inundation and destruction of life and property, as well as obstructing to a great extent the navigation of the Feather and Sacramento Rivers, upon which the inhabitants of the Sacramento Valley are principally dependent for cheap transportation.

Second. We would further respectfully represent that the discharge of this detritus is gradually filling up our magnificent bays and menacing the safety of the harbor and Bay of San Francisco. It has been estimated by one of our most accomplished engineers, T. J. Arnold, engineer of the State board of harbor commissioners, that the débris being washed into the bay is sufficient in quantity to cover annually one square mile to a depth of forty-one feet; and that it will take but fifteen years to fill Suisun Bay, but thirty-one years to complete the destruction of San Pablo Bay, after which the Bay of San Francisco proper is the only receptacle left for the entire débris washed from the mines. The above estimates are founded on the discharge of débris that is actually now occurring. When we consider the growing increase of hydraulic mining, we realize that the danger is more imminent and the destruction nearer at hand.

Third. We would further respectfully represent that some of the most beautiful and alluvial lands of the Upper Sacramento Valley have been and are being covered up with an unproductive mining débris, thereby destroying thousands of acres of arable lands and valuable property. There has already been destroyed upon the Sacramento, Feather, Yuba, Bear, and American Rivers, and other smaller streams, over seventy-five thousand acres of land, valued at over $6,000,000. The improvements on these were worth fully as much more, which would make a sum of over $12,000,000 worth of property which has thus been destroyed.

Fourth. We would further respectfully represent that the farmers in the locality of these streams have, for a number of years past, been building and constructing a succession of levees and embankments along the low lands adjacent to these streams, at a cost of more than $2,000,000, and that the inhabitants of Sacramento City have filled in and raised the best portion of said city to a height of fifteen feet, and have surrounded the entire city with an embankment of the same height. This work cost more than a million dollars. That the city of Marysville has expended thousands of dollars in the construction of a series of embankments, and that other towns and villages have and are expending vast sums of money to secure themselves from overflow and destruction, and while these efforts have thus far protected them, unless some decided steps are soon taken for their relief, it will be impossible to longer resist the encroachments of the water and débris, and destruction will inevitably follow.

Fifth. We would further respectfully represent that it is not the desire of your memorialists to infringe upon the rights of an interest so great and productive as that of mining. It is yet far from reaching its maturity; it is, in fact, but in its infancy. The improved appliances now in use, and the valuable improvements being made for mining purposes, cannot fail to increase its importance and materially add to the wealth of the State. But believing that no one interest should be fostered to the detriment and injury of another, and being of the opinion that some plan or plans can be devised by which relief and protection may be afforded to the one interest without serious damage to the other, we therefore pray that this subject may receive the attention which its importance demands: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the assembly, (the Senate concurring,) That our Senators in Congress are instructed, and our Representatives requested, first, to place this memorial before Congress and urge the immediate consideration of and the early action upon the matters therein embraced; second, to urge upon Congress the adoption of such measures as will result in the protection of our valley-lands, harbors, and bays from the serious injury being done to them by the discharge of detritus from hydraulic mines, and which, at the same time, will not have the effect of impairing or crippling the interests of hydraulic mining; third, to urge upon Congress the necessity of the United States Government sending to this coast one or more competent civil engineers for the purpose of collecting information as to the extent of hydraulic mining in the State; also, to ascertain, as accurately as may be, the amount of detritus annually discharged from hydraulic mines into the Sacramento, Feather, Yuba, Bear, American, and other rivers, and into the bays of this State; also, to inquire into the feasibility and probable cost of diverting and controlling said detritus so as to deposit the same upon swamp and overflowed lands, or upon the foot-hill lands, or retaining the same in the mountains, or to suggest any other plan or plans as will prevent injury to the valley-lands, rivers, or bays of the State, for the purpose of laying the same before Congress at a subsequent session.

Resolved, That his excellency Governor William Irwin be respectfully requested to forward without delay a copy of this memorial and these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

G. J. CARPENTER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JAMES A. JOHNSON,
President of the Senate.

(Indorsed:)
Assembly concurrent resolution No. 17. Passed the Assembly March 29, A.D. 1876.
E. S. CAYLAT,
Assistant Clerk of the Assembly.

Passed the Senate March 29, A. D. 1876.
E. L. CRAWFORD,
Assistant Secretary of the Senate.

This concurrent resolution was received by the governor this 30th day of March, 1876.
E. W. MASLIN,
Private Secretary of the Governor.

A true copy. Attest:
[SEAL.]
THOMAS BECK,
Secretary of State,

ACT OF JULY 28, 1866.

Mr. BANNING. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, required to inform this House what articles, if any, are furnished and sold to officers and enlisted men by the Commissary Department at cost price, as required by section 25 of the act approved July 28, 1866.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would suggest that the resolution should refer to the proper section of the Revised Statutes, and not to the act of 1866, which is no longer in force.

Mr. BANNING. The object of the resolution is to find out whether this law is still in force. That is the whole object of the resolution, and that is the reason why it is worded in the way it is.

There was no objection, and the resolution was adopted.

WEST POINT MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform this House, from information derived from the Superintendent of the Military Academy at West Point, as to the amount of post funds under his (the Superintendent's) control or the control of any other person, together with a detailed account of the various sources which go to make up the said post funds, and the purposes for which the same have been and are used; under what authority of law or regulation the same are collected and expended; whether any, and what, buildings have been erected from money so collected; the information asked to cover the period of five years last past.

JOHN WIGHTMAN.

Mr. JOHN REILLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3259) for the relief of John Wightman, a contractor for carrying the mails in Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. CASON. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and is hereby, instructed to report at as early a day as practicable a bill to repeal so much of the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, as provides for such resumption of specie payments on the 1st day of January, 1879.

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3260) to remove the disabilities of Lawrence S. Baker, of Tarborough, North Carolina; which received its several readings and was passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. LAPHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 107) providing for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States shall be proposed to the several States for adoption, and when the same shall have been ratified by the votes of the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, or by conventions thereof, as provided in article 5 of the Constitution, the same shall become a part of the Constitution of the United States.

ARTICLE —.

Whenever any appropriation bill shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate and shall be presented to the President for his approval, he may withhold his approval to any clause or clauses, or provision or provisions, in such bills and approve the remainder, and in such case he shall state his objections to the portions disapproved in the same manner as is provided in article 1, section 7, of the Constitution, and all provisions of said section as to bills not approved shall apply to the item or items so disapproved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was given as follows:

Mr. HEWITT, of New York, until Monday next.

Mr. HUBBELL, indefinitely, on account of a sore throat superinduced by the bad air of the Hall.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DOBBINS asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House for reference to the Senate Committee on Patents papers in the claim of A. B. Wilson, on which there had been no adverse report in the House.

MESSENGER TO BOARD OF IMPEACHMENT MANAGERS.

Mr. LORD, on behalf of the board of managers of impeachment, submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That a messenger be appointed for the managers to conduct the impeachment of William W. Belknap.

And then, on motion of Mr. COX, (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CAMPBELL: The petition of W. S. Brooks and 144 others, of Joliet, Illinois, against any change in existing tariff laws, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CONGER: Remonstrance of 241 workingmen and employés in the Wyandotte Iron-Works, against the passage of the proposed tariff bill, to the same committee.

By Mr. HARALSON: Papers relating to the petition of citizens of Mobile, Alabama, for compensation for the use of building of the medical college and the destruction of apparatus by the officers of the Freedmen's Bureau, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HARRISON: The petition of wholesale dealers in distilled spirits in the city of Chicago, Illinois, for the definition of the duties of officers of internal revenue and to further provide for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. HURD: The petition of George Wise and others, for the repeal of the resumption act, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. McDILL: The petition of W. W. Gardner and 10 other citizens of Avoca, Iowa, for legislation prohibiting the Government from manufacturing, selling, and printing envelopes, &c., to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McMAHON: The petition of Jeremiah Lorrain, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MEADE: The petition of cigar manufacturers of the city of New York, against the increase in tariff on tobacco, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of the New York and Virginia Steamship Company, for compensation for the loss of their vessels, the Jamestown and Yorktown, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PIPER: Concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of California, relative to destruction of arable lands by mining debris, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SAVAGE: The petition of James A. Conrey, to have the charge of desertion removed, to the Committee on War Claims.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COLUMBIA DEAF AND DUMB INSTITUTION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. EDMUNDS a director of the Columbia Institution for the Instruction of the Deaf and Dumb for and during the term of the Forty-fourth Congress.

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL AND LYING-IN ASYLUM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. SARGENT a director of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum for and during the term of the Forty-fourth Congress.

ANNUAL EXAMINATION AT WEST POINT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. CLAYTON and Mr. RANDOLPH visitors to attend the ensuing annual examination of cadets at West Point.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. PATTERSON to fill the vacancy in the Committee on Revolutionary Claims occasioned by the Senate relieving Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from further service on that committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2951) to provide for the separate entry of express packages contained in one importation.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3260) to remove the disabilities of Lawrence S. Baker, of Tarborough, North Carolina; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the deficiency bill, which has just been returned from the House to the Senate, make the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the Senate recede from their amendments numbered 14, 15, and 17, and that the House recede from their disagreement to the amendments numbered 3, 9, and 20, and agree to the same.

LOT M. MORRILL,
WM. B. ALLISON,
HENRY G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ERASTUS WELLS,
JOHN D. C. ATKINS,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The disagreement between the two Houses was on six amendments, which I will specify, so that the Senate may understand the report of the committee. On page 3 of the bill the House disagreed to the amendment for the payment of mileage to Senators, and in the conference the House recede from their disagreement and concur in the amendment. The House also recede from their disagreement and concur with the Senate in striking out this proviso of the House bill:

That all officers appointed by the President for the Territories shall be bona fide citizens of the Territories, respectively, for which they shall be appointed.

The House also recede from their disagreement to and concur with the Senate in the amendment appropriating $25,000 for subsistence of Apache Indians at the Southern Apache agency, New Mexico. The Senate recedes from its amendment on page 11 of the bill inserting:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for stone delivered under contract for the post-office building at Parkersburgh, West Virginia, if he shall find the same to be a lawful claim, $10,000.

And the Senate also recedes from its amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the claim of A. N. McKimmon, $9.

The Senate further recedes from its amendment striking out the word "exclusively" on page 13, line 307.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the effect of striking out "exclusively?"

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The intention of the Senate in that amendment was to confine the appropriation to the Bureau of Education, but upon further examination, the Senate amendment having limited the appropriation by the words "Bureau of Education," it was found that the word "exclusively" was not necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CONKLING presented a memorial of citizens of Oswego County, New York, remonstrating against the passage of any law granting an American register to foreign-built vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAVIS. I present a petition of the town authorities of Piedmont, West Virginia, praying compensation for the use of their town hall and market-house by the Government during the late war. The papers are in the War Department, and the petitioners further pray the committee to call for them and use them in the examination of their case. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition of a large number of citizens of this District, setting out that the firm of H. F. Turner & Co., organized for the removal of garbage, &c., have constructed on a Government reservation, located between G and H streets north and Delaware avenue and First street east, a large building as a depot for the storage of garbage, &c., while awaiting transportation from the city; that the said depot is in the midst of a densely populated section of the city, within one square of the Government Printing Office, in the immediate vicinity of Saint Aloysius' church, and but a few squares from the Capitol. The petition certifies that this is a great nuisance to the whole of that portion of the city, injurious to the public health, and injurious to the neighborhood; and they pray that it may be abated. They state that the parties who erected the building are not responsible, and that as it was erected with the assent of the Government on Government ground there is no proceeding at law by which the nuisance can be abated. They therefore pray the action of Congress to abate what they declare to be a great nuisance. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a petition of 1,769 soldiers and sailors, pensioners of the United States residing in Philadelphia, praying that there may be no change in the present method of paying pensions at specified localities throughout the country; which was referred to the Select Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.

He also presented the petition of W. B. Mann, John W. Forney, D.

M. Fox, and other citizens of Philadelphia, praying that an allowance be made to Mrs. Catharine T. Campbell on account of the shooting and killing of her son in 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OGLESBY presented a memorial of pensioners of Canton, Illinois, remonstrating against any change in the present mode of paying pensions at specified localities throughout the country; which was referred to the Select Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.

Mr. BOOTH presented a memorial of the Legislature of California, in favor of the immediate consideration of and early action upon the subject of an appropriation to protect the towns located upon the headwaters of the Sacramento, Feather, Yuba, American, and Bear Rivers from inundation; which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, presented a petition of citizens of Sumter County, Florida, praying the passage of an act granting the public lands within the State to Florida for purposes of internal improvement therein; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. KELLY presented the petition of R. P. Earhart, John Long, and other citizens of Oregon, praying the passage of Senate bill No. 454, for the relief of the sureties of J. W. P. Huntington, deceased, late superintendent of Indian affairs in Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARVEY presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, relating to the losses sustained by citizens of Kansas by the invasion of bands of guerrillas and marauders during the years 1861 to 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER presented a petition of Enoch Totten, administrator of the estate of William A. Lloyd, deceased, praying compensation for services rendered by Lloyd to the Government during the late war as a secret agent; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Bennett, of the city of New York, praying for arrears of pension from October 9, 1872, reported adversely thereon; and the committee was discharged from its further consideration.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Margaret Mills, of Westchester County, New York, praying for an increase of her pension, reported adversely thereon, and the committee was discharged from its further consideration.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Susan Ten Eyck Williamson, widow of the late Captain Charles L. Williamson, United States Navy, praying to be allowed arrears of pension, reported adversely thereon; and the committee was discharged from its further consideration.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1176) granting a pension to Francis Curran, Thirteenth Indiana Cavalry, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2464) granting a pension to Diana Breysacker, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2585) granting a pension to John Haley, late private in Company C, One hundred and thirtieth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am instructed by the Select Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service to report the correspondence of the committee with the heads of the several Executive Departments for the information of the Senate. It has already been printed.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1823) to change the name of the pleasure-yacht Ella to that of Myra, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1915) to change the name of the steamboat Robert Ross, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 278) to amend the pension laws respecting the pensions of imbeciles and inebriates, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Frank Evans, praying to be allowed arrears of pension, reported adversely thereon; and the committee was discharged from its further consideration.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Henry A. Frink, late major of the Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying to be allowed arrears of pension from August 15, 1865, to September 1, 1873, reported adversely thereon; and the committee was discharged from its further consideration.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 767) granting a pension to Theodore Gardner, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Eden H. Fisher, of Noble County, Indiana, praying to be allowed an increase of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOOTH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2310) granting a pension to Emanuel B. Herr, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2467) granting a pension to Sarah J. King, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Florence J. O'Sullivan, late captain Company D, Sixty-seventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, praying to be granted a pension from the 26th of June, 1865, to the 8th of December, 1873, reported adversely thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 318) granting a pension to Annie Farley, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of J. H. Glatts and other citizens of Delaware, praying for the continuance of the present law providing for the payment of pensions, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Select Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service; which was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. I am instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2463) granting a pension to Adam Smouse, to report it back and move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Commissioner of Pensions, as no application has been made to the Pension Bureau.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 784) for the relief of Enoch Totten, administrator of the estate of William A. Lloyd, deceased; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 785) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between Asia and the Pacific coast; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SIGNAL SERVICE CORPS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War communicate to the Senate the cost of the Signal Service Corps, giving a detailed statement of the cost of the different branches of that service, and from what appropriations such cost is paid, and his views of the expediency of transferring such service to the Treasury Department.

LEGAL TENDER OF SILVER COIN.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, presented an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 263) to amend the laws relating to legal tender of silver coin; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WAGON-ROADS IN OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 536. It is very brief and will take but a moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 536) granting the right of way through the public lands for wagon-roads over the Blue Mountains, in the State of Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that the wagon-road known as the Thomas and Ruckle road, running over the Blue Mountains, from the Umatilla River to Summerville, in Grand Ronde Valley, Oregon, and the wagon-road known as the Mecham road, running from Cayuse Station to Ora Dell, in that State, have been constructed and opened by private enterprise, running in part over lands belonging to the United States. The bill therefore grants the right of way, to the extent of thirty feet in width on each side of the center of these roads, through the public lands of the United States to the owner and owners of the roads, their successors and assigns. Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, and repeal the act at any time, having due regard to the rights of the owners.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know that I have any objection to the bill, but I should like to know who are referred to as the owners of the roads.

Mr. MITCHELL. The preamble states that. It says:

Whereas the wagon-road known as the Thomas and Ruckle road, running over the Blue Mountains.

The bill does not undertake to specify or designate who the present owners are, but simply provides that the right of way shall be granted to the present legal owners, "the owner and owners of the said roads, their successors and assigns."

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator whether it is a private road, or a public road belonging to the State or to the counties?

Mr. MITCHELL. The bill refers to two roads which were built by private enterprise and are owned by private parties now, as I understand. They built the roads without obtaining the right of way through the public lands of the United States; and this simply is an application to Congress for the right of way in so far as their roads run through the public lands of the United States. The bill is recommended unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands, having been considered by that committee, and there certainly can be no objection to it. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will not interpose an objection.

Mr. DAVIS. I have not objected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the bill be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know that I have any objection to the bill; but it appears singular to me that private individuals should own a road and want the Government to donate the land to them when perhaps the next day the road may be closed and be no longer open to the public. I ask the Senator whether there is any objection to an amendment saying "for public use" or "for the purpose of a road?"

Mr. MITCHELL. These roads were built years ago by private enterprise. They are not public roads. They were built by private enterprise as the preamble of the bill recites, and they are used by the public subject to toll. That is the fact. As it stands now, a pre-emption or a homestead claimant, or any person claiming any of the public lands, can settle on a section or quarter section of land lying across these roads, or one of them, and obstruct travel.

Mr. DAVIS. That being so, cannot the road be closed and the sixty feet on either side be used for private purposes? Will it not be a donation, in other words, of what is now a road used for public purposes across the public domain to private persons; and when, if they saw fit, they could close it at once?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not understand it so at all, Mr. President. It is simply a right of way to go through the public lands of the United States without interference on the part of the United States or without interference by any person claiming the public lands of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I would ask the Senator to so amend it as to say "for the use of roads."

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to that amendment. That is what it means now.

Mr. BOGY. Although I do not object to the bill of the Senator from Oregon, yet it seems to me to be entirely unncessary. As long as the lands are public lands, as a matter of course this is not necessary; but whenever they cease to be public lands the jurisdiction at once goes to the State authority, and there, through the Legislature or the county organizations, they can declare the roads to be public roads of the State of Oregon. It has not been the practice heretofore for Congress to pass laws of this kind. It seems to me a law of this character is entirely unnecessary. I will not object to the bill of the gentleman, but I see no necessity for it at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why, Mr. President, there have been a hundred bills of the same character passed through Congress granting the right of way to railroad companies and to wagon-road companies—any number of them. This is no new bill, no new proposition; it is simply in the line of any number of precedents.

Mr. BOGY. As far as railroads are concerned, of course a bill of this kind is an absolute necessity; but for an ordinary road it is not necessary, and it has not been the practice in my State, nor has it been the practice in the western country in the other land States.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg the Senator's pardon; it is necessary because pre-emption claimants may go and obstruct this road to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out the last clause, "having due regard to the rights of said owners."

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. There is an amendment now pending, offered by myself.

Mr. MITCHELL. "For the use of a road?"

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be made, if there be no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 1 the words "to be used as a public wagon-road."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to this amendment, and it is made. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock and thirty minutes having arrrived, the legislative and executive business of the Senate will be suspended and the Senate will now proceed, pursuant to order, to the consideration of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against W. W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. The Sergeant-at-Arms will make the opening proclamation.

The usual proclamation was made by the Sergeant-at Arms.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War. For convenience of reference the proceedings of the impeachment trial have been separated from the legislative proceedings of the Senate from day to day, and arranged consecutively in a department of the RECORD set apart for that purpose.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative and executive business.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate for the printing of forty-five hundred copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1873.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 522) to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1251) to exclude the State of Missouri from the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3264) to remove the political disabilities of C. H. Kennedy, of Virginia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 2951) to provide for the separate entry of packages contained in one importation; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That Captain William Williams have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONKLING. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-four minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and four minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 27, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. No. 2951) to provide for the separate entry of packages contained in one importation; when the Speaker signed the same.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER. The attention of the Chair is called to the fact by the Clerk of the House that, in the journalizing of the proceedings of the House on the first resolution passed in reference to the imprisonment of Mr. Kilbourn after the rejection of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] the Journal fails to state that the vote recurred upon the original resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. GLOVER,] which was agreed to.

The Chair asks that the Clerk be directed now to reform the Journal in that particular. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

TAX ON FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (H. R. No. 522) to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors, with a recommendation that the same be concurred in by the House.

The amendment of the Senate was to add to the bill the following:

And provided further, That nothing in this act shall have the effect to change the present rules of law respecting evidence in any prosecution or suit.

The amendment was concurred in.

NAVY-YARD IN BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That for the purpose of enabling the Committee of this House on Naval Affairs to discharge the duties imposed upon them by the House resolution instruct ing them to inquire into certian alleged abuses and frauds at the navy-yards of the United States, and the misapplication of appropriations made for the construction of eight vessels of war, authorized by act of Congress approved February 10, 1873, it is hereby directed that said committee, through the subcommittee appointed for that purpose, consisting of Messrs. WILLIS, LEWIS, HARRIS of Massachusetts, HAYS, and WITTHORNE, shall make said investigation as far as it relates to the Brooklyn navy-yard, Long Island, at the said yard and in the cities of New York and Brooklyn.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bill:

A bill (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

MINING LAWS.

Mr. TURNEY submitted the following report; which was read, considered, and adopted:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 1251) to exclude the State of Missouri from the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Add to said bill the following: "But all lands in said State shall be subject to disposal as agricultural lands."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JACOB TURNER,
RICHARD P. BLAND,
Managers on the part of the House.
A. A. SARGENT,
J. M. HARVEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

T. P. BLAIR.

Mr. MAISH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3261) for the relief of T. P. Blair, of Shippensburgh, Cumberland County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS ON ROLAND GRANT, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WIGGINTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3262) for the relief of settlers on the railroad lands within the limits of the Roland grant, in Stanislaus County, California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3263) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that this bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and made a special order for Tuesday next immediately after the reading of the Journal, and from day to day until disposed of. I give notice that I shall ask that the bill be left open to general debate for Tuesday, and that on the succeeding morning it be considered by paragraphs under the five-minute rule. I will state further in this connection that the Committee on Appropriations will in the mean time submit a report touching the principal subjects contained in the bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the gentleman will not attempt now to fix the length of time for general debate. I have never known that to be done on the presentation of an appropriation bill, but it has been made a special order for a given day, and when it is called up the gentleman in charge of it——

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman misunderstands my motion; it was simply to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole and make it a special order for Tuesday next. I stated that I would seek to confine general debate on the bill to that day.

Mr. HALE. Then the gentleman did not embody that in his motion?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly not. But I shall ask the House to proceed to the consideration of the bill by paragraphs on Wednesday.

Mr. HALE. My only point was not to have more in the motion than was customary.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague on the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] suggests that it now be ordered by unanimous consent—and I presume it will require that—that the general debate on this bill be confined to the subject-matter of the bill. I hope there will be unanimous consent for that; otherwise there may be no opportunity for general debate on the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. HALE. I must object; not because I want to debate the bill, for I may not say a word upon it. But I ask the gentleman not to attempt now to do what has never before been done, to fix the time to close general debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend can scarcely expect me to repeat that my motion is simply to make this bill a special order in the Committee of the Whole on Tuesday next. I stated that I hope the House will confine general debate to that day; I did not make that motion.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to embrace in his motion the order that general debate on this bill shall be confined to the subject-matter of the bill. Unless we do that, those gentlemen who may desire to debate the subject-matter of the bill might be cut off by other gentlemen occupying the time on other subjects.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] does not expect that any motion of that kind will give added strength to the rule of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. If that order be made, and gentlemen attempt to speak on matters extraneous to the bill, it would justify any member of the Committee on Appropriations raising the point of order that he was not addressing himself to the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Those matters which are fixed by the rules can, I take it, be left to the discretion and judgment of the gentleman whom the Speaker may place in the chair to preside over the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to say an additional word. Inasmuch as this bill involves two quite important changes, one in regard to the compensation of postmasters and the other a still more important amendment of the existing law as to the mode of fixing the compensation for transportation of the mails by railroad, I think it exceedingly important that debate on the bill should be confined to its provisions. I trust that every gentleman in the House will see the propriety of limiting the discussion to the subject-matter of the bill; and I must say that as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I will seek, so far as I may properly be able to do so, to have the debate confined to the bill itself on the day which is to be left open for general debate. I now call for a vote on my motion.

Mr. HALE. Pending that, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that a written report from the committee, designed to accompany this bill, be ordered to be printed.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

PRINTING OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

On motion of Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 772) to facilitate the printing of public documents was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PRINTING OF SMITHSONIAN REPORT.

On motion of Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, the concurrent resolution of the Senate for printing the report of the Smithsonian Institution for 1875 was taken from the Speaker's table, read, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PRINTING OF PROFESSOR HAYDEN'S REPORT.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House passed the joint resolution for printing a certain number of the report of Professor Hayden. I make this motion because I desire that the House shall concur in a Senate resolution making a similar provision. It appears that upon the same day that the House passed a joint resolution to print Professor Hayden's report the Senate passed a concurrent resolution authorizing the printing of the same number and providing for their disposition in a similar manner.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman from Ohio when that joint resolution was passed by the House?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. On the 20th of April.

The SPEAKER. It is now too late to make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. Then I ask that the Senate resolution on the same subject be taken from the Speaker's table and concurred in.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That there be printed 4,500 copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1873; 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 500 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I ask that the Clerk of the House be instructed to request the Senate to return to the House the joint resolution providing for the printing of Hayden's report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object. There is no necessity for such action; and if we adopt this practice it would require the return of a great many bills and joint resolutions. The Senate can lay our resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANCE] insist on the request?

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. Yes, sir; I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate, sitting as a court for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War, was ready to receive the managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

ELECTION CONTEST—SPENCER VS. MOREY.

Mr. HOUSE, from the Committee of Elections, submitted a report upon the contested-election case of Spencer vs. Morey, from the fifth congressional district of Louisiana, accompanied with the following resolutions; which were read, and, with the report, laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Resolved, That Frank Morey was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress from the fifth district of Louisiana.

Resolved, That William D. Spencer was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Forty-fourth Congress from the fifth district of Louisiana.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. On behalf of the minority of the Committee of Elections, I desire to present their views, accompanied with a resolution, and ask that the minority report and resolution be printed with the majority report.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

C. H. KENNEDY, OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. GOODE. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill (H. R. No. 3264) for the removal of the political disabilities of C. H. Kennedy, of Virginia, for passage at this time.

Mr. CONGER. Has any request been made for the removal of the disabilities in this case?

Mr. GOODE. A petition accompanies the bill and is filed with it.

There was no objection, and the bill was received, and read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) that all disabilities imposed upon C. H. Kennedy, of Virginia, under and by virtue of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States be removed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds concurring therein.

Mr. GOODE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SURVEY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. WHEELER. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report a resolution for the adoption of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of so much of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting estimates of appropriations required by the various Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and prior years, as relates to the surveying of the public lands and to Indian affairs, and that the same be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The resolution was adopted.

NAVY-YARD INVESTIGATIONS, ETC.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask unanimous consent again to present a resolution from the Committee on Naval Affairs for the printing of certain testimony taken by that committee in its investigations ordered by the House. The objection made heretofore by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] has been provided against by the insertion of the words "proof taken during the session;" and in that shape it is acceptable, I am informed, to both sides of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, who were directed by House resolution No. ——, introduced by Hon. Mr. GOODE, and adopted by the House January 15, 1876, and by House resolution No. ——, introduced by Hon. Mr. MORRISON, and adopted by the House January 14, 1876, to make inquiry in regard to certain matters embraced and set forth in said resolutions, beg leave to report that they have taken the testimony of sundry persons, together with certain documentary proof in response to said directions, which they herewith submit as a part of their report, and ask the order of the House that the same may be printed and re-referred to said committee. The committee further ask, inasmuch as they have not completed the inquiry directed to be made by the House in the adoption of the resolutions aforesaid, that the further order of the House be that such other testimony as may be by them taken in pursuance of the direction of said resolutions be likewise printed and recommitted to them.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I modify that resolution so as to provide for proof taken during the session.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee whether he has any objection to the words in reference to subsequent testimony to be taken "to be printed so far as practicable as fast as taken," so that the committee may not have to wait until the session is closed.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have no objection, that really being the purpose of the committee.

Mr. HALE. Let the Clerk insert those words.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Certainly; I accept them as a modification of the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee think the public interest requires the publication of all this testimony?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I think so, sir. One part of the proof is so closely interwoven with the other that we must present it all together in order to apprehend whatever action may be reached by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HOLMAN. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Tennessee does not object, that a question involving the printing of large bodies of manuscript ought to go to the Committee on Printing. I submit the committee taking the testimony would be the most competent judge of the necessities of printing. It is manifest, however, that large bodies of manuscript will come before the various committees of the House for publication.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests, in order that the amendment of the gentleman from Maine which was accepted by the gentleman from Tennessee may be carried out, that there be added at the end of the resolution the words "as soon as practicable after the same is taken," so it will require the printing of all subsequent testimony be made that way.

Mr. HALE. Let those words be added.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I accept the modification of the resolution.

Mr. HALE. I suggest the gentleman from Indiana will not interpose any objection to the printing of any and all of this testimony. It is the only way members of the House can arrive at any conclusion upon the vast mass of matter before that committee. Much of it has been taken in secret, and the only way we can reach it and know what has been before the committee is to have every word of the testimony printed. I want to say here to the other side of the House, in reference to these numerous investigations, I shall insist upon the printing of the testimony which has been taken, of which we know little or nothing. We shall insist upon the printing of all the testimony taken in these various investigations, so we may get at it. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. My suggestion was as to the mere question of expense. There is no necessity of involving the Government in any unnecessary expense for any partisan purpose. For myself, I will not be a party to the publication of any document for a partisan purpose. It is quite apparent the committees making these investigations are the best judges of the propriety of the publication of the testimony. Of course it would be impossible for one not familiar with investigations to raise objection.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman from Indiana consent himself to have anybody pick and cull testimony which shall be printed from any of these committees of investigation, when most of the testimony has been taken in secret?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no! If it is to be printed at all, the whole of it should be.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to say on behalf of the republican members of the committee, that much of the testimony has been taken by subcommittees. Some of it has not been read by all the members of the committee. It cannot be read by the members of the committee themselves until it shall be in print, and it would be impossible for the committee to make an intelligent report on this testimony unless it be all before them. I trust no member of the House will object to printing the whole of the testimony.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand this is to be printed and recommitted to the committee. If so, they can revise it if necessary and strike out the portions not necessary to be printed as part of their report.

Mr. HALE. O, no! We do not want them to revise or strike out anything.

Mr. KELLEY. I understand that this is an order to print the evidence, not for the use of the House, but for the committee.

Mr. HALE. I object to anybody at any stage picking over or culling this testimony.

Mr. KELLEY. That is what I want to be determined now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that the printing of testimony and the recommittal of it leaves it fully in possession of the whole House as well as of the committee, and that the committee will have no control of it thereafter.

Mr. KELLEY. My apprehension of it was otherwise.

Mr. BANKS. What the Chair has stated is perfectly right and according to the uniform usage.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As I understand it the question now is whether any objection is made to the printing of this testimony without its being read. When the question was formerly before the House one gentleman insisted on its being read before it was printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman that it has been suggested by a member of the committee that portions of this testimony have been taken by subcommittees; so that it has not yet been practicable for all the members of the committee to read the testimony.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think no committee should bring before the House matter to be printed and spread broadcast over the country before they as a committee have determined upon it. If once printed it will be no longer under their control, but will have all gone to the country, whether relevant or not, whether right or wrong. I object to this being printed until the committee as a committee report in favor of having it done.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. They have so reported.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HARRIS] tells us that a good deal of this testimony has been taken by subcommittees, and that the committee as a committee do not know what it contains.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Each member of the committee is not familiar with the details of what the various subcommittees have done, but the general results reached by the subcommittees are understood by the committee. Of course it is important that each member of the committee before he pronounces final judgment should have an opportunity of reading the testimony. The full committee have not had that opportunity. The subcommittees have taken testimony at different points, and the committee have instructed me unanimously that this report be made to the House and that the House be asked to direct the printing of the testimony.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then when we print this it is the report of the committee whether they know anything about it as a committee or not. A good deal of testimony, I understand, has been taken by subcommittees, which the general committee has not scanned and resolved to have printed. I object therefore to the printing.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BANKS. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that this is not the report of the committee; it is the report of testimony which every member of the House has a right to see.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I raise the point of order that we have the right to have it read before it is ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. This is not the report of the committee. It is a report of a part of its work which the committee desire to have printed, so that they may make a report to the House and that the House itself may consider it.

Mr. DANFORD. I wish to say to my friend from Iowa that the committee never can make a report until this testimony is printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But it must be evident to the Chair and to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DANFORD] and to the whole House that when this is printed once it will never be printed again and that we will have a mass of printed testimony as the report of that committee in regard to which the committee themselves cannot tell what it is. And that this House should order to be printed what is not the deliberate report of the committee I think is very bad practice. That is the point I make.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to say, for the information of the gentleman from Iowa, that this committee has been at work industriously since the commencement of the session, taking evidence almost daily in different cities of the East and in navy-yards by subcommittees. When we get all the testimony together we shall be able upon it to make a report. For each member of the committee to undertake to read the testimony in manuscript is impossible. No report therefore can be made by this committee until the testimony is in print.

As to the point of the gentleman from Iowa, that this mass of testimony will be in print and spread broadcast over the country, I ask what difference will that make? The testimony must be printed and must be spread before the country, every word of it. No gentleman in this House will consent, I take it, to have the testimony garbled or to have any portion of it suppressed. We have been charged with the duty of making this investigation. We are ready to report progress by submitting the testimony we have taken. And will the gentleman from Iowa, will any man in this House wish to suppress the voice of the committee, as will be the result if they are prevented from making a report on the printed testimony?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No, sir; I do not want to suppress anything; but this is the first time in ten years of legislative experience that I have ever heard of the report of a committee being printed that is not the report of the committee, but what has been gathered up by subcommittees, and is not understood by the entire committee. However, I withdraw my objection at the request of my colleagues.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENGINEER CORPS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report the present force of the United States Engineer Corps, the number of officers of said corps on active duty and where stationed, the general character of the public works upon which they are employed, and whether any and what officers of said corps have been or now are engaged, with or without the permission of the Department, in the performance of any duties upon any governmental, State, territorial, municipal, corporate, or private works similar to those which the civil engineers of this country perform.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from New York will also add an inquiry about how many persons are now employed from civil life on business connected with the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I suggest the addition of the following words: "and also the number of persons employed from civil life as engineers in the Engineer Corps of the Army."

Mr. RANDALL. Put in after the word "engineers" "and other employés." There are quite a number of persons I understand employed by the Engineer Corps who are not engineers, but clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will add the words "and other employés" after the word "engineers."

Mr. COX. I accept those modifications.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. COX in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. On yesterday I asked that the paragraphs relating to surveyors-general and their clerks be passed over for the present with the purpose of having the Committee on Appropriations consider that subject in view of information which I had as to the action of another committee of the House—the Committee on Public Lands. This morning we have had the subject under consideration, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was directed by the committee to offer some amendments which the committee deem proper, and I therefore ask that we commence the consideration of the bill with the surveyors-general.

Mr. WALLING. With the permission of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I desire to make an explanation in regard to that matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I am quite desirous of hearing it.

Mr. WALLING. The Committee on Public Lands this morning had this matter under further consideration, and they have concluded to invite further information on this subject from Colonel Wheeler, of the Army of the United States, Professor Hayden, and Professor Howell, who have referred to this matter extensively in their reports, in order that the committee may obtain the necessary information, if possible, to perfect a bill for the survey of the public lands. I suggest, therefore, that this portion of the appropriation bill be passed over at this time, and if such legislation should not be perfected, as the committee think now it can be, the appropriations for these purposes can be considered in connection with the appropriations for the surveys of the Territories. I make that suggestion to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's proposition, if I understand it rightly, would result in striking out altogether that portion of the bill which relates to surveyors-general, and to bring it into the sundry civil bill.

Mr. WALLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I am not authorized either to accept that suggestion or to reject it.

Mr. HOLMAN. If that motion is made, and I presume it is in order, I, acting for myself only as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, should regard it with a good deal of favor.

Mr. WALLING. Then I make the motion to strike out all that part of the bill in relation to surveyors-general and their clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amount that should be appropriated for clerks in the surveyors-general's offices will almost entirely depend upon the amount appropriated for the surveys of public lands in the States and Territories. While the Committee on Appropriations has not considered the subject at all, I think it is a subject well worthy of consideration, and for one I shall vote for the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to it as a member of the committee, but of course the committee not having instructed me, I cannot accept it.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I hope the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] will prevail.

Mr. WALLING. I think it will be conducive to the interests of the Territories; we do not desire to do them any wrong.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations this morning made considerable reductions in these appropriations.

Mr. MAGINNIS. There is no doubt that if we quit the present system of surveys and triangulate the Territories from the mountain-tops, according to the suggestion of Professor Hayden, the work could be done much cheaper. I understand that the matter is only to be postponed for consideration in the sundry civil bill.

The question was taken on Mr. WALLING'S motion to strike out all that part of the bill relating to surveyors-general and their clerks, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

For compensation of the Postmaster-General, $8,000; three Assistant Postmasters-General, at $3,150 each; superintendent of money-order system, $2,700; superintendent of foreign mails, $2,700; topographer, $2,250; chief of division for the office of mail depredations, $1,800; chief of division of dead-letters, $2,250; chief of division of postal stamps, $2,250; additional to the clerk who may be disbursing officer, $200; chief clerk to the Postmaster-General, $2,000; one chief clerk to each Assistant Postmaster-General, at $1,800 each; superintendent of blank agency, $1,620; three assistants, at $1,200 each; one assistant at $900; one stenographer, at $1,600; fifteen clerks of class four; sixty-one clerks of class three; forty-eight clerks of class two; sixty clerks of class one; fifty-seven female clerks, at $900 each; one messenger of the Postmaster-General, $900; one messenger to each Assistant Postmaster-General, at $840 each; three assistant messengers, at $720 each; seven watchmen and fifteen laborers; one engineer, $1,440; one assistant engineer, $1,000; one superintendent of the building, who shall be a carpenter, $1,252; one assistant carpenter, $1,000; one fireman and blacksmith, $900; one fireman and steam-fitter, at $900; three female laborers, at $480 each; and for temporary clerks, $8,000; making, in all, $382,122.

Mr. STONE. I move to substitute for the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of the Postmaster-General, $8,000; three Assistant Postmasters-General, at $3,150 each; superintendent of money-order system, $3,000; superintendent of foreign mails, $2,700; topographer, $2,000; chief of division for the office of mail depredations, $2,000; chief of division of dead-letters, $2,000; chief of division of postal stamps, $2,000; chief clerk to the Postmaster-General, who shall be superintendent of the building, $2,200; three chief clerks to the Assistant Postmasters-General, $2,000 each; chief clerk to the superintendent of money-order system, $2,000; principal clerk in charge of division of mail equipment, $1,800; principal clerk of inspection division and contract office, $1,800; principal clerk of finance division, who shall be disbursing officer, $2,000; chief of division of free delivery, $1,800; superintendent of blank agency, $1,620; assistant superintendent of blank agency, $1,450; three assistants, at $1,200 each; two assistants of blank agency, at $900 each; one stenographer, at $1,600; twelve clerks of class four; sixty-one clerks of class three; forty-eight clerks of class two; sixty clerks of class one; fifty-seven female clerks, at $900 each; one messenger of the Postmaster-General, $900; three messengers to Assistant Postmasters-General, at $840 each; three assistant messengers, at $720 each; seven watchmen, $720 each; and twenty laborers, $720 each; one engineer, $1,440; one assistant engineer, $1,000; one carpenter, $1,200; one assistant carpenter, $1,000; one fireman, who shall be a blacksmith, $900; one fireman, who shall be a steam-fitter, $900; three female laborers, at $480 each; and for temporary clerks, $8,000; making, in all, $393,070.

Mr. STONE. The bill of last session, making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, made provision for this Post-Office Department for three hundred and fifty-nine employés of all classes, at a total cost of $473,518.66. The paragraph now under consideration, as reported from the Committee on Appropriations of this Congress, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, provides for two hundred and ninety-nine employés of all classes in the Post-Office Department, at an aggregate cost of $382,122; or a reduction of sixty employés, and of $91,396.66 from the bill of last session. The amendment which I have proposed provides for three hundred and eight employés at an expenditure of $393,070; or a reduction from the bill of last year of fifty-one employés and $81,448.66 of expenditure, and an increase over the bill now under consideration of nine employés and $10,948 of expenditure. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a communication addressed to me by the Postmaster-General.

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., March 16, 1876.

SIR: I herewith return your proposed amendment to so much of the executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation bill of the House of Representatives as relates to the personnel of the Post-Office Department, with the suggestion that the amendment would be an improvement on the original text, but that neither of them would enable the Post-Office Department to properly conduct its business. If the clerical force of the Department shall be cut down, as indicated by either the original bill or the amendment, much important work will necessarily have to be omitted. The growth of this Department from year to year is such as to really require a corresponding increase in the clerical force, but such increase, out of motives of economy, was not asked for to any extent in its last estimates.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

MARSHALL JEWELL,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. W. H. STONE,
Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department,
House of Representatives.

Mr. STONE. My amendment provides for an increase of clerks, as follows: A principal clerk of mail equipment, a principal clerk of contract office, a principal clerk of finance division, and a chief of division of free delivery. It proposes a reduction of five clerks of class four, of seven clerks of class three, five clerks of class two, and seventeen clerks of class one, as now authorized by law. There are now employed five assistant messengers for the Assistant Postmasters-General, and my amendment, as well as this bill, proposes to reduce the number to three. There are twenty-seven laborers now employed, and my amendment reduces the number to twenty. I believe the force given by my amendment, as it is arranged, will enable the Postmaster-General to keep up the work of his Department as well as it is now done.

Mr. O'NEILL. Is the Postmaster-General satisfied with the amendment proposed by the gentleman?

Mr. STONE. He is not satisfied. He wants more clerks, as the gentleman will observe by reference to his letter, but prefers the amendment to the paragraph proposed by the committee.

Mr. O'NEILL. One other question. Is the Committee on Appropriations willing to accept the amendment?

Mr. STONE. I have given much thought and attention to this subject for three or four months and have carefully examined each division of the Post-Office Department, and I am satisfied that with the force provided for in the amendment the Department will not in any manner be crippled in its operations.

Mr. RANDALL. And in addition the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] is the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department.

Mr. O'NEILL. I understand the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has taken great interest in this subject, and his position brings him into close connection with the Post-Office Department. But I want to know (and I presume the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] will tell us directly) whether, after the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department have gone through all the divisions of the Department with a view to cutting expenses down below the democratic scale so often announced here, the Committee on Appropriations is now willing to take the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] in lieu of this paragraph of their bill. This amendment does not limit the cutting down to 10 per cent. of salaries and 20 per cent. of force, which the committee informed us was the rule they had adopted.

To illustrate: In the bill before us the chief of division of mail depredations is cut down to $1,800, the chief of dead letter division to $2,250, the chief of the division of postal stamps the same. The present salary of the chiefs of the two last-mentioned divisions is $2,500 a year each, and the reduction in these latter cases is 10 per cent. I do not recollect what is the present salary of the chief of division of mail depredations.

Mr. STONE. It is $2,500 a year.

Mr. O'NEILL. His salary is cut down to $1,800, which is much more than 10 per cent. I have had no wish to force myself unnecessarily into the debate on this bill; but I must say that this is a very great departure from what we were told was the rule adopted by the Committee on Appropriations, to reduce salaries 10 per cent. They propose now, if they accept this amendment in this most important Department of the Government, one that is so important to more than forty millions of people, where the labor of the Department is performed most carefully and efficiently, to strike down the salaries, in some instances 20 and more per cent., and leave the employés underpaid and with the work of the Department increasing every day and their individual expenses remaining the same.

I am opposed as a general thing to reducing salaries of efficient officials. I am opposed especially to cutting down the salaries of clerks. What would be the situation of members of this House but for the information that we are getting every day from the Departments—information which comes almost directly from the clerks in them, who labor intelligently to furnish us answers to our calls upon them, so that we may know how to perform our duties. Yet with all the information we are getting from those sources, we are not appreciating their efforts, but are depressing the pay and depressing the employés. In my opinion, this is only in accordance with the whole history of the policy of the democratic party whenever it has been in power: the policy of depressing the poor. No different policy has ever been exercised by that party when in power; and you are carrying it out when you take 10 per cent. and more from the salaries of clerks in the several classes who are getting but $1,400, $1,600, $1,800, &c. By such a reduction you are taking the bread and butter out of their mouths and impoverishing their families.

Mr. RANDALL. We propose to amend the bill so that the bread and butter shall go into their mouths instead of going into the pockets of politicians.

Mr. O'NEILL. Well, Mr. Chairman, when the democratic party was in power the money which ostensibly went to their employés failed in large part to go into their pockets. It was exacted from them by the democratic leaders to aid them in their campaigns. I do not mean to say that it went into the individual pockets of those leaders, but the employés never realized anything like their salary and pay, whatever the rate may have been.

The point I insist upon is that the members of this House are directly dependent upon the clerks in the Departments for the information they are obtaining every day, whereby they are enabled to discharge their duties for the benefit of the people who send us here; and I am opposed to striking at those clerks. The pay is no greater than the services rendered are worth.

I wish to make one further remark, because I may not have an opportunity to speak again on this bill. If this Government is really in financial extremity, I have no doubt that every American citizen, whether in private life or public office, would be willing to contribute somewhat from his earnings to help it. But when you undertake to make a 10-per-cent. reduction upon the salaries of clerks who are receiving but $1,400 a year, and from that to $1,800 and upward, you strike a blow which I believe is too heavy for these men to bear. Especially is it so with those who are in the class receiving the lower amounts of salaries referred to.

I want to know whether the Committee on Appropriations is now ready to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RANDALL. I will answer that the Committee on Appropriations are always glad to have the suggestions of members of the House on subjects of this sort. Here is a gentleman [Mr. STONE] who, in pursuance of his duty as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, has been through all these Bureaus carefully; and of course we must accord great weight to the statements of such a gentleman, because the Committee on Appropriations, in going over the entire field, have of course found it a physical and mental impossibility to give to the Post-Office Department that special scrutiny and examination which have been given to it by the committee having that subject particularly under consideration. Now as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I am disposed not only to listen with due consideration to suggestions from such a source, but to accept the conclusions of such a committee.

Mr. MILLER. I have great respect for the opinion of the gentleman from Missouri who has examined this subject; but I suppose that the Postmaster-General must have some knowledge of the Department which he is managing, and managing I believe, in the opinion of everybody, with perfect honesty and great efficiency. Now I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether the committee have inquired of the Postmaster-General as to the force which he thinks necessary to administer properly his Department?

Mr. RANDALL. I take it that the Postmaster-General has expressed his opinion in the letter which has been read; and if that is not an acquiescence in this amendment, it is surely not a remonstrance against it.

Mr. FOSTER. If it is not a remonstrance, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. MILLER. I presume the Postmaster-General was asked whether he preferred the amendment to the original bill, and he answers that he prefers the amendment; but at the same time, as I understand, he states that neither proposition will supply sufficient force to administer properly the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, the truth is that this Department was cut down very little comparatively. In respect to these reductions, it stands about on an equality with the Pension Bureau, the Land Office, and to some extent the Patent Office. I think gentlemen will see that the percentage of reduction proposed in the Post-Office Department is less than that we have made in most of the other Departments, for the reason that the business of the Post-Office Department is increasing from year to year. The committee took that fact into consideration in making their reductions, and made an exception from the general rule of 20 per cent. reduction in numerical force.

Mr. MILLER. The Postmaster-General thinks that as the business is increasing, the Department will really require more force for the next year than for the last.

Mr. RANDALL. Not relatively. We have allowed $10,000 in addition for temporary clerks.

Mr. STONE. Let me respond. If gentlemen of the House observed the reading of the amendment I submitted, they will have noticed it arranges the employés differently from the printed bill and equalizes salaries, putting the heads of divisions all at the same figure. The chief of the division of mail depredation is now getting $2,500, the chief of the division of dead letters $2,500, and the chief of the division of postage-stamps $2,500. A few years age, as I am informed, they were only getting $1,200, while the heads of divisions were then getting $2,000. I have placed them all at the same salary.

The Postmaster-General, so far as I am informed, is pleased with the classification, but wants more clerks to do the work. The Committee on Appropriations fixed the number of clerks. I have increased the number nine over the number proposed by the committee. I have not heard one of the gentlemen holding the positions who is displeased with my arrangement of their salaries. The only complaint being from the Postmaster-General, who complains he is not allowed clerks enough. Of course this House will judge whether he has or not.

As I have said before, he has employed clerks of class one, seventy-seven, and the committee make a reduction of seventeen; of class two, fifty-three, and the committee make a reduction of five; of class three, sixty-eight, the committee make a reduction of seven; of class four, seventeen, the committee make a reduction of five.

Mr. RANDALL. No, they make no change.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the facts will not bear the chairman out fully in his statement that the committee treated the Department with unusual kindness.

Mr. RANDALL. I spoke of the subcommittee.

Mr. FOSTER. I speak of the Committee on Appropriations. The present number is three hundred and seventy-five employés. The committee give them two hundred and ninety-eight.

Mr. STONE. And my amendment increases the number to three hundred and nine.

Mr. FOSTER. Your amendment gives them three hundred and nine.

Mr. STONE. Yes; three hundred and nine.

Mr. FOSTER. I am speaking, however, of what the committee have given the Department.

Mr. STONE. There are three hundred and fifty-nine employés in that Department now.

Mr. FOSTER. I have it three hundred and seventy-five.

Mr. STONE. That is wrong. I got it from the appropriation bill itself.

Mr. FOSTER. Their reduction is after all about 20 per cent. of the force of a Department which is increasing at the rate of 8 per cent. a year. The present Postmaster-General all concede to be a very able business man and a gentleman who is running this Department with unusual success, and, as my friend from New York says, his statement ought to weigh something with the House. I concede the arrangement proposed by the gentleman from Missouri is a vast improvement on the arrangement of the Appropriation Committee, but I submit the force is too small to successfully run that Department. I want to make that statement. It is due to the Department it should be made. I have nothing further to say about it.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask the gentleman from Missouri to let me ask another question for information. I understand by his amendment he increases the force nine over the force in the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations. I suppose that is done by cutting down the salaries of those in position below the 10 per cent. reduction.

Mr. STONE. It is not. From the statement I made the gentleman will see I increase the amount of the appropriation $10,948.

Mr. O'NEILL. The amount of the whole expenditure?

Mr. STONE. I give to each chief of division a principal clerk, who, in the absence of the chief, may perform his duties, which is not provided for in the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL. But at the same time cutting down the salaries of the others?

Mr. STONE. I only equalize the salaries of the superintendents with that of the chiefs of division, that they may get the same compensation as chiefs of division.

Mr. O'NEILL. In some cases the duties of superintendents are greater and more responsible than those of chiefs of division.

Mr. STONE. The chief of the dead-letter office gets $2,500, while the head of his division is getting but $2,000. My amendment equalizes these salaries, which I think is but just and right.

Mr. O'NEILL. The chief of the dead-letter division of the Post-Office Department has more to do than the chief of any other division in that Department.

Mr. STONE. Let me say to the gentleman, only a few years ago the head of that division was getting but $1,200, and his pay has gradually crept up to $2,500, and $500 more than the chief of the division.

Mr. O'NEILL. It is because the work has been increased so much.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to inquire about the blank agency. What force does your bill give it?

Mr. STONE. One superintendent of the blank agency and six assistants.

Mr. FOSTER. The force now is ten.

Mr. STONE. No; eight.

Mr. FOSTER. But two are detailed.

Mr. STONE. Is there anything in the appropriation bill preventing the Postmaster-General detailing any one of his clerks to assist the chiefs of divisions?

Mr. FOSTER. I think we ought to appropriate, instead of allowing a detail to be made, if we know it. I am informed by the head of division these ten men work seven and a half hours a day.

Mr. STONE. There are only eight of them.

Mr. FOSTER. But two are detailed.

Mr. STONE. Then they can be detailed from the force provided for in the proposed amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to show the House what is the reduction in the number of clerks here as proposed by the committee. There is a reduction of two in the number of clerks of class four: from seventeen to fifteen. There is a reduction of seven in clerks of class three: from sixty-eight to sixty-one. There is a reduction of four in clerks of class two: from fifty-two to forty-eight. There is a reduction of ten in clerks of class one: from seventy to sixty. The total reduction is twenty-three. We have left all the fifty-seven female clerks without any reduction, at $900 each. It will thus be seen that the reduction in the four classes of clerks is only 12 per cent. instead of 20.

The question being taken on Mr. STONE'S amendment, it was agreed to.

The Clerk commenced reading the next paragraph.

Mr. FORT. I have another amendment to offer before we pass from the paragraph which has just been under consideration. I offer the following amendment:

In line 1462, strike out "$8,000" and insert "$20,000."

This will appropriate for temporary clerks $20,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. O, no!

Mr. FORT. The gentleman says "O, no." I know there are some gentlemen on this floor who have spasms of economy.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not a spasm; it is continuous.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had a spasm of extravagance not many years ago, just after the presidential election; now he is suffering dreadfully from a fit of economy.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to going back. I will not allow the gentleman to go back to enable him to address such language to me.

Mr. FORT. I now want to get at this thing seriously. What I said in reference to the gentleman from Pennsylvania was by way of pleasantry.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know whether it is pleasantry or not; but, as I said before, I wish people who want to be rude would choose some other place for it than this House.

Mr. FORT. I have no desire to be rude to the gentleman.

In reference to the amendment I have offered I have only this to say, that I am in favor of reduction in the Post-Office Department wherever it can be properly applied. But, in my judgment, the Committee on Appropriations, in endeavoring to economize, have overdone it in this matter of the reduction of clerks. They have stricken off the list of clerks in that Department more than the Department can reasonably bear.

In the district which I represent I have been endeavoring to get a post-office established, a post-office at a railroad-station where the cars stop, where there would be no additional expense in the world except that which is incident upon keeping the accounts in the Department. I am advised by the Department that they have several hundred applications there now pending for the establishment of post-offices, and they cannot grant them because the Committee on Appropriations propose to cut off their clerical force to such a degree that they cannot possibly conduct the business of the Department if these additional post-offices are established. It is not proposed to add any new route. It is simply proposed to give a railroad station the privileges of a post-office. And I think it is very reasonable that the demand of the people of that locality for this privilege should be complied with. Now, sir, if $20,000 is allowed for temporary clerks, it will give the Postmaster-General, if he requires the services of these clerks, the means to pay them. If he does not require them, I take it there is no danger in the world that he will be inclined to employ them. It is appropriating this money to be used simply as it is needed. If it is not needed, it will not be used.

So far as the question of economy is concerned, I go as far as he who goes farthest in this direction. But certainly it seems to me we should have some respect to what is necessary for giving effect to the rights of the people in this Department, which goes home to every man of all political parties, of all conditions, in all parts of the country. It is rapidly increasing, and its demands upon us should be respected. I do not propose to raise the salary of anybody or to add to the number of permanent clerks. I simply desire to provide that the Postmaster-General, if he requires the assistance of temporary clerks, shall have it to the extent of $20,000. This certainly is no very great sum to be placed at the disposal of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment proposes to give $20,000 for temporary clerks. The estimate of the Department is $10,000; and the committee have recommended $8,000.

Mr. FORT. Will the gentleman allow me to say that the Department may have estimated for $10,000 only; but at the same time they asked that they might have other permanent clerks. Now, if you take away their permanent clerks that they asked for, it is only reasonable to give them an appropriation for temporary clerks.

Mr. RANDALL. I am reminded that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] gives $10,000, just the amount asked for by the Department.

The question being taken on Mr. FORT'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department: For stationery; fuel for the General Post-Office building, including the Auditor's Office; for gas; plumbing and gas-fixtures; telegraphing; painting; carpets; furniture; keeping of horses and repair of wagons and harness; hardware; and for rent of house No. 915 E street northwest; and for miscellaneous items, $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph just read, and insert as follows:

For contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department: For stationery, $10,000; fuel for the General Post-Office building, including the Auditor's Office, $7,000; for gas, $4,500; plumbing and gas-fixtures, $1,500; telegraphing, $5,000; painting, $2,500; carpets, $3,000; furniture, $1,000; keeping of horses and repair of wagons and harness, $1,200; hardware, $1,000; and for rent of house No. 915 E street northwest, $1,800; and for miscellaneous items, $9,000; making, in all $47,500.

Mr. FOSTER. This increases the appropriation made by the bill $7,500. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department has carefully investigated this matter, and that he is of opinion that it is the lowest possible amount that will answer for the running of the Department for this purpose. I ask him to make his statement to the House.

Mr. STONE. On the 28th of February I received a letter from the present superintendent of the Post-Office Department giving me in detail his estimates for the contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department, amounting to $80,900. I carefully reviewed that estimate and found that a large portion of it was to be expended in the basement of the building, which has not yet been completed, and that amount will not necessarily be required unless the basement is completed. The appropriation for the completion of the basement will undoubtedly be included in the sundry civil appropriation bill. The amount appropriated for that purpose heretofore has been exhausted, but the superintendent in his estimates takes it for granted that the Committee on Appropriations will make an appropriation to complete the basement, in which case carpets, furniture, and gas-fixtures will be required to make the rooms in the basement tenantable. I found, omitting the estimates for that purpose, that the sum of $47,500 would be required for the contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department for the next fiscal year; otherwise a deficiency would necessarily occur.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not fully apprehend the effect of the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. STONE.] Is he in favor of the amendment?

Mr. STONE. I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope this amendment will not prevail. Last year we appropriated $53,000 for this purpose, if my memory serves me.

Mr. STONE. That is right.

Mr. RANDALL. The objects to be secured by this appropriation could to my mind be very materially limited; for instance, on the item of carpets, furniture, keeping of horses and repairs of wagons, plumbing, gas-fitting, and stationery. These items could all be reduced very materially. I think that the Committee on Appropriations is correct in its estimates. These appropriations of contingent expenses are generally what may be termed loose appropriations for things that are not absolutely necessary, and now is a good time to restrict these expenditures just as a man would do in his own household.

Mr. STONE. Now, allow me to say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the amount expended for stationery last year was $9,937.23. There was expended for fuel $6,757.98. If the basement had been heated, this sum would have been largely exceeded. There was expended for gas $5,747, and but $4,500 was appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. Give us the items of carpets and furniture.

Mr. STONE. I am coming to that as rapidly as I can. Four thousand dollars was appropriated for plumbing, and but $3,433.45 was expended. The painting appropriation was $2,500, and there was expended $3,084.82; and I say after making a thorough examination of the exterior and interior of the building that there should be $5,000 more appropriated to paint it, in order to preserve the wood-work of the building.

Mr. RANDALL. I was there this morning and it looked very well painted.

Mr. STONE. I would like to take the gentleman there and examine the outside wood-work of that building. There was appropriated for carpets last year $10,000, and they expended $13,047.71.

Mr. RANDALL. We can do without that this year.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] if there was not a much larger amount expended for carpets last year than the year previous?

Mr. STONE. The amount has been about the same for the last three years.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Can the gentleman inform the House what was done with the old carpets?

Mr. STONE. The old carpets were sold; and from a statement of receipts from sales I learned that the sum of $18 was received for old carpets.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Was that all?

Mr. STONE. That was all that I could find had been received for old carpeting in the statement I examined. I must say, however, that from evidence I learned the carpets sold were as completely worn out as it was possible for them to be. For hardware $1,200 was appropriated and $1,817.73 was expended, and for miscellaneous expenses $9,000 was appropriated and $12,125.58 was expended. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio should be adopted in order to meet the necessary expenses of the Department for the year ending June 30, 1877.

Mr. FORT. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] will be adopted. I take it that none of us desire to cripple the Post-Office Department and that all this money asked, and even more, ought to be appropriated for the contingent expenses of the Department.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the only Department of this Government which has and which must continue to be upon a rapid increase; in fact there is no Department of the Government, except those that were connected with the war, that has increased in its business, increased in its facilities, as the Post-Office Department has done And I may say that in my judgment there have been no more improvements made in the management of any other Department than there have been in the Post-Office Department. Mail-messengers have been added to facilitate the transportation of the mail and letter carriers, and in fact there are now a great many things provided and furnished to us by the Post-Office Department which were not formerly furnished. I submit at this point tables showing the number of post-offices and the length of mail-routes in miles:

These tables show the vast increase within the last ten years of the Post-Office Department. As it has spread its net-work over the West and carried mail facilities to that sparsely-settled country they have been subjected to great expense, and they have met it in a business way. In my judgment, they have carried on their operations as economically as it is convenient or possible for any Department to do.

Sir, we should certainly not cripple the operations of this Department; there is no other that the people are so intimately connected with; there is no Department of the Government with which the people so come in contact every day, and whatever is necessary for its contingent expenses ought to be cheerfully voted. But very little money is asked for by this amendment, and I think we ought to vote it. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I think this increase in business is overestimated. If my memory serves me—and if not I hope some gentleman will correct me—about half the expenditure of the Post-Office Department is for transportation.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, the expenses of the Post-Office Department for inland transportation of the mails was about $15,400,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, it was about $15,350,000, in fact less than for the prior year. According to the estimates of the Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, so far as they can now be ascertained, the expenditures for this purpose will be about $280,000 more than for last year. I am apprised by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that the estimates from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General reduce the first estimates about $1,500,000.

The bill reported this morning from the Committee on Appropriations by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] who has charge of it, I am glad to say, proposes for deficiencies but $2,600,000 and odd against $5,680,000 for last year. There has been a reduction, by careful examination and scrutiny, of $4,000,000 from the deficiencies of last year, without cutting off a single post-office or a single mail-route, and I believe without impairing the efficiency of the Post-Office Department in any degree.

Mr. FOSTER. Would it not be fair to state that a million dollars of that reduction is because of the increased receipts of the Department?

Mr. RANDALL. Of course; but $3,000,000 is due to the cutting off of expenses, which, if the same scrutiny had been exercised last year, would have led to the same reduction in the appropriations of last year. In regard to the item in the pending paragraph, last year there was expended $53,000; we have reduced it this year to $40,000; and the very figures the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] gives indicate the wisdom of that reduction. He tells us that each year there has been appropriated about $13,000 for carpeting. That is only one of the excessive expenditures to which I allude. I think that now the Department should pursue the same plan that would be pursued by an individual. For instance, if I found that in my own household expenses I could not afford to buy a new parlor carpet this year—and bear in mind that the Department purchase nothing but parlor carpeting—I would put off buying a new one till another time and use the old one.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman refers to the decreased amount appropriated for deficiencies in the bill reported by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.] I want to ask him if a part of that decrease is not due to the fact that it is proposed to decrease the mail facilities of the people? That is, we cut off the fast-mail trains that are now in operation.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think that has anything to do with it. The gentleman alludes to the change in the payment for mails, which was formerly by weight. I have not the figures exactly, but we have reduced that now to six mills per mile for trains running twenty miles an hour, and seven mills per mile for trains running faster than that. That is my understanding of it.

It is alleged that this reduction may cut off what is known as the fast-mail trains between two or three cities. So far as I know—and I conferred with the Postmaster-General this morning—I did not understand him to make any objection to the change in that respect. He was rather particular to say that he wanted it understood that in all his recommendations he was in the direction of economy in the Department rather than to have it inferred that he was for increasing the emoluments of the railroads. I say that in justice to the gentleman who occupies that high position.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt about that. The gentleman was talking about the large decrease in the amount for deficiencies. I say a portion of it is due to the fact that the bill proposes to decrease the mail facilities of 20,000,000 of people.

Mr. RANDALL. Not at all; we have not cut off a post-office.

Mr. FOSTER. We have lengthened the time.

Mr. RANDALL. We have not cut off a route.

Mr. FOSTER. We have lengthened the time for carrying the mails, and are going back to the old stage-coach system in democratic times.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish you would go back to the old democratic times in the matter of honesty.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope gentlemen will confine themselves to the subject-matter of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] was the first one to branch out; let the gentleman criticise him.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying that the advantage of the proposed amendment over the paragraph in the bill is that it is in the line of the improvement which this bill shows over similar bills of last year and other years. That is to say, it appropriates in detail for all the different expenditures. It is true the amount proposed by the amendment is a few thousand dollars more than the amount contained in the paragraph of the bill.

I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the fact that in the appropriations for contingencies for the Senate, for the House, for the State Department, and for other Departments of the Government, they propose to appropriate in detail; whereas for the contingent expenses of the Post-Office Department there is here an aggregate appropriation of $40,000 for the different items of expenditure. I am rather opposed to that, because it is a departure from the improvement which this bill proposes in regard to the different Departments of the Government, save and except this single Department of the Post-Office.

It is perhaps better that we should appropriate a certain sum for carpets and a certain sum for furniture and other articles than to appropriate a general amount, aggregating nearly $50,000, for all these expenditures. It will be very clear to gentlemen that under an aggregate appropriation the authority in the Department which supervises these expenditures can give a large amount for purposes that may not be actually necessary, whereas under the proposed amendment the appropriation is confined to a certain amount for a certain purpose. It is more economical to limit the expense by appropriating a certain amount to each item than to appropriate an aggregate amount for several items. There is more safety in the one case than in the other, and I think in that respect the amendment has much advantage over the paragraph reported in the bill.

It appears from this debate that although there were $17,000 or $18,000 expended last year by the Post-Office Department for carpets, when these carpets were taken up and new ones purchased for the rooms, instead of the old carpets bringing a sum that would approximate nearly to the original cost, as would ordinarily be the case, they brought the insignificant sum of $18. That proves further the importance of appropriating a certain fixed sum for each article of expenditure, so far as it can be done. Of course it cannot be carried out to the utmost detail; but to a very great extent it can, and it is so carried out in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio. That proposition is so careful a generalization of the expenditures required for this Department that it appears to me it would be more economical, more in the interest of the public Treasury, that the amendment should be adopted than that the bill should be left in its present shape.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman should understand that in making up this amount we had each item named in the amendment. Here is one item in the estimates:

For furniture, $12,000.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask my friend whether, in the expenditure of this $40,000, the authority controlling the expenditure will be governed by the terms of the bill as it may be passed by Congress or by the Estimate Book?

Mr. RANDALL. If there is any fidelity exhibited in the estimates, he will give a relative proportion of the money to each item of his estimate.

Mr. O'BRIEN. But if he does not——

Mr. RANDALL. Then he ought not to have any.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If he does not, there is no redress whatever.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. FOSTER, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 26, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

For compensation of the Commissioner of Agriculture, $2,700; chief clerk, $1,800; entomologist, $1,800; chemist, $1,800; superintendent of experimental gardens and grounds, $1,800; statistician, $1,800; disbursing clerk, $1,600; superintendent of seed-room, $1,600; botanist, $1,600; microscopist, $1,600; three clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; five clerks of class two; six clerks of class one; seven clerks of class one as tabulators for statistical division; engineer, $1,200; superintendent of folding-room, $1,200; three copyists, at $900 each; one attendant in museum, $1,000; two assistant messengers, at $720 each; one carpenter, at $960; two watchmen; and nine laborers; making, in all, $67,280.

Mr. RANDALL. By direction of the committee I move to amend the paragraph just read by making it read as follows:

For compensation for the Commissioner of Agriculture, $2,700; chief clerk, $1,800; entomologist, $1,800; chemist, $1,800; assistant chemist, $1,200; superintendent of experimental gardens and grounds, $1,800; statistician, $1,800; disbursing clerk, $1,600; superintendent of seed-room, $1,600; botanist, $1,600; microscopist, $1,600; three clerks of class four; four clerks of class three; five clerks of class two; six clerks of class one; one clerk of class four, two clerks of class three, two clerks of class two, and one clerk of class one as tabulators for statistical division; engineer, $1,200; superintendent of folding-room, $1,200; three copyists, at $900 each; one female superintendent of flower-seed, $900; two attendants in museum—one of whom shall act as librarian—$1,000 each; two assistant messengers, at $720 each; one carpenter, at $960; two watchmen; and eight laborers; making, in all, $69,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. At the instance of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] I submit the following amendment, and ask his attention to its provisions:

Add to the paragraph the following:
It shall be the duty of the Commissioner to collect agricultural statistics, compile the same, and publish monthly a statement thereof.

I suppose this will meet the views of the gentleman from Iowa, who feels quite an interest in this matter of agriculture.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the same provision which was inserted in the bill last year (and which I will send up to be read) ought to be included in this bill. The amendment of my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] does not make any provision for paying for the collection and publication of statistics; and if gentlemen will look over the features of the appropriations in this bill for the Department of Agriculture they will find that no provision at all is made for collecting and publishing agricultural statistics in the monthly or annual reports.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the gentleman's proposition be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collecting agricultural statistics and compiling and writing matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, $15,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be paid to any person receiving at the same time other compensation as an officer or employé of the Department.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have just learned that my friend from Alabama, [Mr. CALDWELL,] the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, desires to offer an amendment on this subject; and as I have no desire to interfere with the business of the standing committee, not being myself a member of it, I ask leave to withdraw my proposition till I hear what that gentleman desires to submit.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course my proposition is subject to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The only amendment pending is that of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I desire, when it is in order, to move to amend by inserting $3,000 instead of $2,700 as the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no.

Mr. RUSK. O, yes; that is right.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I have been instructed by the Committee on Agriculture to submit this amendment; and I am glad to say that it is in consonance with my convictions of right and justice. I am made the bolder in offering this amendment by the kindness of the Committee on Appropriations in the amendments which on their own motion they have submitted, coupled with the very kind and gracious act of the chairman yesterday in raising the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions. The soldier interest of this country is a very great one; but there is another which must not be disregarded, the agricultural interest, which can be characterized and epitomized in one solitary sentence as forming the basis, the substratum, upon which rests the prosperity of this entire country. The only recognition which the agricultural interests have had at the hands of this Government was in the organization of the Agricultural Department and the continued appropriations for it.

I have not time in a five-minute speech to mention all the advantages which have flowed from the establishment of this Department. I apprehend those advantages address themselves to the understanding of every member upon this floor. The very first blow that is made at this Department by the committee is at the head of the Department, and I undertake to say that whenever you reduce the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture from $3,000 to $2,700 you strike a blow from which the Department will not soon recover.

I know there is a very common feeling in the minds of many that the farming interests of the country will take care of themselves, and that the chief at the head of that Department need not necessarily be a man whose attainments in science, in literature, in cultivation should be equal to those of the chiefs of other Departments; but whenever you reduce the salary of the Commissioner to $2,700, you then will secure the services of persons of only ordinary ability. There is not a farmer in this country who is still in his vocation, who is cultivating the ground, who has sufficient scientific attainments to furnish the brain-power to run an institution of that kind, who would think of abandoning his farm and home to take a place under the Government at this compensation.

You have at the head of the Department now a man who could earn twice the amount of his salary in the practice of his profession, but while he is a lawyer, while he has adorned the bench of his State, he is at the same time a practical farmer and acquainted with subjects which are interesting and profitable to farmers. I venture the assertion that all the salaries which have been paid to this Commissioner would not amount to a fair compensation for one single, solitary article which he has contributed to the Agricultural Reports of the country. And whether the present Commissioner is to be retained in office or not, it does seem to me $2,700—an amount less than is paid for chief clerks in many of the Departments—is not an amount commensurate with his service and the ability necessary to run his Department. I trust my amendment will meet the favorable consideration of the House, and that it will be ingrafted upon the bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. I move to strike out the last word of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, no one on this floor sympathizes more fully than I do with our Committee on Appropriations in their efforts at retrenchment. The section of the country which I represent needs this retrenchment in every department of the Government; but I must insist that in some instances reduction of expenditures is not good economy or retrenchment.

As has been intimated by my colleague on the committee, when we withhold from the agricultural interests of this country the appropriation necessary to give them efficiency and secure development, we strike at the very underground of our present troubles to-day. I wish to remind gentlemen upon this floor who are inclined to ignore the agricultural interests of the country that this little Bureau, insignificant as it may be in the estimation of some gentlemen, represents one-half of the population of this great Union. Ay, more; it contributes 79 per cent. of the entire volume of exports of the country. Upon the prosperity and success of these agricultural interests every man, woman, and child throughout our broad domain is to-day dependent for food and clothing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to secure the services of a competent man in this Department, will any gentleman say $2,700 is an adequate compensation? No, sir; it is not adequate to the menial labor performed by the head of this Department, and I admonish gentlemen here, under the pressure of stern necessity which now urges this country to action, the indications are we must look to the material interests of the country, and if we ignore any let it be the meaner and baser thing of party politics. Why, sir, to my mind, the most favorable augury in our political heavens to-day is the long blue streak now rising in the West, which betokens the return of simplicity, of honesty, and of economy in the administration of our country as exhibited in the venerable form of Uncle Jimmy WILLIAMS. There must be an uprising, my countrymen, of the people in this country, if they would redeem it from the thralldom, the extravagance, and the corruption which curse it from the center to the circumference. But I insist that the chairman of this committee will not hesitate, instead of impairing the efficiency of this Department of the Government, to magnify it in every possible way; for the good of the country demands it.

Mr. REAGAN. What is the pending amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending, one moved by the gentleman from Alabama and another moved by the gentleman from Iowa. The gentleman from Georgia has made a pro forma amendment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. I withdraw it.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama is to make the salary $3,000 instead of $2,700.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to perfect the paragraph is first in order.

Mr. REAGAN. I will speak to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama to increase the salary from $2,700 to $3,000. I desire to make this an occasion for saying a word generally in reference to this Department.

I must infer, sir, this Bureau is doing a good deal to improve the agriculture of the country as well as its horticulture. I am led to infer so from some personal experience—very little, however—with the present head of that Bureau. I believe the appropriation for this Bureau last year was $168,000. That is without reference to the one hundred and odd thousand dollars paid for printing the reports of the Agricultural Bureau. Altogether it sums up about $300,000. The reports go out. Some read them. Perhaps some are benefited by them; but I do not think they are so much benefited by them as they are by the reports of State and other agricultural associations throughout the country.

But it may be said the people are benefited by the seeds that are distributed. If that be so it must be by the quality and not the quantity of the seeds received that they are benefited. If my share for my district of the $168,000 is to be measured by the seeds received, I say they cost too much unless they are of very extra quality. I do not hesitate to say that $15 sent to seed-producers at Philadelphia or other places in the country can get as many seeds as my share of the $168,000 comes to.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the gentleman from Texas makes a mistake. These seeds are not only distributed to members of Congress and Senators, but are sent to every county throughout the whole Union.

Mr. REAGAN. Who sends them?

Mr. O'BRIEN. The Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose one who knows how to make applications to the Commissioner may be able to get them. But they are paid for out of the Treasury of the country, and they ought to be distributed for the good of the country, equitably and justly.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. The gentleman from Texas surely is aware of the fact that the Commissioner of Agriculture is in correspondence with every county in the United States. He has his regular correspondents all through the country, and through those correspondents not only seeds are distributed but the Agricultural Reports.

Mr. REAGAN. Well, sir, that may be so, but the idea was held out by the law, and that is the general understanding, that these seeds are in the main for distribution among the people of the different congressional districts by their members. I have got about the amount I stated. And on forwarding letters from citizens of my district requesting some sorts of special seeds understood to be in the Department for distribution, I got a short and insolent answer, such a one as disregarded official courtesy. And I desire to say if this extravagance is to go on, and if the Department is to be managed by one who does not know the ordinary courtesies between gentlemen, much less between officers of the Government, I do not want any such appropriations to be placed in such hands.

I say, sir, that this appropriation is needlessly extravagant. It is a great deal of cost with a very little profit. I know we are led to believe because the people send here for seeds that they regard it as a great boon. They know, sir, that we are squandering the public money, and they want to get their part of the plunder as well as they can. But I take it there is not a well-instructed agriculturist in this land nor a well-instructed gardener in this land—and I claim to be both—who does not know that there is here an extravagant and wasteful expenditure of the public money, and that this Department does not confer the good upon the country that is conferred by the agricultural societies and the men who are practically engaged in the production and distribution of seeds.

I felt disposed to say this much on general principles, and I felt disposed to say it particularly on account of the man who presides over that Department. And I wish to say that I think the public interests would be better served by reducing than by increasing this salary. I trust it will not be increased.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to enter into a discussion as to what these seeds cost, or whether the service can be done cheaper than it is now done by the Department. That is not material to the pending amendment. But I wish to remark incidentally here that I believe the same amount of seeds could be distributed, if distributed by an individual, for immensely less money; and perhaps better seed. I speak especially of flower-seed. My experience in this matter is somewhat limited, only extending to a flower garden, but the trouble with the seeds that I have got from the Department is that they do not come up. When I mentioned that at the Department I was told that I put the seeds too far into the earth.

Mr. REAGAN. The beans, corn, &c., that are sent out are also found to be inferior.

Mr. RANDALL. That was a sufficient answer to me. I do not know much about it myself. I was brought up to merchandise and not to farming.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If you will apply to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] who is a well-instructed agriculturist, he will tell you at what depth you should put the seed.

Mr. RANDALL. Next time I will not put them in so deep, and I suppose I will find out at last how these flower-seeds are to be planted.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CALDWELL] stated that we raised the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions. That is a mistake. If the gentleman will look at section 470 of the Revised Statutes he will see that the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions is placed at $4,000.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. In the bill as reported by the committee the salary was put at $2,700. That was amended by making it $3,600.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's mistake is a very natural one. We reduce the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions from $4,000 to $3,600. We found the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture $3,000, and reduce it to $2,700. We have dealt with them exactly alike, and I do not myself see any reason why this gentleman should not be subjected to the same rate of reduction as all others. I hope the amendment will not prevail. We endeavored in the committee to reach, and I supposed we had reached, the conclusion as to the amount of appropriation which would be satisfactory both to the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to reserve the privilege of a vote by yeas and nays in the House on this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, it was agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has provided in the amendments which he has submitted for two attendants upon the museum, one of whom shall be librarian.

I am constrained to offer the following amendment:

In line 1484 insert "one librarian, $1,400."

Now, sir, one word in regard to that amendment. The salary of this officer has heretofore been $1,800. The Committee on Appropriations have stricken out the librarian entirely in their bill. I desire to state to the House, for the information of gentlemen who have not grown familiar with that Department, that Congress has appropriated heretofore an amount perhaps reaching $50,000 for the purchase of a library. There are eight or ten thousand volumes, the most valuable collection of agricultural and scientific works on this continent, if not in the world. These works are consulted by the head of every division in that Department every hour in the day. Is it sound policy to appropriate so much money for books and have no one to take care of them? Here are eight thousand volumes without a guardian, without a keeper. I undertake to say that no female attendant on the museum is competent to take charge of that library and manage it as it is conducted now. There is a reduction in the salary of the librarian of $400 in the amendment which I offer, provided the librarian is retained. It seems to me, sir, to be unwise to leave so many books, so large a library, and one so useful, at the mercy of every incomer and outgoer in the Department.

So far as relates to the two attendants in the museum, one of these attendants I am informed is also a modeler, and her services are just as much needed in that Department as are those of the one who attends the museum. With this librarian restored, these books will be preserved and each division of the Deparment will be accommodated.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on Appropriations do not deem this officer necessary.

The question was taken on Mr. CALDWELL'S amendment, and it was not agreed to; there being on a division ayes 23, noes not counted.

The question recurred on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the only special value there is in this Department is the gathering up of statistics and publishing them. The cost of publishing, of course, is paid out of the general fund, and the publication is made at the Government Printing Office. The army of employés we have authorized, whose salaries exceed $80,000, of course have ample leisure to gather up statistics. That, indeed, is their principal duty; so that they can very well publish these monthly reports, and I trust there will be no objection to it. It has been deemed good policy in the past, and I hope it will be continued. The main purpose for which the $80,000 is appropriated—to be sure we appropriate $50,000 for seeds, but the main duty of the Agricultural Department is to gather up statistics and send them out to the country. They are not always very reliable, because no statistics of the kind can be made reliable, but I think they are more reliable than any other statistics that we have.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CALDWELL] has an amendment on this subject of collecting statistics.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. Yes; but I propose to offer it as an amendment to the next paragraph.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As I have the floor, I will offer the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, with his permission, as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

For collecting agricultural statistics and compiling and writing the matter for monthly, annual, and special reports, $3,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Does the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture consider that a sufficient amount?

Mr. RANDALL. I consider it too much.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why make any special appropriation for the purpose at all?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I desire to answer the question of the gentleman from Iowa. The Department does not consider it enough, but the Committee on Agriculture, sympathizing with the economical desires of the Committee on Appropriations, thought proper to instruct me to offer this amendment, and I ask the House to appropriate this amount for the purpose indicated in the amendment. It is the very smallest amount that could be voted for the purpose.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire now to reply to the gentleman from Indiana. The total amount reported by the Committee on Appropriations is $80,000, but so much of it is appropriated for seeds, so much for different Bureaus, so much to pay employés; every dollar of it is specifically appropriated, and there is not a cent of it for collecting statistics.

Mr. RANDALL. Pardon me; I take it that the whole $80,000 in the first paragraph is almost exclusively appropriated and expended for the purpose of collecting statistics; all these clerks are for that purpose.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. They act upon the statistics after they come into the Department, but there has always been an amount appropriated for the collecting of statistics. In the last Congress we appropriated $15,000 for this very purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. Does not the gentleman think that it was an abuse to place that $15,000 under the discretion of the Commissioner of Agriculture to pay to whom he pleased for writing such articles as he might desire? What is the Bureau for if it is not to make up statistics for the monthly and annual reports?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is to make up statistics, but there is considerable expense in getting those statistics from all over this broad land.

Mr. HOLMAN. How?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will understand that heretofore, so far as I have been able to learn, this money has been expended to pay persons for writing articles upon agriculture. Is not that so?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. Allow me to explain this matter. Heretofore there has been appropriated from $15,000 to $20,000 for the statistical division of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. Upon the suggestion of the Committee on Agriculture the Committee on Appropriations, instead of adhering to the former method of appropriation, have given additional clerks to the statistical division of this Department. Heretofore those clerks have been paid out of the $15,000 or $20,000 appropriation. But thinking it better to act directly rather than indirectly, the Committee on Agriculture recommended to the Committee on Appropriations to give a certain number of clerks in that division, which the committee has done.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. And the Committee on Agriculture still think it necessary to have this additional $3,000 for statistical information?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. They favor the additional appropriation of $3,000 in order to perfect the work in the statistical division. And that amount, in addition to the greater number of clerks given to the statistical division, will be four or five thousand dollars less than the appropriation made last year for this purpose.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] has now got his answer from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CALDWELL] the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. RANDALL. I know that. If an appropriation is asked for the purpose of obtaining statistical information, that is already provided for in this bill. If, on the other hand, it is to pay persons outside of the Department for writing articles to be inserted in the Agricultural Report, then I say that is not a proper expenditure. What is the Department for?

Mr. REAGAN. This paragraph now provides for "seven clerks of class one as tabulators for statistical division." There is also provided a chief clerk, an entomologist, a chemist, a superintendent of experimental grounds, and a statistician, in addition to these seven clerks. Everything that can possibly be conceived of is already provided for. Now, after a specific appropriation is made for the Department of $37,280, it is proposed to supplement it by an additional appropriation of $3,000. To whom is it to go?

Mr. RANDALL. We have, by amendment, increased the amount here appropriated to nearly $80,000.

Mr. REAGAN. To whom is this additional $3,000 to go? Is it to increase the salaries of the officers already provided for by the specific appropriation of nearly $80,000?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. Not at all.

Mr. REAGAN. Or is it to pay for the employment of others outside of the Department of Agriculture? And if so, what are to be their duties, and who is to regulate them? Is it to be a fund thrown in just to be grabbed up? If not, then let us specify how it is to be expended and to whom the salary or compensation is to be paid. We have already provided for everything that was contemplated in the establishment of this Bureau by specific appropriations for specified officers, and now we are asked to add a lump sum, for no officer in particular, to be expended under no particular direction, but a loose general appropriation, as if, because we could find nothing else to appropriate for, we would throw in a loose amount.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is under a great delusion. There is not a member of the Committee on Agriculture who wants to leave anything loose in this appropriation. The object of that committee is to make specific appropriations and to prescribe specific duties, so as to give greater efficiency to this Department.

It was our duty at a very early day of this session to visit this Department. We were not expected there. We went through every portion of the building, from the cellar to the dome. Although it was on a Saturday, we found every clerk and every employé of the Department engaged in his work, and performing it properly. Not only did we do that, but we examined the books of the Department thoroughly, and we found, and so reported to this House, that there was unexpended $58,000 of the amount appropriated for the postage of the Department, and that amount was paid back into the Treasury and is there to-day.

In regard to the distribution of seeds, I desire to say that from an examination of the books of the Department we found that every member of Congress was charged with his quota of seeds. It is true some had received more and some had received less; but the effort of the Commissioner was to equalize the distribution. And even down to a single package of garden-seed, the member to whom it was issued was charged with it.

In our intercourse with this Department we have been treated with the utmost courtesy, and the utmost promptness has been shown by the employés in the discharge of their duties.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] does the Committee on Agriculture injustice when he says that we are disposed to leave anything loose. We want to tighten the screws, and to give such a direction to our appropriations, if we can, as will develop the material interests of the country upon which our financial prosperity depends.

Mr. RANDALL. Are the Committee on Agriculture unanimous in asking this appropriation of $3,000?

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. I think they are.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, for Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, it was not agreed to; there being ayes 37, noes not counted.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, it was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3128) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and distribution of new and valuable seeds and plants, $60,000; for expense of putting up the same, for labor, bagging, paper, twine, gum, and other necessary materials, $5,000; in all, $65,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by inserting after the words "$60,000" in the paragraph just read the following:

Provided, That $2,000 of the above amount shall be expended by the Commissioner of Agriculture as compensation to some man of approved attainments, who is practically well acquainted with methods of statistical inquiry and who has evinced an intimate acquaintance with questions relating to the national wants in regard to timber, to prosecute investigations and inquiries with the view of ascertaining the annual amount of consumption, importation, and exportation of timber and other forest products, the probable supply for future wants, the means best adapted to their preservation and renewal, the influence of forests upon climate, and the measures that have been successfully applied in foreign countries or that may be deemed applicable in this country for the preservation and restoration or planting of forests, and to report upon the same to the Commissioner of Agriculture, to be by him in a separate report transmitted to Congress.

I do not think it necessary for me to occupy the time of the Committee of the Whole in discussing this amendment, as the Committee on Appropriations at its session this morning assented to it. I have, however, prepared some remarks upon the question of timber preservation and cultivation, which I ask the privilege of having printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, leave was granted. [See Appendix.]

The amendment of Mr. DUNNELL was agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out "60" and inserting "30;" so as to make the appropriation "for purchase and distribution of new and valuable seeds and plants" $30,000; and also to change the aggregation of the paragraph from $35,000 to $35,000.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because whatever advantage there may be in the attainment of scientific information by this Bureau for the benefit of agriculture, it does not consist in, and is not illustrated in the main by, the seed distribution from that Office. Even if the Department were under a different management, from which courtesy and fairness could be expected, I would still be opposed to an appropriation of such amount for this purpose. For the distribution of such seed as are sent out from that Department, which the Department will not guarantee to grow and which do not in many cases grow, $30,000 is certainly enough. If we reduce this appropriation $30,000 we benefit the people by avoiding to that extent an expenditure which is nearly useless, if not in fact mischievous, by reason of the competition with the seed-growers of the country, who are its real and chief benefactors in this respect.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. The gentleman from Texas seems to lose sight of the fact that there are sections of this country which are not conveniently situated in regard to seed stores. In the South, the Southwest, the West, and the Northwest, there are benefits growing out of the distribution of seeds from this Department which the gentleman seems to have forgotten. In order to show the efficacy of such distribution, I ask the Clerk to read an extract from one of the late monthly reports of the Agricultural Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

RESULT OF SEED-DISTRIBUTION.

Wisconsin, Outagamie: There will be hundreds of acres of Fultz wheat sown in this county next year. There were over seven hundred bushels raised this season, all from the four quarts sent me by the Department four years ago. The Schonen oats are now sown by nearly all the best farmers in the county. They average at least ten bushels per acre more than any other variety. So it is seen that the introduction of new seeds is doing a great amount of good, especially for field crops. Clark: The Fultz wheat furnished by the Department is growing into general favor. It makes about two weeks earlier than the other varieties. The different varieties of oats and barley furnished by the Department seem well adapted to our soil and climate.

Kansas, Woodson: At our district fair (including four counties, and open to the world,) the Westchester corn from the Department bore away the premium; also the silver-hull buckwheat took the first premium; it yielded 45 bushels per acre; also the red (Etampes) pumpkin. It is large, rich, sweet, and the grain solid and fine as that of a squash. Allen: From seed sent out from the Department were produced a mammoth squash weighing 115 pounds, and a total on one vine of 1,096 pounds; also potatoes weighing 2 pounds each; beets, 9 pounds; turnips, 14 pounds; cabbage, 36 pounds.

Nebraska, Thayer: The winter-rye sent from the Department, in hardiness and yield, beats anything in these parts.

Virginia, Grayson: From seed sent to me by the Department last spring, I have raised large bright yellow pumpkins, weighing 112 and 117 pounds apiece.

North Carolina, Forsyth: Mr. A. Fagle, from 1 bushel of Clawson wheat raised 41 bushels.

Arkansas, Saint Francis: The Westchester yellow-corn sent from the Department last spring is a grand success; I raised some that measured 13 inches to the ear. It is some three or four weeks earlier than our ordinary corn, and yields as much per acre as the very best. Benton: My Willis corn yielded 40 bushels per acre; common white, 55; Pennsylvania yellow, 65.

Tennessee, Macon: The early yellow corn forwarded to me by the Department is the largest field-corn within my knowledge.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not my witnesses here, and I would like to have a continuance of this branch of the case. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Texas. It is a fact that very many of the seeds which have come from the Agricultural Department have had very much to do in increasing the prosperity of many of the farmers, especially in the West. Some of the grains which we are now producing there with very good success were first obtained from the Agricultural Department. A new species of oats obtained four or five years ago from the Department is now the standard, yielding heavily and sought for by all intelligent farmers throughout the West.

It seems unwise to talk about a Department that after all costs so little comparatively. If but one species of wheat or barley or oats is introduced into the country and becomes successful in cultivation, the country is repaid ten times for all it has expended.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] a little while ago in his remarks spoke wisely when he called the attention of this committee to the great underlying interests of agriculture. It will not do in a Republic like ours, spreading widely in all directions, resting almost wholly upon agricultural products for its prosperity, to strike even at a humble Bureau like this, which seeks to diffuse information, open up new methods in agriculture, aid in the introduction of improved machinery, and to bring into use new seeds and new plants. These interests are too momentous to be disregarded by any one.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] is himself a farmer. I have heard him talk well in private about agricultural matters. I think he will now admit, if this Department is successful in doing just what it has done for the country, it is not wise legislation to cripple it. Suppose we vote three or four thousand dollars for the monthly publications of agricultural information to be spread broadcast throughout the country. Why, sir, a single issue may, by the information conveyed, pay the whole amount.

What we want in agriculture, as in the mechanic arts, is quickened thought. We want investigation, research, the adoption of new methods, new means, new processes. The Agricultural Bureau keeps the agricultural mind of the country as it were on the lookout for improvement, on the lookout for advancement, and I think we do well to increase the amount of the appropriation. I trust members of the committee, all of those representing agricultural interests, will give to the motion to increase the amount named a full and hearty support.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama or any member of the Committee on Agriculture a question in reference to this appropriation. What steps have the committee ever taken to verify the accuracy of the accounts of the expenditure of money for this purpose? Have they ever had any itemized account concerning the purchase of seed? Have they ever had any means within their control of determining the accuracy of the expenditures of this money for the purpose for which it is appropriated?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. The Committee on Agriculture have not investigated the Department to that extent. We have examined their books in reference to seeds purchased and the amount disbursed.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I presume the chairman of the committee is able to answer the question whether the amount purchased and that disbursed balance each other?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. They do, so far as our investigations have gone.

Mr. REAGAN. Has there been any effort made to look into the vouchers as to purchases and disbursements?

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. The Committee on Agriculture have heard that there was alleged misconduct on the part of the Agricultural Department; but, although we have endeavored to discover the witnesses who could testify to any such misconduct, it has been so far without avail. As I have stated, we have examined the accounts of the Bureau, but we have not made any scrutinizing investigation, such as would enable us to answer fully on all points in reference to the disbursements of the Department.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. The Committee on Agriculture did investigate the accounts for three running months, examining the vouchers, the amounts expended, and how accounted for.

Mr. REAGAN. What was the result of that investigation; were all the vouchers examined?

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia. They were examined and found to be correct.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of stating that, so far as my district is concerned, almost every person to whom seed has heretofore been sent has again applied for another supply, alleging the seed sent were so good more was desired for the present year.

I will take this occasion to state also—and it is gratifying to me to be able to do so—that in all the official intercourse I have had with that Department I have experienced a courteous and kind bearing from all the officers connected with it, especially the chief clerk, with whom it mostly has been. I now withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that debate be closed on the pending paragraph.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. REAGAN'S amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage on seeds, reports, circulars, and letters, $2,500.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I move, in line 1523, to insert "$4,000" instead of "$2,500." This provides for the postage of the Agricultural Department. The committee have appropriated $2,500. It is insufficient to meet the demands on the Department. They have six thousand correspondents or more in the country, and they pay the postage on a letter to and from each correspondent, which is only right. Six thousand multiplied by six would give $3,600, showing that $2,500 is not sufficient. Four thousand dollars is as little as the Department can get along with. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I rise to support the amendment, and while up I will take occasion to say, as far as my information extends, the people of the country, are more willing to contribute whatever burden this Department may impose than to almost any other, except perhaps the Post-Office Department. So far as my intercourse with the Department is concerned, I can only say that I have always been treated most courteously, and to my knowledge the Commissioner has correspondents in most of the counties in the district which I represent.

The farming community write me, expressing their high appreciation of this Department, and I am satisfied, from what I have heard among my constituents and from their letters to me, that they are willing to contribute to this Department of the Government more liberally perhaps than to any other. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama will be adopted.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to congratulate my colleague on his having been so much better treated by the Department than some others have been.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I treated them properly, and have received proper treatment in return.

Mr. RIDDLE. I wish to express my concurrence in what has been stated as to the excellence of this Bureau. I think our legislation, instead of impairing the efficiency of this Department, should be directed toward its aggrandizement. I understand there has been a proposition before the Committee on Agriculture looking to the elevation of this Department to the position of a regular Department of the Government. I am frank to say that I would support any legislative proposition looking in that direction. I am of opinion that the head of this Department should be a Cabinet officer, and if the Committee on Agriculture should submit a bill looking in that direction it would receive my cordial support. I think we ought to dignify the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. Chairman, I read with pleasure a few years ago in one of the volumes of the History of the United States written by Mr. Bancroft this statement: That the avocation of agriculture was nearer heaven than any other. I think our legislation ought to be such as to induce the young men of the country to engage in agricultural pursuits and divert their attention from the various professions which are now overcrowded. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I am in favor of retrenchment in every Department of the Government except this; but in this Department I will vote for an increase in the appropriations whenever I have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. RANDALL. Go on. I have no objection. I want to get on with the bill.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For salaries of the fifty-two district judges of the United States, including the salaries of the retired judges of the eastern district of Texas, eastern district of Wisconsin, and of the district of Delaware, $193,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out all after the word "States," in line 1543, down to and including the word "Delaware," in line 1545, to wit, these words: "including the salaries of the retired judges of the eastern district of Texas, eastern district of Wisconsin, and of the district of Delaware;" and change the total amount to $182,500.

This crept into the appropriation bill because it was in the estimates. I am informed that all these three retired judges have paid their final account.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following pragraph:

COURT OF CLAIMS.

For salaries of five judges of the Court of Claims, at $4,500 each; the chief clerk, $2,500; one assistant clerk, $1,600; bailiff, $1,200; and messenger thereof; in all, $28,640.

Mr. FOSTER. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that this bill makes no appropriation whatever for the payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims. I know what is proposed to be done by the chairman. I merely state the fact that no appropriation is made here for the payment of judgments against the United States, supposed to amount to $2,000,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount appropriated for these judgments last year was $400,000, or thereabouts, if I remember rightly. This year the estimate is $2,000,000. The committee did not put in that item because they were not fully advised on the subject. It was left to be provided for when the sundry civil appropriation bill comes up. That is the explanation.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest to the gentleman that the appropriations for judgments of the Court of Claims have always been in this bill; and with a view to the comparative statement of the bill it might be better if it should come in here. And I would suggest also that as to the amount, there is really nothing to go upon except the estimates of the court and the judgment of the committee on those estimates. I remember that two years ago we had to put in a million of dollars for this purpose. We left it out of the legislative bill, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has done, until the bill was being finally acted on in the House, that we might have time for consideration.

Mr. RANDALL. The estimate of $2,000,000, I take it, includes the claim of Marshall O. Roberts, not yet decided. The committee have not entered particularly into an investigation of the amount which is necessary for this purpose. We deemed it advisable to leave that to the sundry civil bill. As regards the comparison of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has spoken, we shall be able to make a comparison as to the various appropriation bills in the aggregate at the end of the session. Whatever we appropriate is to come up either here or elsewhere.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated that the appropriations in this bill were $6,000,000 less than the estimates. I think he said seven millions.

Mr. RANDALL. I said eight millions.

Mr. FOSTER. In that connection I think it would be well for the gentleman to explain that two millions are left out of the comparison.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not any such thing. The reduction which we stated at eight millions was on the estimates. But the reduction of six millions was on the appropriations of the last year, in which there was an appropriation for this purpose of $400,000. But the gentleman will find at the end of this bill another provision, by which we make a reduction in the custom-houses of the country which is estimated at $250,000. That did not come into my statement of the $6,000,000 at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood the gentleman to say that the reductions were $8,000,000 below the estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. I say so yet.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman should further have stated to the House that there were estimates for $2,000,000 for judgments of the Court of Claims, for which he appropriates nothing.

Mr. RANDALL. There is $1,600,000 to stand against that. Last year there was $400,000 appropriated to pay judgments. The estimate this year is $2,000,000. Therefore there is an increase in the estimates of $1,600,000 over the amount appropriated last year.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman stated that the reduction is $6,000,000 below the estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. The reduction is $6,000,000 below the appropriations; that is, as the bill came from the Committee on Appropriations. And this reduction of $400,000, which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] thinks we ought to put in for the sake of comparison, is almost offset by the reductions provided for in this bill for custom-house officers, which I had the figures to show amounted to one hundred and twenty and odd thousand dollars, besides a saving of $250,000 from the general reduction of the special agents of the customs.

Mr. FOSTER. The point I was making was that the statement was made when the bill was introduced that the reduction from the estimates was $8,000,000, when in fact it is $6,000,000, because you make no appropriation for $2,000,000 of judgments.

Mr. RANDALL. The reduction of the appropriation bill on the estimates is $8,000,000. The reduction on the appropriations of last year by this bill as it came from the Committee on Appropriations is $6,000,000. But we have made no appropriation in this bill to the extent of $400,000 which was in last year's appropriations for judgments of the Court of Claims; so that upon the face of it the reduction of this appropriation bill over that of last year is $5,600,000. But we have gone a little further, and by general provisions of law we have made reductions which I hope will amount to $400,000, in clauses which propose the 10 per cent. reduction, and further by the abolition of what are known as special customs agents. The reduction therefore made by this bill is left about the same as I stated, $6,000,000. It is true that the reduction of $400,000, of which I have just spoken, is in the permanent appropriations, but it is none the less a saving to the people. There is therefore by this bill an aggregate saving of about $6,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to get the gentleman to make the statement that the reduction from the estimates is not eight millions as he stated to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. The reduction in the appropriations——

Mr. FOSTER. I am now talking about the estimates.

Mr. RANDALL. The appropriations in this bill are now somewhat larger than they were when it was reported, because the House has been a little more liberal than the committee, but as the bill came from the committee it appropriated about $13,000,000, and the estimates were $20,836,000.

Mr. FOSTER. But the estimates included the $2,000,000 for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, so that the gentleman should have said six millions instead of eight millions.

Mr. RANDALL. But the real test of reduction is in this year's appropriations under those of last year.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not disputing that.

Mr. RANDALL. The reduction in appropriations will be about $6,000,000 by the effect of reduction in the appropriations and the provisions of law, most of which the gentleman from Ohio has resisted.

Mr. FOSTER. Most of which the gentleman from Ohio has sustained.

Mr. ATKINS. Most of which the gentleman from Ohio has certainly opposed.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Office of the Attorney-General:

For compensation of the Attorney-General, $8,000; solicitor-general, $6,000; two Assistant Attorneys-General, at $4,500 each; one Assistant Attorney-General of the Post-Office Department, $3,600; solicitor of internal revenue, $4,500; naval solicitor, $3,150; examiner of claims, $3,150; chief clerk, $2,000; stenographic clerk, $1,800; two law clerks, at $1,800 each; five clerks of class four; one clerk of class two; one telegraph-operator, at $1,000; five copyists, at $900 each; one messenger; two assistant messengers; two laborers; and two watchmen; in all, $64,760.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the following amendment to that paragraph:

On page 65, at the end of line 1579, insert "law clerk and examiner of titles, $2,700."

In line 1580, after the word "thousand" insert "two hundred."

In line 1581, strike out all after the word "dollars" down to and including the word "each," on line 1582, as follows: "two law clerks, at $1,800 each."

And in lines 1586 and 1587 strike out "$700," so as to make the total $64,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of the Department, namely: For furniture and repairs, $1,000; for law and miscellaneous books for the library of the Department, $1,000; for the same for the Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, $500; for stationery, $2,500; for miscellaneous expenditure, such as telegraphing, fuel, lights, labor, and other necessaries, $6,000; in all, $11,000.

Mr. FOSTER. At the request of the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] my colleague on the committee, I offer the following amendment:

After line 1596 add the following words:
For care and subsistence of one horse and repairs of one wagon and harness, $1,000.

That amendment was handed to me by the gentleman from Maine, who is now absent, and I believe it has the consent of the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the sum to be allowed was $500. That is my recollection, and I am corroborated in it by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. FOSTER. This is the exact amount allowed to the State Department, and in the exact words of that provision.

Mr. RANDALL. The State Department has to have an additional wagon.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Maine said that he thought the service required as large an appropriation as that of the State Department.

Mr. RANDALL. You had better put it at $500.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no discretion about it.

Mr. DURHAM. This matter came before the Committee on the Expenditures of the Department of Justice, and after full inquiry we came to the conclusion that $500 was ample for the subsistence of one horse.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose, then, that we make the amount $500, and substitute a mule for a horse. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATKINS. I think the Committee on Appropriations agreed to give to the Attorney-General the same amount for a wagon and a horse as was given to the State Department.

Mr. REAGAN. As the gentlemen of these two committees cannot agree as to the allowance to be made for the cavalry of the Attorney-General's Department, we had better vote down the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. DURHAM,] I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$1,000" and inserting "$500."

Mr. FOSTER. And I move further to amend the amendment by substituting a mule for a horse.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order now.

Mr. DURHAM. I do not know anything about any arrangement that may have been made by the Committee on Appropriations. All I desire to state is simply this: that the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice directed their attention to what was necessary for the care of one horse, &c., and we found that $500 was ample for the care of one horse. I know nothing about any agreement of the Committee on Appropriations to allow $1,000, but I undertake to say that that amount is superfluous.

Mr. ATKINS. I beg to correct my friend from Kentucky. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice have recommended nothing; I have here their written report.

Mr. DURHAM. I understand that; but they investigated as to what was necessary.

Mr. ATKINS. Very well.

Mr. BLOUNT. I simply want to state that as the Committee on Appropriations do not seem to understand that they agreed to anything, I hope the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky will be accepted as to what is right and proper. I am very sure I did not have any such understanding as has been stated.

Mr. REAGAN. I propose to vote for all appropriations that are necessary, but I have not yet heard any one state what reason there is either for a horse or a mule in this Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I can state it. The Attorney-General is compelled to ride from his Department to the Supreme Court constantly, and carry with him valuable and important papers which are too cumbersome and too large in bulk for him to carry under his arm, and this carriage is for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly; but if you desire to reduce the amount to $500 he could with a mule and a dray have the papers sent up and ride himself in the cars.

Mr. ATKINS. O! Let us give him a thousand dollars.

The question was taken on Mr. RANDALL'S amendment to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw the mule.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not see any reason why the Attorney-General should not have as much as the head of any other Department for this purpose. I think there has been a misunderstanding all around.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the Chair has put the question upon the amendment as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the question.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if the appropriation for the State Department for a horse was $1,000?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes.

Mr. RUSK. Why not make them all alike?

Mr. RANDALL. I think that was too high for the State Department.

Mr. MILLIKEN. While I regard $500 as amply sufficient for either one of the Departments for this purpose, I do not see any reason for making a discrimination.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose there would be objection to going back and making the appropriation for the State Department for this purpose $500 instead of $1,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be no objection to that.

Mr. FOSTER. If we go back at all, there are some other things that we ought to go back to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to going back, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL?]

Mr. FOSTER. I must insist that if we go back for the purpose of making the reduction in this case——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. FOSTER. I object for the purpose of saying——

The CHAIRMAN. There is objection.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection, and let the Departments be placed upon an equality.

Mr. WALLACE, of South Carolina. Then let us equalize up, instead of down.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made to going back, and the question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FOSTER,] as amended upon motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] to reduce the appropriation to $500.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury:
For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, $4,000; assistant solicitor, $2,700; chief clerk, $1,800; two clerks of class four; two clerks of class three; two clerks of class two; two clerks of class one; one messenger; and one laborer; in all, $21,160.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as we have now finished the bill proper, that there is an amendment not yet acted upon which he offered to a former part of the bill, in regard to the divisions of currency and loans.

Mr. RANDALL. That is correct. I ask that the amendment be now acted upon.

The amendment was to the paragraph relating to the Secretary's Office of the Treasury Department; to strike out the following:

Two clerks at $2,500 each; one assistant, at $1,800; ten clerks of class four; six clerks of class three; four clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; fifty clerks, at $900 each; four messengers; five laborers, at $720 each; and six laborers, at $2.25 per diem; in all, $97,686.50.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to consolidate the division of loans and the division of currency into one division, and all work now done in the one division shall be done in the other division, with the following employés, namely: One chief of division, at $2,500; two assistant chiefs of division, at $2,100 each; seven clerks of class four; five clerks of class three; three clerks of class two; four clerks of class one; forty clerks, at $900 each; four messengers, at $840; five laborers, at $720 each; and six laborers, at $2.25 per day each; in all, $81,035.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. An amendment was adopted some time ago giving permission to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to consolidate the offices of store-keeper and gauger. That amendment was adopted at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Since that time I have received an amendment which the Department asks may be adopted in place of the one which was adopted by the Committee of the Whole the other day. It reaches the same result, but gives the officers some additional power.

The amendment already adopted by the Committee of the Whole was as follows:

The said Commissioner may consolidate the offices of gaugers and store-keepers whenever it can be done without detriment to the service at such distilleries whose producing capacity does not exceed forty gallons per day.

The substitute proposed by Mr. RANDALL on behalf of the Department was as follows:

That the store-keeper may, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, impose the duties of store-keeper and gauger upon one officer, where the amount of spirits produced at the distillery to which such officer may be assigned is not sufficient, in the judgment of the Commissioner, to warrant the employment of two officers to perform the separate duties of store-keeper and gauger. The Secretary of the Treasury may issue a commission to such officer as store-keeper and gauger; but the compensation for his services as store-keeper and gauger shall be that of a store-keeper only. And the said officer shall, before entering upon the discharge of such duties, give a bond in the penal sum of not less than $5,000 for the faithful performance of the combined duties of store-keeper and gauger.

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to offer an amendment which I think will meet the approval of the Committee on Appropriations. It is to insert after line 593 the proviso which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to credit in the accounts of internal-revenue officers the value of any stamps which are satisfactorily shown to have been deposited in any post-office for transmission by mail to another officer of internal revenue, but which have failed within a reasonable time to reach their destination.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. FOSTER. To protect the Department against the loss of stamps by transmission in the mails, as provided in the paragraph to which I move this proviso.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like the gentleman to give some instance where such loss has taken place. I had a conference with the Postmaster-General this morning, and he informed me that as much as $20,000,000 of stamps were sent through the mails by that Department, and there was no loss except such as were burned or destroyed in some way.

Mr. FOSTER. There has recently occurred an instance in which a collector, I believe, in the gentleman's own city of Philadelphia lost about three thousand dollars' worth of stamps in the course of transmission——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] that an amendment has already been added at the end of the paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER. My amendment can come in at the appropriate place.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that by adopting this amendment we would adopt a principle which has been steadily resisted in respect to all other public officers during the whole history of the Government. In cases of loss in the Post-Office Department relief has never been permitted through the action of the officers of the Department, but the person suffering the loss has been compelled to come to Congress for relief. Postmasters often lose small amounts by the burning of their offices or by robbery; but it has never been thought safe to allow officers to be exonerated from such losses by settlements in the way indicated in this amendment. I merely want to call attention to the fact that the amendment proposes to overturn with reference to this Department a principle which has been steadily adhered to from the beginning of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. In answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] allow me to say that I resisted and tried to defeat in this House the proposition requiring the Internal-Revenue Department to do what no business man in this country does—transport these stamps through the mails. We make an appropriation for this Department; but if perchance $50,000 or $100,000 worth of these stamps be lost, the Department is short that much in its appropriations. Such a thing must necessarily affect the business of the Department. In view of the fact that in this bill we require the Department to transmit the stamps by mail, all that is desired is that the Department shall have some protection, so that when an appropriation of $450,000 is made for the Department it may know that it is to have the use of that sum.

I was about to state a while ago that recently a loss of $3,000 was incurred in this way by a collector in Philadelphia; and an appeal was made to this House for relief, which has been denied him. I think the mistake is in requiring these stamps to be sent by mail; but the House has thought differently. All I seek, and all the Department seeks, is protection.

Mr. RANDALL. I have reflected somewhat upon this amendment, and in view of the suggestions of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] I feel loth to consent to its adoption. As that gentleman has stated, it would inaugurate a principle which might be dangerous. All other officers of the Government in such matters as this are compelled to come to Congress for relief.

Mr. FOSTER. It is in view of the fact that Congress has refused relief in a given case of this kind that I urge this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I take it that Congress, wherever it refuses relief of this kind, has sound and valid reasons for the refusal. Hence the fact stated by the gentleman would rather militate against the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Any gentleman must see, I think, that without some provision of this kind we do not know in fact how much we are appropriating for this service. The mails may be robbed and a portion of these stamps lost in that way. Hence serious difficulty may arise in the administration of the Department, so far as this item is concerned.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not anticipate any loss in the mails either by robbery from outside parties or by dishonesty of the mail officers. The statement of the Postmaster-General this morning went to show that there is no loss except by absolute destruction (as, for instance, by fire) in the transmission of stamps through the post-offices of the country; that as much as twenty million dollars' worth has been distributed without loss. In addition to this, in the Pacific States gold is constantly transmitted through the mails under the registry system, paying, I believe, six cents an ounce. That is my recollection.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course I am very glad to know that the Post-Office Department is in such admirable shape.

Mr. RANDALL. I am always in favor of doing justice to every public officer.

Mr. FOSTER. But no banking or business house in the country intrusts matters of this kind to the mails.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman objects to the amendment, I withdraw it.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I desire to offer an amendment to strike out in line 1579, page 65, the words "150" and insert "500," so as to make the salary of the examiner of claims in the Department of Justice $3,500, instead of $3,150.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to going back.

Mr. LAWRENCE. If the gentleman will hear me, I am sure——

Mr. RANDALL. I want to get this bill disposed of to-day, and I object to going back. Anything the gentleman might say would have no effect, because he could not have a vote on his proposition.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2 That from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, the annual compensation of clerks of class four shall not exceed $1,600; and the annual compensation of clerks of class three shall not exceed $1,450; and the annual compensation of clerks of class two shall not exceed $1,300. And paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of section 167 of the Revised Statutes, or so much thereof as provides a different compensation for said clerks, and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this section, are hereby repealed.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I move to amend the section just read by adding the following:

And no officer or employé of the Government shall require or request, give to or receive from, any other officer or employé of the same or other person, directly or indirectly, any money, property, or other thing of value for political purposes; and any such officer or employé who shall offend against the provisions of this act shall at once be dismissed from the service of the United States, and also be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof fined not less than $500 nor more than $3,000, and imprisoned not more than one year, at the discretion of the judge trying the case.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state that the Committee on Appropriations have instructed me to say they do not resist the amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman to indulge me a moment. Before those words, to come in as an addition to that section for the purpose of perfecting it, I desire to submit the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the several sums appropriated by this act for each of the several offices and employment therein mentioned shall be the salaries and compensation for such officers and employment respectively from and after the 30th day of June, 1876.

Mr. HOLMAN. The only object of this amendment is to perfect this section and make these the permanent salaries.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I have some remarks which I wish to make on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will first be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. RANDALL. I ask the gentleman from New York to wait until two amendments the committee have to offer are disposed of and then his will be in order.

Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order on the proposition of the gentleman from New York that it changes existing law and is not in order to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Similar amendments are to be found in previous appropriation bills. Last session the Chair remembers several, and he would not like to depart from precedents established at the last session of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. We want to protect your clerks from being levied on.

Mr. HALE. Does the Chair say any amendment of this kind, radically changing existing law, has been ruled in order in any preceding Congress for the last eight years?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not say they were ruled in order, but that they were appended to appropriation bills, not stating whether the question of order was raised or not.

Mr. HALE. Has any such amendment ever been admitted where the question of order was raised and insisted on?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not prepared to answer the gentleman's question. He will, however, overrule the point of order. It is clearly a mode of protecting the appropriation, and is also germane to this section of the bill.

Mr. HALE. It is a matter clearly in violation of the rule, as it changes existing law. It does not in any way come under the sweeping rule, sweeping as it was, adopted at the beginning of this session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided.

Mr. HALE. I venture to say if this is put on no point of order is good against any proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order in his last remark.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order. I understood the gentleman from Maine to consent to the offering of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the amendment to be in order.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the House but a moment in reference to my amendment. The reduction made by the Committee on Appropriations of these salaries is called for by the necessities of the people of the country who are overburdened and now weighed down by excessive taxation, both local and national. The whole people, without regard to party lines or politics, pay these taxes to sustain the national Government. Fully recognizing that fact the majority of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service have instructed me to report the amendment I have sent up to the Clerk's desk in the way of addition to the pending section of this bill.

It is estimated that this reduction in salaries will not make any material difference to the employés of the Government, as my amendment will relieve them from the assessments made for party purposes, and enable each party to enter upon its political campaign or canvass on equal terms. For this reason I have been instructed to submit the amendment, which I hope the House will adopt.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HALE. I move to strike out section 2 as it has been amended.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are many things in this bill which I have sustained and supported, believing them to be right; but this portion of the bill relating to the reduction of the salaries of clerks I have never favored, as my friend the chairman of the committee knows. I move to strike out this second section because I do not believe in the interest of economy—no matter what the condition of the Treasury may be, and we all understand that very well—there is any demand for the reduction of the regular clerks in the Departments here in Washington. These salaries are not extravagant. They begin at $1,200, ranging in classes up to $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800. The rule is that a man in a Department has to go through a long trial, a long experience, a long race for promotion before he obtains a fourth-class clerkship at $1,800. That position represents years of faithful service, years of toil, the giving up of the best years of life. It represents a separation from what has been his home. It represents the breaking up of home connections. It represents the settling in Washington as a home, with all the incidents and expenses and calls and claims that rest upon any other resident of this city. The highest that the clerk can reach is this class at $1,800.

I do not believe there is any call on the part of the country that 10 per cent. should be taken from the salaries of these clerks. My friend says one feature of the bill is that added labor is to be put upon these clerks, and therefore the numbers can be reduced, and I went with him in that proposition. But it also follows from that proposition, or rather is part of it, that when you have reduced the force, which we have agreed to pass, you have piled upon the remaining clerks additional duties. Then you proceed beyond that with another blow at them, taking off from their pay while you add to their labor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these two things cannot proceed together without hardship. The Committee of the Whole has sustained the bill in the reduction of force I believe wisely in many cases, in some cases perhaps too rashly; but it was a reform in many Bureaus which it was high time was inaugurated. But when with that my friend the chairman of the committee seeks, in regard to the clerks whom he retains, to add labor and to cut down pay, he is running a race of economy in which I believe fairness and good sense will not sustain him now or hereafter.

This is in no degree a party question. I do not know that any remonstrance from any gentleman here will break the well-trained band of men that have followed my friend from Pennsylvania. But I warn gentlemen that there is a point where in the cutting down of the salaries of clerks and employés of the Departments the public sentiment will revolt against what is called economy. There is no meanness in the American people, Mr. Chairman. There is no desire to oppress the clerk in Washington. There is no desire to wring out of any man who is an employé of the Government more than what is fair in the way of labor; and there is no desire to pinch him and curtail and pare him and grind him so that in the support of himself and family he every day knows the difference between being comparatively comfortable and being always pinched. And the 10 per cent. reduction, though it may seem small to many gentlemen here, is of such an amount that as applied to the salaries of these clerks makes the difference in every month of the twelve between comparative comfort and the condition of being pinched. And I hope, before this is adopted, even with the incitement to vote for it of economy, as it may be urged by my friend from Pennsylvania or his lieutenant on the committee, that gentlemen will reflect on the fairness and necessity of this measure.

Mr. RANDALL. One of the principles involved in this bill was a 10 per cent. reduction in salaries. We have made an exception in favor of everybody who received not exceeding $1,200, and we do not reduce those salaries at all. However, when we came to the $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800 salaries, we saw no reason why the 10 per cent. reduction should not apply as against them, when we were reducing the salaries above $1,800. For instance, those clerks who received $2,000 have all through this bill been put down at $1,800, a reduction of 10 per cent.

There is no reason in the world why these clerks should not be treated in the same manner as we have treated other officers throughout the Departments receiving over $1,200; nay, more, as we have treated the operatives in the mints, and as the Secretary of the Treasury, as I showed the other day—and I have now the table before me—as the Secretary of the Treasury has recently inaugurated a system of reduction in the custom-houses of the country.

Shall it be said that a republican Secretary of the Treasury is permitted to make all these reductions of 10 per cent. in the custom-houses of the country, and that a democratic House, pledged to reform, should hesitate to perform like service, when a large sum of money can thereby be saved?

Mr. HALE. Does not my friend from Pennsylvania think candidly that there is a great difference between the condition of those who are here in Washington and the condition of those inspectors and deputy collectors who are in their own towns and villages in the custom-house service, half of whom are engaged in other avocations?

Mr. RANDALL. No man regrets more than I do the necessity of cutting anybody down. But I do say if you cut down one set of men you should cut all down. I do further say that we have given great consideration to the matter of reducing salaries; and that we have reached a conclusion which avoids hardships to the men and to the ladies who hold places under $1,200, by providing that neither they nor their families shall be made to suffer by any reduction of salaries of that amount and under. But when we got above that figure we thought this 10 per cent. principle should prevail.

I have studied and reflected over this subject, and I am at a loss to see what consistency there would be in not applying this reduction to the larger salaries in the Departments here in the same manner as the Secretary of the Treasury has applied it to the custom-houses throughout the country, and in the same manner as we have applied it in a measure to the mints of the United States. That is the reason why I adhere to the principle involved in this section. I believe it to be just, and I ask that the committee adopt it.

Mr. MILLER. Before the vote is taken on striking out the section I wish to perfect it by offering the following amendment:

Add at the end of the section the following:

Provided, That hereafter all appointments of clerks in either the fourth, third, or second class shall be made from clerks of the class next below the one to which the appointment shall be made.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that amendment so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

Mr. RANDALL. There should be promotion. It will lead to emulation and give us good officers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EAMES. I move to perfect the section by striking out the last clause, commencing with the word "and" in line 7.

Mr. Chairman, this section affects the salaries of a large portion of the clerks in the Department known as clerks of class two, three, and four. The salaries of these clerks were fixed in 1853, and have not been changed since that period. Now, sir, I am opposed to the change that is proposed by this section, reducing the salaries now fixed by law for the compensation of those clerks. The time that is required in their service, the labor and skill that are required, the cost of living, and all expenses, have not diminished, most certainly, since 1853 down to the present time, and I have failed to hear from the Committee on Appropriations any reason for the proposed reduction excepting that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has asserted and reasserted, as have other gentlemen on the floor, that in order to be consistent with other portions of the bill it is necessary to make a reduction of 10 per cent. from the pay of this class of clerks.

Now, sir, for one I do not assent to the application of any such plan as that in reducing the pay of any officer who is now employed by the Government. I do not think that any arbitrary rule of that kind is just. I believe that when we undertake to change the salaries of those employed in the Government we should make the change in every instance upon the facts that surround it, and either increase the salary or diminish it as justice may require.

I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] to strike out this section from the bill, and I propose to improve the opportunity afforded me by the amendment which I have offered by briefly putting myself on record upon the provisions of this bill before the debate closes.

Mr. Chairman, I am, with every republican in the House, in favor of economy, retrenchment, and reform in the administration of the Government in every branch of its service. But I am not in favor of that kind of economy, retrenchment, and reform which proposes to make a great reduction in the expenditures of the Government by an indiscriminate reduction of pay or force by the application of any arbitrary rule of a fixed percentage of pay and a fixed percentage of force, regardless of a fair compensation for services rendered or of the force which is necessary to maintain the efficiency of the public service.

The economy of which I am in favor is that which will reduce the pay of all in the employ of the Government and all who are paid for their services from the Treasury to a reasonable compensation for the services which they render. The retrenchment to which I assent is that which dispenses with the services of every person not required for the efficient performance of the publice service. And the reform which I approve is that which will secure to the Government the services of persons who are honest and competent to discharge the duties of the positions in which they are employed.

True economy demands that all persons in the service of the Government shall be fairly paid for the services which they render and true retrenchment requires that a sufficient force shall be employed for the efficient discharge of the public service. It is a false economy and retrenchment to apply to the public service any different rule, and any economy or retrenchment based upon the idea that apparently a large expense may be saved by an indiscriminate reduction of a fixed percentage of the present pay and a fixed percentage of the present force, without regard either to just pay for services performed or force required for the proper and efficient discharge of the public service, is false and delusive. Such a rule must of necessity operate unjustly and must result in impairing the efficiency of the public service. It is and can be based on no sound reason or principle and never ought to be adopted by this House.

The value of services depends upon the nature and character of the services rendered, the time employed, and the skill and ability necessary for the proper performance of the service. The force required depends upon the work to be done. And it is only by the facts of each case that it can be ascertained what reduction either of pay or force can be made in any Department of the Government without impairing its efficiency.

In every case in which any person is employed in the service of the Government whose services are not required, I am in favor of his discharge; and in every case where an employé of the Government is paid more than a reasonable compensation for his services, I am in favor of reducing his pay. The same rule ought to be applied to all who are paid for services from the Treasury. I do not except a member of Congress.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that $5,000 per annum is an unreasonable compensation for the services of a member of Congress. This office is one of great labor, honor, and responsibility. Its compensation ought to be reasonable and sufficient in amount to enable any American citizen who is elected to act independently and according to his convictions in the high trusts which it imposes. Its amount ought to be determined by the time employed, the nature of the services required, and the ability requisite for the proper discharge of the duties of the place. But if an arbitrary rule is to be applied in the reduction of pay for Government services, and this rule is applied to reduce the burden of taxation and to relieve the depressed industries of the country, then I insist upon the application of the same rule to the pay of a member of Congress as is applied to the pay of others who are compensated for their services from the Treasury of the United States. Certainly no delicacy ought to prevent the application of this rule to members of Congress. The Constitution imposes upon Congress the duty of determining the compensation of its members. And if the rule of reduction is to be applied to others a true delicacy would seem to require its application to ourselves at the same time that we apply it to others.

Nor is there any reason, in my judgment, in the assertion that a contract exists between the people and a member of Congress that he should receive for the Congress the compensation fixed by law when he enters upon the discharge of the duties of the office. Every member of Congress accepts his place and holds it subject to any law which may be passed changing the existing law in this respect. And any law changing the compensation expresses the contract from the time the law takes effect. The Constitution provides that members of Congress shall receive a compensation to be paid out of the Treasury. It does not require that this compensation shall be by the day and during actual attendance or an annual salary; nor does it provide the time when it shall be fixed or the period during which it shall continue. It may be changed from month to month or from year to year by act of Congress. And surely the Constitution does not recognize any distinction upon a question of compensation between the services of a member of Congress and other persons in the service of the Government.

The rule is, or ought to be, that whoever is in the service of the Government should be paid a reasonable compensation for the services which he performs. It ought to be the same rule, whether applied to a member of Congress or to the humblest employé of the Government. Both are paid from the Treasury. And in making this application I insist that the reduction should be made with reference to the time when the salaries were fixed. If the pay of a clerk in 1853 was $1,800 and that of a member of Congress at the same time was $3,000, if, as applied to the clerk, 10 per cent. is deducted from $1,800, the compensation of a member of Congress should be reduced to $3,000, his pay at that time, and the 10 per cent. taken from this amount, and not, as in this bill, from his present salary of $5,000.

Such a reduction would be an equitable application of an unjust and arbitrary rule, and it would save to the Treasury annually about $700,000, and, upon an arbitrary reduction of 10 per cent., ought to be made.

The clerks and other employés of the Government work eight hours a day, and most of them through the year. A member of Congress is engaged as such only about ten months in a Congress of two years. To reduce these small salaries, which are barely sufficient to meet the expenses of a frugal living, and to refuse to make a like reduction in our own pay would, it seems to me, be a great injustice as well to ourselves as to the employés in the public service whose compensation will be determined by our action.

Mr. Chairman, I do not assent to this arbitrary rule of reducing the pay and force of the public service. It cannot be justified either upon reason or principle. It is false in theory and will be detrimental to the public service in practice.

I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I renew the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, has had a great deal to say about consistency; he has had a great deal to say about his 10 per cent. reduction of salaries and his 20 per cent. reduction of force.

There never was anything more delusive than this kind of talk. There has been no such thing as a 10 per cent. reduction. A reduction in salaries has been made of 25 per cent. where it suited him, of 30 per cent. where it suited him, and of 10 per cent. where it suited him. As to the reduction in force, the reduction has been 20 per cent. in some places, 7 per cent. in others, and 40 per cent. in others; so that this principle which has been asserted ought not now at this time to have any weight with this House. The simple question that we are to consider now is this proposed reduction of the salaries of clerks of classes two, three, and four.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this classification of clerks was made in 1853 in democratic days, made too by the assistance of my venerable friend from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations, and received his sanction and indorsement at that time. It was concurred in by my able friend and colleague from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] through all the years of democratic administration without any objection from him. My other friend on the committee, from Tennessee, [Mr. ATKINS,] was also here and served in democratic Houses, and favored the salaries as now fixed by law, on a gold basis too, when the cost of living in this city was not more than 60 per cent. what it is to-day.

Sir, I believe, as gentlemen have said, in economy, retrenchment, and reform, but this kind of economy and retrenchment is the economy and retrenchment of meanness, and nothing else. Gentlemen talk about consistency, and for that purpose they propose to reduce the salaries of members of Congress 10 per cent., and claim that that is consistent. Why, sir, as has been said before, the salary of a member of Congress was $3,000 a year when the salaries of these clerks were fixed, and if members on the other side of the House desire to be consistent at all, they must reduce their own salary to a 10 per cent. reduction from what it was at that time.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has alluded to the fact that the present able Secretary of the Treasury has reduced salaries. He has reduced salaries, but what are they? When were those salaries fixed? They were fixed during the war, and they were high in comparison to the salaries of these poor clerks and the Secretary has reduced them, and wherever he could reduce them he has done it. He has done it with good judgment and good sense, and wherever a reduction could be made it has been made.

Now, I do not know that I have anything further to say. I have opposed many of the provisions of this bill because I thought they were too sweeping, too radical. I believe, as I said when the debate upon this bill was opened, that a reduction of 20 per cent. in the force might be made. We have now substantially finished the consideration of this bill in Committee of the Whole and a reduction of force has been made of from 25 to 30 per cent. I believe, as I have said several times along during the debate, that that reduction is too great and that you will seriously cripple the operations of many of the Departments of the Government if the bill as it now stands shall become a law. I have made my protest; I have done what I thought to be my duty, and I now submit the matter to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope I shall have the honor of a hearing from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] for at least a moment, while I state a little more clearly a fact which I before attempted to present. My friend assumes that we have made a reduction in the employés of the Government in the several Departments as classified in 1853 in what is known as the Hunter bill, which was an amendment to an appropriation bill like this. He refers to that classification as having been fixed during what he is pleased to call democratic times. Now, let me show how vastly he is mistaken. The salaries then ranged from $900, $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800.

Mr. FOSTER. Right there I want to get at the facts.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do not break in upon me now.

Mr. FOSTER. Right there. No subterfuge. I want to get at the facts. Was not the compensation of the first, second, third, and fourth class clerks then fixed as they stand to-day?

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend had heard me through——

Mr. FOSTER. Answer; yes or no.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman had heard——

Mr. FOSTER. I say they were.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no occasion to interrupt me, for I have not stated my proposition.

Mr. FOSTER. Answer my question.

Mr. HOLMAN. In 1853 the salaries of the clerks in the Departments of the Government as then classified were $900, $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800, and for the chief clerks $2,000. That was the classification of the Hunter bill of 1852 and 1853. What is the range of salaries in the bill now before us? It is $900, $1,000, $1,200, $1,400, $1,450, $1,600, $1,800, $2,000, $2,200, $2,250, $2,500, $2,700, and $3,150. That is the difference between the classification of the Hunter bill and the classification of this bill. The salaries under the Hunter bill ranged from $900 to $2,000, and under this bill they range from $900 to $3,150. Therefore the scale of clerical salaries under this bill is vastly disproportioned to those of the Hunter bill, considering even the difference in value of money and the growth in the population of the country.

Now to talk about this bill fixing salaries upon which citizens in public employment cannot live is, in my judgment, an absolute absurdity. A young gentleman assured me this very day, a gentleman competent to fill any clerkship in any Department of the Government, that for several years he had been employed in a subordinate clerkship in one of the pension agencies of the country at a salary of $40 per month, and he deemed it at least a reasonable compensation. I know that would be considered too low according to the view that was entertained when we fixed the salaries of the Departments of the Government, but when you come to examine the salaries paid by the Post-Office Department, to which you give a sum in gross to be paid in small sums to clerks employed by postmasters, with a limit only as to the highest amount to be paid, you will find salaries running down as low as $280 and $340 a year, and very few above $900. That is where the postmaster fixes the salaries and pays them out of the amount awarded to him by the Post-Office Department. If you make your calculations based upon any other employments, I will say that the salaries provided by this bill are vastly above the ordinary range of salaries. I must say further that they are greatly beyond the range of salaries paid in private life for corresponding employment.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, let us get right down to the question. This section relates to first, second, third, and fourth class clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; for the fourth-class clerks were the highest.

Mr. FOSTER. Are not the salaries now paid to the clerks of those classes the exact salaries fixed by the democrats in 1853?

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I rise to a point of order, which is that debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. Is that in order? The gentleman has spoken three or four times.

Mr. FOSTER. All I want is to convict the democratic party to-day of going back on the salaries which they fixed in 1853, and which were fixed then by the vote of at least one gentleman now on the Committee of Appropriations, [Mr. SINGLETON,] and by other democrats who were in this House for years after that classification was made.

Mr. RANDALL. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to have the democracy convicted and myself convicted of striving in every direction to economize the expenditures of this Government.

Now, as to one remark made by the gentleman from Ohio, I think that if he would adopt a rule such as I would suggest he would be a somewhat better legislator. He says that this is not real economy, but it is the economy of meanness. Now, I believe that I am warranted in being mean when I am called upon to expend other people's money. If the gentleman and I were expending our own money, we might perhaps exercise that degree of liberality which he wants us as legislators to exhibit.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman then confesses that it is mean?

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I do not consider that it is mean to be chary of spending other people's money; but that is the way the gentleman characterized it, and I take it as he stated it.

Now, sir, the Secretary of the Treasury, in making the reductions which he has recommended, has not exercised that discrimination which has been exhibited by our committee; nor has he stopped to think of the hardships which may be suffered by persons receiving small salaries. Why, sir, upon an examination of his reductions of one million and a half of dollars in the custom-houses of the country, in the expenditures from the permanent appropriation for the collection of customs dues, it will be found that he has arbitrarily reduced salaries of $1,200 about 40 per cent., down in some instances to $800. This we did not desire to do. We wanted to make these reductions as little burdensome as possible. We wanted to make our reductions as moderate as would be admissible in view of the present financial condition of the country and the general prostration of business. I hope, therefore, that the Committee of the Whole will not hesitate to adopt this reasonable proposition, embracing a reduction which is very moderate as compared with that which has been proposed by a Secretary of the Treasury adverse to our side of the House. Why we should hesitate under such circumstances to follow his example I am at a loss to conceive.

Mr. O'NEILL. Allow me to say to the gentleman that the Secretary of the Treasury reduced, as I understand, the pay of the officers in the custom-houses temporarily, owing to a falling off in the revenues of the Government, and with no intention of making those reductions permanent.

Mr. RANDALL. Why, sir, the gentleman is undertaking to detract from the merit of his own Secretary. I do not understand any such thing as the gentleman states. I understand the Secretary of the Treasury to have made these as permanent reductions, and I understand him further to justify them as such.

Mr. O'NEILL. I do not undertake to detract from the Secretary or to defend him; but I undertake to say that the reductions have been made as temporary reductions.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is mistaken. The Secretary——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted, and more than exhausted.

Mr. RANDALL. Still I hope I may be permitted to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has asked us to incorporate in this bill a reduction of salaries of custom-house officers that he had not the power to reach because their pay is fixed by law.

Mr. O'NEILL. Then he has reached them without authority of law; for he has made the reductions.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I believe I have now the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to offer an amendment which I indicated some time ago.

Mr. RANDALL. I will consent to the offering of that amendment after the debate is closed on this section. I want to dispose of it.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to offer an amendment to this section.

Mr. RANDALL. I cannot prevent that, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, debate on this section will be regarded as terminated.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend the section by inserting after the first clause, these words:

And no member of Congress shall recommend the appointment or continuance in office, or removal therefrom, of any clerk or employé in any of these Departments unless the head thereof shall first apply for his advice in writing.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to the House voting on this amendment, so far as I am concerned.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 108, noes 57.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, and Mr. FRYE were appointed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. I submit that this amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late to raise that question.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 97.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move to amend by striking out in line 1579, page 65, the words "150" and inserting "500;" so as to make the salary of the examiner of claims in the Department of Justice, $3,500, instead of $3,150.

If I can get the attention of the committee, I wish to say a word.

Mr. RANDALL. Now the gentleman does not want to debate the amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I only want to say a few words.

Mr. ATKINS. I object to going back.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the amendment cannot be entertained.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I submit the point of order comes too late after I commenced to make my remarks on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was endeavoring to obtain order in the committee. The question of objection was not put to the committee. Objection is now made to going back and insisted on, and the amendment cannot be received.

Mr. WHITE. With the consent of the chairman of the committee, I desire on page 27 to strike out that part which provides for paying informers and spies.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I object.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. HALE to strike out the section as amended.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 113.

So the motion to strike out was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to institute a careful scrutiny of the present condition and competence of the force employed in the collection of revenue from customs, with a view of reducing the number of the same; and he is hereby required to issue regulations directing a reduction of 10 per cent. on the annual salaries of all the collectors of customs and officers employed in such service and their subordinates of every grade whose compensation exceeds $1,200 per annum, to take effect on and after July 1, 1876.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by adding the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the reduction of 10 per cent. herein provided for shall not apply to those salaries or compensations already reduced by the Secretary of the Treasury since June 30, 1875.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want the reduction to operate upon those already reduced below that sum by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to add the words to the gentleman's amendment, "below that sum."

Mr. HARRISON. It should be "below that percentage."

Mr. RANDALL. Let those words be added to my amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the management of all Indian affairs, and of all matters arising out of Indian relations be, and the same is hereby, transferred from the Department of the Interior to the War Department, and the same is hereby placed under the Secretary of War agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe: And provided further, That the Office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management of Indian affairs and of matters arising out of Indian relations is hereby lodged with the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the duties now being intrusted to and performed by Indian agents and other officials and employés of every kind and description will be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army.

Mr. SEELYE. I rise to a point of order, namely, that this section should be excluded from the bill, as it does not on the face of it run in the line of retrenchment and is not germane to an appropriation bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to make a suggestion which may avoid the discussion of the point of order at this time. The present occupant of the Chair is known to have taken an active part in the discussion of this bill, and it will be somewhat embarrassing for him to decide the question. I suggest therefore, by unanimous consent, that an agreement be entered into, the point of order shall be allowed to be raised to this section in the House, and that it be passed over at this time in the committee, to be raised hereafter in the House. It will relieve the present occupant of the Chair of embarrassment and at the same time cause no delay to the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. GARFIELD. That the gentleman from Massachusetts be allowed to reserve his point of order until the bill is taken into the House, and that the question shall be there decided whether or not it conflicts with the rule of the House.

Mr. HOOKER. The same debate to be allowed in the House as in the Committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say in regard to the point of order that by examination of the estimates it will be seen there is an estimate for the Indian Bureau in the Interior Department, which, if this section is adopted, will render unnecessary any appropriation in this regard, and, therefore, it goes directly in concurrence with the rule we adopted, that legislation may be incorporated where it is proposed to retrench. I say that no appropriation is necessary if this section be adopted, such as would be if it were not embraced in the bill.

Mr. SEELYE. I do not wish to discuss the point of order, provided the suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio is adopted by the committee. With that understanding, I am willing to waive it here. I wish simply to state in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this fact, if it be a fact, does not appear until after the discussion. It is not prima facie evident upon the section, and therefore it is not in order in an appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Quite as much so as the section fixing the salaries of the three classes of clerks. It does not appear there.

Mr. SEELYE. I suppose it does appear if a reduction of salary is proposed it is apparently in the line of retrenchment. Here there is no reduction of salary.

Mr. RANDALL. It is more than a reduction of salary—it is striking out a large number of officers altogether.

Mr. SEELYE. But, Mr. Chairman, that is disputed. That is exactly the point in dispute which involves an argument to determine.

Mr. RANDALL. This provides for no Indian bureau anywhere, and the effect of the section is to make unnecessary any appropriation for an Indian bureau in the Department of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say this, and he says it with the concurrence of the Speaker of the House whose judgment he has taken, as well as that of some other parliamentarians, that the present occupant of the chair does not like to be compelled to decide this matter and to take it from the decision of the committee. The House has already passed upon the matter in a bill transferring the management of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department. The Chair hopes the committee will do him the favor not to ask him to decide the question, but that they will allow it to go into the House, where the point can be made, and will be no doubt satisfactorily decided by the Speaker himself. Is there objection to that proposition? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. In other words, we will have to vote on that section in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order may be raised in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not see any point in that. I think the matter is very clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the point of order is simply reserved for decision in the House by the Speaker of the House. Nothing else has been done or agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair will understand this, that if the committee adopt this section no vote in the House can be reached on it.

The CHAIRMAN. This section will go into the House as adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GARFIELD. It goes into the House as adopted, subject to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment, to come in after section 5:

That the fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll shall be employed during the current year, and the sum of money necessary to pay the messengers on that roll is hereby appropriated.

I wish to say just a word. For a great many years the appropriations have been made from time to time for the messengers on this particular roll, but never in a very regular way. It is necessary that some messengers should be retained here during the summer. All the other messengers are employed during the session of Congress only. I therefore propose to incorporate this provision, so as to avoid the deficiency appropriations which we have been compelled to make from time to time. For instance, during the present session of Congress the messengers on that roll are being paid by a deficiency appropriation. There seems to be no reason for that. These messengers will be employed very probably during the vacation of Congress, and they are the only ones who it is provided may be retained during the vacation. I trust there will be no objection to the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENKS. I offer the following, as a new section, after section 4:

SEC. —. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1877, the Pension Bureau of the United States, with all its duties, funds, accounts, claims, records, books, papers, property, and appurtenances, shall be transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of War.

That the Secretary of War shall exercise all the powers and discharge all the duties heretofore exercised and performed by the Secretary of the Interior in relation to pensioners and the Pension Bureau; and all accounts shall be subject to adjustment by the officers of the Treasury now having charge of the department of accounts of said Bureau and the pension agents and agencies.

That on and after the date aforesaid there is hereby established in the War Department an office to be known as the Pension Office; and the Secretary of War shall detail from the commissioned officers of the Army an officer to take charge of said office, and administer its affairs under regulations to be made and promulgated by the Secretary of War; the officer so detailed shall, for the time he may be detailed to the charge of the Pension Office, have the pay and allowances of a colonel, and shall perform all the duties now performed by the Commissioner of Pensions.

That on and after the date aforesaid the office of pension agent and pension agencies for the disbursement of the pension fund shall be abolished and discontinued; and on and after the payment of the quarterly payment due pensioners on the 4th day of June, 1877, all funds remaining in their hands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SINNICKSON. I raise the point of order that this amendment changes existing law, is not germane, and does not reduce expenditure.

Mr. RUSK. I wish to add another point. This transfer, it is proposed, shall not take effect until July, 1877, a year from next July. Why should it be offered on this bill, which makes appropriations for the year ending June 30, 1877? I am also prepared to show, if permitted, that it is not economy, that it is not retrenchment.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment comes within almost precisely the same category as the amendment transferring the management of Indian affairs from the Interior to the War Department.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir. We have made an appropriation in this bill for the Pension Bureau, which we have not done for the Indian Bureau.

Mr. HURLBUT. We have already appropriated the money to carry on the Bureau for the next fiscal year. This amendment goes beyond the time covered by this bill.

Mr. JENKS. I had the leave of the Committee on Appropriations to introduce what I have offered as an amendment to the bill. They now request that I should withdraw it. In conformity with that request I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to say that in his opinion the question as to economy is very different as regards the removal of the Pension Bureau and as regards the removal of the Indian Bureau.

The Clerk read the fifth and last section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act, either in the reduction of salaries or of the number of officers or of employés, as made by the provisions of this act, or conflicting with any other of its provisions, are hereby repealed; and the words "during the session," as used in this act, are intended to, and shall be construed to, mean four months.

Mr. WHITE. I offer the following amendment:

Insert after the semi-colon, in line 5 of the section, the words, "Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as authorizing any payment of spies or detectives for information against persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws."

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I make the point of order that that is not germane to the pending proposition.

Mr. WHITE. I think it is germane to the bill. This section, as I understand it, applies to the entire bill. So does my amendment. I will await the ruling of the Chair on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, my reason for offering this amendment is that a great deal of unnecessary annoyance is given to a large class of persons throughout the entire South. I admit that these persons are violators of the law, but I say here upon this floor that that violation of law is frequently brought about by those very men that you are proposing to appropriate here for. These spies in some cases have been the cause of these persons being guilty of breaking the law. They are taken from their homes, sometimes one hundred or two hundred miles, and the whole purpose and the entire result of this procedure are to give fees to a class of officers who are hungry for pay. Now if you cut off the pay you cut off this class of informers. I desire to say that this very day I had a conversation with the Attorney-General on this subject, and it was in regard to a person who is in prison for a violation of the law. I will give you the case, so that you may understand the variety of cases that may arise under the law. A man had sold a pint of whisky that he had not manufactured himself at all, but he had sold it in violation of the law.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I rise to a question of order. The noise and confusion prevailing in the Hall is such that we cannot hear the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. WHITE. This may seem to the committee to be a very small matter, but it is a matter of considerable importance to a large number of poor persons. I am satisfied that if some large manufacturing corporation or moneyed corporation was interested in this amendment better attention would be given to it. I know that there are men on this floor who are as much interested in this matter as I am, but from some unknown cause they are indifferent to the amendment.

I have the word of the Attorney-General but a few hours ago that every day, sometimes, he says, that if one does not come one day, the next day two or three come, so that on an average one member of Congress comes to him once a day to ask that pardon be granted to some man who has violated the law, and they bring up these little cases that I am speaking about. I asked him to-day to pardon a man and he said that the law was inflexible, that it required these men to be punished, and that the whole system was wrong of giving money to pay for spies and informers. He said that if that system was abolished he would not be applied to as often for pardon of persons in prison. Now, members on the floor know whether I am stating facts or not, and whether they have been on the same mission to the Attorney-General that I was on to-day. I ask that no money be given for spies or informers, and if you will do that I will warrant that none of these poor men will be put in prison. When men violate the law on a large scale, it will be for the interest of large whisky distillers to bring them to justice. The case which I was stating when I was interrupted was this: A man bought a jug of whisky and on his way home he met a friend who asked him to sell him a pint, and he sold him a pint, not thinking that he was violating the law. That man now lies in prison, and it all comes from our paying for spies and informers. I hope that my amendment will be adopted.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 55, noes 76.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I think that if the committee had understood the amendment they would not have voted it down.

Mr. DENISON. I offer an amendment with regard to which I presume the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will be entirely in accord with me.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. All sums of money which shall be paid or expended by virtue of this act from the Treasury of the United States shall be so paid and expended in the lawful coin of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the amendment by adding the words "after the 1st of January, 1879."

Mr. DENISON. I did not consult the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations who reported this bill before I offered my amendment; but from what I have heard him say upon this floor I had no doubt that it would meet with his entire approval, and for that reason I did not cross the floor to consult him. I accept his amendment to my amendment with great pleasure.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the word "coin," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "money."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. I ask for the reading of the amendment as it now stands.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. All sums of money which shall be paid or expended by virtue of this act from the Treasury of the United States shall be so paid and expended in lawful money of the United States after the 1st of January, 1879.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no necessity for any such amendment as that, and I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. PRATT. I rise to a point of order, and it is that all the payments under this bill will be made before that amendment would take effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late.

The question was taken on the amendment as amended, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

Whenever, in the judgment of the head of any Department, the duties assigned to a clerk of one class can be as well performed by a clerk of a lower class or by a female clerk, it shall be lawful for him to diminish the number of clerks of the higher grade and increase the number of clerks of the lower grade to the same extent.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

Mr. RANDALL. We have no objection to that.

Mr. HOAR. If there is no objection to the amendment, I will not debate it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENKS. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk as additional sections to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1877, the office of pension agent and the pension agencies for the disbursement of the pension fund shall be abolished and discontinued, and thereafter the duties heretofore performed by them shall be performed by the financial division of the Pension Bureau, and on and after the payment of the quarterly payment due pensioners on the 4th day of June, 1877, all funds remaining in their hands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States

SEC. —. That section 4782 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows: "In addition to the compensation allowed in this title, each pension agent shall be allowed, as full compensation for all service, including postage required by the provisions of sections 4764 and 4765, the sum of thirty cents, and no more, for each voucher prepared and paid by him, which amount shall be paid by the United States," and the amendment thereto by proviso in the act approved the 20th day of June, 1874, which is as follows: "That the fees for preparing vouchers and administering oaths, which are now by law thirty cents in each case, shall hereafterbe twenty-five cents for the same, and no more," are hereby repealed.

Mr. RUSK. I raise the same point of order on that amendment as I did upon the other amendment offered by the gentleman; that it does not take effect until the 1st of July, 1877; and if that point is not sufficient I have another to urge.

The CHAIRMAN. It is almost impossible for the Chair to decide as to whether this amendment is in the line of retrenchment or not from a cursory reading unless he had examined all the statutes on the subject, but he is loath to take this matter from the judgment of the committee. The Chair will be inclined to allow the committee to vote upon it. All the rulings of the Chair since we have been in Committee of the Whole on this bill have been with that liberal view, not to decide for himself, but to allow, if possible, these questions to be decided by the House. The Chair overrules the point of order, and will submit the question to the committee.

Mr. RUSK. The Chair has omitted to notice the point of order I raised, which was that the proposed amendment will have no effect until July 1, 1877, and this bill is to go into operation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877.

The CHAIRMAN. Nearly all our laws are prospective in their operation.

Mr. RUSK. If the Chair had not ruled the amendment in order, I was prepared to show that it was not in the interest of economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled the amendment in order, and will submit it to a vote of the committee.

The amendment was not agreed to upon a division—ayes 59, noes 90.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I move to amend the fifth section of the bill by inserting after the word "repealed" that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the following:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any payment to spies or informers.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 80, noes 79.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. HOLMAN called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

Mr. RANDALL. There is nothing in this bill that authorizes the employment of spies or informers.

Mr. WHITE. I differ with the gentleman, and I object to debate.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 75, nays 79.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. By instruction of the Committee on Appropriations I ask permission to go back to line 824 of this bill.

There was no objection.

The portion of the bill referred to was as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to discontinue the depositories at Buffalo, New York; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; Santa Fé, New Mexico, and Tucson, Arizona.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to amend by striking out the words "Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania." The effect of that amendment will be to continue the depository at Pittsburgh.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman to include in his amendment "that the office of appraiser at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, is hereby abolished."

Mr. RANDALL. That can be provided for in another bill.

The amendment moved by Mr. RANDALL was adopted.

Mr. GLOVER. I move as an additional section that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the executive officers of the Government are hereby prohibited from employing any clerk, agent, engineer, draughtsman, messenger, watchman, laborer, or other employé in any of the Executive Departments in the city of Washington or elsewhere, except those for whom specific appropriations are made in this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the committee rise and report this bill, with the amendments, to the House, with a recommendation that the amendments be concurred in, and the bill, as amended, passed.

Mr. HURLBUT. I would like to offer an amendment to the title of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. The title of the bill is not involved now.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] to consent to a separate vote in the House on the amendment I offered fixing the salaries of members of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman can have a separate vote on any amendment that has been adopted to this bill.

Mr. FOSTER. My amendment was not adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Then it is not in order under the rules to have a vote on it in the House.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COX reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, pursuant to the order of the House, had had under consideration the special order, being a bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be concurred in and the bill, as amended, passed.

Mr. RANDALL. I move the previous question on the bill and pending amendments.

Mr. SEELYE. I desire to raise a point of order on section 4 of this bill, providing for the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. The point of order was raised in Committee of the Whole, and postponed for the decision of the Speaker of the House.

Mr. COX. I suggest to the gentleman to wait until that portion of the bill is reached in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no disposition to prevent the point of order from being raised; that can be done after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. SEELYE With that understanding I will not press it now.

The previous question was then seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. COX. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no.

Mr. HURLBUT. There are several amendments upon which separate votes must be taken.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not hear any one ask for a separate vote on any amendment.

Mr. HURLBUT. It is now nearly six o'clock.

Mr. COX. I insist upon my motion to adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL. Unless we dispose of this bill to-night we will destroy the private-bill day of to-morrow.

Mr. COX. Private bills will not interfere with the passage of this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not obstruct the passage of this bill.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to withdraw his motion to adjourn, and allow me to make a report.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to any other business.

Mr. COX. I insist upon my motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 74, noes 75.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. COX called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COX and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 94 in the affirmative.

Before the negative vote was counted,

Mr. RANDALL said: I recognize the power of hunger [laughter] and will not call for a further count.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MACKEY, of South Carolina, was granted leave of absence for one week on account of important business.

Mr. CAMPBELL was granted leave of absence for twelve days.

The motion of Mr. COX was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BANNING: The petition of S. G. Going, veterinary surgeon First United States Cavalry, that veterinary surgeons in the United States Army be placed on the same footing as Army surgeons, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRADLEY: Resolutions of the Michigan State board of health, that the Signal Service Bureau be in no way abridged, but rather increased; that it be permanently organized, and that its sphere of labor be enlarged, especially in the direction of obtaining and recording meteorological data bearing still more closely upon important questions relating to the public health, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama: Papers relating to the claim of Martha H. Bone, of Winchester, Tennessee, for property taken by the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COCHRANE: Two petitions of dealers in and consumers of sal-soda, bicarbonate of soda, caustic soda, and alum, citizens of Pennsylvania, that said articles be not placed on the free list, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. DOBBINS: Papers relating to the petition of Laura W. De Camp, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOLMAN: Papers relating to the claim of Milton B. Duffield, late United States marshal for the Territory of Arizona, for compensation for extra services rendered and for court, traveling, and other expenses incurred by him while in the discharge of the duties of said office, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. KIMBALL: The petition of Enoch Totten, administrator of estate of William A. Lloyd, deceased, for compensation for services rendered during the late war as a secret agent of the United States, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LEWIS: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Tuscaloosa to Pikeville, Alabama, by way of Fayette Court House, in said State, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: Resolutions of the Patrons of Husbandry of Yuba City grange, California, for such legislation as will prevent the destruction of arable lands in said State by débris from hydraulic mines, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McFARLAND: The petition of Elizabeth Bray, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: Memorial of J. Shortess, of Joplin, Jasper County, Missouri, regarding the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River from Saint Louis to the Gulf of Mexico, suggesting a more perfect system of levees to prevent the overflow of said river and to reclaim the adjacent lands and render them more valuable for agricultural purposes, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PIPER: Resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, urging the entire delegation to Congress from the Pacific coast to use their influence in procuring the prompt passage of the bill now before the House of Representatives to carry into effect the Hawaiian treaty, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. PLATT: Two petitions of citizens of Owego, New York, against tariff changes, to the same committee.

By Mr. STONE: The petition of workingmen of the county of Saint Louis, Missouri, that the tariff laws be left undisturbed for the present, and, when alterations are made therein, at a more favorable time, that counsel be taken of constituents rather than from the industial and commercial enemies of this country, to the same committee.

Also, the petitions of brewers, druggists, wholesale liquor-dealers, and grocers, bottlers, and others, citizens of Galveston, Texas; San Francisco, California; Montgomery, Alabama; Atlanta, Georgia; Cleveland, Ohio; Milwaukee, Wisconsin; New Orleans, Louisiana; Saint Louis, Missouri; Sacramento, California, and Memphis, Tennessee, that corks and manufactures of cork be placed on the free list, to the same committee.

By Mr. TURNEY: Two petitions signed by 107 business men and firms of Uniontown, Fayette County, Pennsylvania, against any reduction of present tariff rates, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of 43 workingmen and business men of Fayette County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the same committee.

By Mr. WIGGINTON: The petition of D. W. Dickey and all other settlers on the Roland grant, Stanislaus County, California, that the Western Pacific Railroad Company be granted scrip or other lands in lieu of said lands within the limits of said grant, or such other relief as will prevent their being ejected from the lands they have settled in good faith, to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. WILLARD: Resolutions of the Michigan State board of health, that the Signal Service Bureau be in no way abridged, but rather increased; that it be permanently organized, and that its sphere of labor be enlarged, especially in the direction of obtaining and recording meteorological data bearing still more closely upon important questions relating to the public health, to the Committee on Appropriations.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 28, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 3260) to remove the disabilities of Lawrence S. Baker, of Tarborough, North Carolina; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3264) to remove the political disabilities of C. H. Kennedy, of Virginia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEY presented the petition of James B. Guthrie, postmaster at Paris, Tennessee, praying that he may be refunded $301.30 paid by him to make good that amount stolen from his office by burglars; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of workingmen of Muskingum County, Ohio, remonstrating against any change in the present tariff law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of pensioners of Monson, Hampden County, Massachusetts, praying that the method now employed for paying pensioners may not be changed; which was referred to the Select Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service.

Mr. BURNSIDE presented the petition of Henry Howard, Henry Chase, and other citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, praying for an amendment to the steamboat law; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SARGENT presented the petition of Daniel Richards, respecting the murder of his wife by Sioux and Arapaho Indians, and praying that an amount of money sufficient to compensate him for property taken and destroyed by them at the time be withheld from the annuities of the tribes; which was referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which I ask may be read and printed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
Albany, April 21, 1876.

Whereas the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States renders inoperative and void the laws of this State heretofore enacted for the protection of emigrants and the prevention of their becoming a charge upon any city, town, or county of this State within five years from their landing at the port of New York, on the ground that such laws are in violation of the Constitution, and that the power to legislate on this subject is exclusively in the Federal Congress; and whereas the importance of the subject demands immediate attention: Therefore,

Resolved, (if the senate concur,) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their influence to secure without delay the legislation necessary and requisite, as well for the protection of the emigrants, as for the security of the cities, towns, and counties of this State.

By order:

EDW. M. JOHNSON, Clerk.

IN SENATE, April 21, 1876.

Concurred in without amendment.
By order:

HENRY A. GLIDDEN, Clerk.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. BAYARD. I present the petition of Mrs. Amelia Ferguson, widow of Professor James Ferguson, deceased, praying for relief. I will take occasion to say that this application is one of especial merit. The husband of this lady was for thirty-four years in the service of the United States in the Coast Survey and in the scientific department attached to the Observatory, and certificates of his unusual merit and skill accompany these papers. I trust the committee may make a favorable report in her favor. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1875.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print copies for distribution of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, to report on it in part. I report a resolution to print 25,000 copies of this document for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture. These copies are required by him to carry on his business. They are a part of the machinery of his Department. He has a great number of correspondents all over the country who furnish him with information, very small from each one it is true but amounting to an immense aggregate value, with regard to the conditional prospects of the crops; and he also, I believe, receives in this way some meteorological reports. These correspondents are amateurs, and they render this information without any compensation whatever. The Commissioner has been in the habit of giving them a copy of his report, which costs a little over forty cents, and which certainly is a very small remuneration for the service which they render to him. His operations are now very much retarded by the lack of these reports. Leaving for future consideration the question upon which there is great difference of opinion in the Senate as to printing the Agricultural Report for general distribution, I hope the Senate will relieve the Commissioner of Agriculture by passing the following resolution at once:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed and bound 25,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1875, for distribution by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As a member of the Committee on Printing I deem it proper to say that I dissent from the resolution. We have been in the habit of printing some three or four hundred thousand copies of the Agricultural Report for the purpose of distribution. This resolution proposes to print 25,000 copies exclusively for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture. I see no necessity for dividing up by piecemeal the printing of this document. If it is to be printed at all for distribution there is no more proper medium of distribution than through the members of Congress. It is true that the Commissioner of Agriculture may send out comparatively a few of these reports, but we have heretofore assigned to him a larger proportion of the Agricultural Reports than he has been able to distribute and the books have been sent to the folding-rooms to be distributed by members of Congress. This is a document which the agricultural community of the country appreciate, and while we have an Agricultural Department and an annual report of that Department I am in favor of printing and distributing the report among the agriculturists of the country. I see no necessity now for introducing a resolution for the purpose of furnishing the Commissioner of Agriculture with a proportion of that report for distribution without at the same time providing for the requisite and usual number to be distributed by members of Congress.

I am in favor, therefore, of letting this resolution alone until the general question of the publication of the report for distribution shall come up.

Mr. DAVIS. Twenty-five thousand copies would seem to be an unusually large number for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture. While he should have, say, 10,000 copies, I know of no use for such a large number going to the Commissioner of Agriculture. Congress has already provided that the Agricultural Report, or a portion thereof, may go free through the mails when sent by Senators and Representatives. If we are to have 25,000 copies printed for the Commissioner a proper number should be given to members of Congress for distribution. We receive requests almost daily from persons living in the agricultural districts, and they should be supplied through the medium of Senators and Representatives as well as by the Commissioner of Agriculture. The Commissioner of Agriculture probably could not distribute 25,000 copies. According to my recollection about 40,000 has been the highest number printed for both Houses and the Commissioner.

I hope therefore that the Senator having charge of the resolution will not press its passage, but bring in a resolution which will cover the distribution by the Commissioner of Agriculture as well as by each House of Congress. The agricultural interests of this country are very great. Probably more than half of the people of the whole country are engaged in agriculture. The demand for the report in some sections of the country is very great. I hope the Senator will not press the resolution in its present form.

Mr. ANTHONY. The two questions are entirely separate. One is to furnish the Commissioner of Agriculture with a part of the machinery for carrying on his Department, a very essential part. In fact, I do not believe that the information which we receive from the Commissioner with regard to the condition and prospects of the crops can be obtained in any other way, unless at very great expense. This report costs hardly anything. The publication of these copies will cost but $10,000, and I suppose the report will be distributed to 20,000 correspondents. It will not cost fifty cents apiece to give a copy to each correspondent in return for information furnished which aggregated gives us an idea of the coming crops.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator will allow me I will state that in my remarks I did not intend to object to the printing of the Agricultural Report and its distribution; but I desire a more general distribution than will be had through the Commissioner of Agriculture. I think 25,000 copies a very large number for him. The Senator was engaged during a part of my remarks or else misapprehended what I said.

Mr. ANTHONY. I was coming to that point. Twenty-five thousand copies is not a larger number than the Commissioner requires. I am satisfied he ought to have that number. The other question as to distributing them through members of Congress comes under the general question of printing documents for popular distribution. That is a great question, and it never can be raised here without causing a long debate. Therefore I wish this resolution passed in order to enable the Commissioner to go on with his business.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not wish to object to the resolution or its intention; but I would like to suggest to Senators that we have only half an hour in the morning for our legislative business, and there is a good deal of morning business to be done. There are only fifteen minutes left of that half hour, and, if we take up the time with debate on a single proposition, there is no time for anything else. Under these circumstances we ought not to take up time with anything which is to be debated during the morning hour. I hold in my hand a privileged report which I would like to make. However, if the vote can be taken at once on the resolution, I will not object.

Mr. ANTHONY. I see the point of the Senator's objection. We had better pass the resolution at once, and have no more talk about it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. SARGENT. I shall have to object.

Mr. PADDOCK. I agree with the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Delaware, that when we consider this question we should consider it as well in its application to a general distribution of this report as to its distribution by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will consent to let the resolution lie over.

Mr. PADDOCK. Before the resolution lies over, I offer an amendment to it. I move to insert at the end of the resolution:

And 250,000 copies of the same for general distribution by members of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will go over.

MINERAL LANDS IN MISSOURI AND KANSAS.

Mr. SARGENT. I rise to a privileged report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House (No. 1251) to exclude the State of Missouri from the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said bill the following words: "And all lands in said State shall be subject to disposal as agricultural lands."

And the Senate agree to the same.

A. A. SARGENT,
J. M. HARVEY,
F. M. COCKRELL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JACOB TURNEY,
RICHARD P. BLAND,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ADAM SMOUSE.

Mr. WITHERS. By inadvertence yesterday I requested the reference of the bill (H. R. No. 2463) granting a pension to Adam Smouse, with the accompanying papers, to the Commissioner of Pensions. I ask to recall that order, and that the bill and papers be laid on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be recalled and laid on the table if there is no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2586) granting a pension to John L. Bartley, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 101) amendatory of the act entitled "An act for the relief of the heirs and next of kin of James B. Armstrong, deceased," approved March 3, 1873, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 786) to establish a certain post-route; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOGY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 787) to remove the political disabilities of Manning M. Kimmel; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That the petition of William Loudon for pension be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT OF IMPEACHMENT RULES.

Mr. HAMLIN. I submit a notice, I suppose it is, or a resolution, which will lie over one day, to amend the rules of procedure and practice in the Senate when sitting for the trial of impeachments. The amendment proposes to make our deliberations open in this body, that the world may know not only what our decisions are, but the reasons which we give for those decisions. I am aware that the present rule is an old one; but I am not willing to admit that what I regard as the error of yesterday shall be imposed upon me as the right of to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the proposed rule.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposition is to amend the nineteenth rule by striking out the words "unless the Senate shall direct the doors to be closed, while deliberating upon its decisions."

So that, if amended, Rule 19 will read:

XIX. At all times while the Senate is sitting upon the trial of an impeachment the doors of the Senate shall be kept open.

Also to amend Rule 23 by striking out the words "and without debate" in line 2.

And also in lines 3 and 4 the words—

Except when the doors shall be closed for deliberation.

So as to make that rule read:

XXIII. All the orders and decisions shall be made and had by yeas and nays, which shall be entered on the record, subject, however, to the operation of Rule 7, and in that case no member shall speak more than once on one question, and for not more than ten minutes on an interlocutory question, and for not more than fifteen minutes on the final question, unless by consent of the Senate, to be had without debate; but a motion to adjourn may be decided without the yeas and nays, unless they be demanded by one-fifth of the members present. The fifteen minutes herein allowed shall be for the whole deliberation on the final question, and not to the final question on each article of impeachment.

JOHN T. BURCHELL.

Mr. KEY. I move to take up House bill No. 1595.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1595) for the relief of John T. Burchell, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for services rendered the Government in a small-pox hospital, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Paymaster-General of the Army to pay to John T. Burchell $135, the balance due him for services rendered at the small-pox hospital at Knoxville, Tennessee, from December 10, 1863, to January 12, 1864.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. LOGAN from the Committee on Military Affairs on the 29th of March:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1595) for the relief of John T. Burchell, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for services rendered in a small-pox hospital, submit the following report:

This bill has been reported upon favorably before by both House of Representatives and Senate in former Congresses, but has failed of passage. We recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the proceedings of the Senate sitting as a court of impeachment be printed from the beginning separate from the debates of the Senate in legislative session; and that each day's proceedings hereafter be also printed and laid upon our tables separately, and that copies thereof be furnished to the members of the House of Representatives and to the counsel in the case. Of course it will be the same print that is used in the RECORD, so that there will be no additional setting of type. The purpose is to have the impeachment proceedings separate from the beginning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The motion was agreed to.

MIAMI LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 729.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 729) authorizing the issue of patents to the purchasers of certain Miami lands in Kansas was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. INGALLS. Under the act of March 3, 1873, which was "an act to abolish the tribal relations of the Miami Indians, and for other purposes," the appraisement and sale of certain of the Miami lands was provided for to certain bona fide settlers and purchasers, and the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of that act proceeded to sell the lands, but owing to a defect in the original bill there was no provision by which patents should be issued to those who purchased, and under the rulings of the Department they have decided that in no case can patents issue except in pursuance of some specific authority of law. To remedy the defect in that bill, this action has been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the bill reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report of the Secretary of the Interior on the subject, read.

Mr. INGALLS. Here is the letter, which the Clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.
Washington, March 31, 1876.

SIR: The act of March 3, 1873, entitled "An act to abolish the tribal relations of the Miami Indians, and for other purposes," (Statutes volume 17, page 631,) provides for the appraisement and sale of the Miami lands in Kansas, and section 2 of said act allows the purchase by certain bona fide settlers of the tracts occupied and improved by them—not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres each in extent—under restrictions and limitations therein set forth.

Sales have been made from the lands in question to settlers entitled under the provisions of the law to become purchasers; but after having complied with all the requirements and purchased these lands in good faith, upon proceeding to complete the title to said purchasers, it is found that no provision is made in the act in question to authorize the issue of patents for the lands to these parties; and under the rule of the Department, the justice of which long custom has proven, a patent cannot issue except in pursuance of some explicit provision of law.

A draught for proposed legislation to remedy the defect in the law—prepared by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under the direction of this Department—together with a copy of a report, dated the 30th instant, from that officer in relation to the subject, is herewith respectfully presented for the favorable consideration of Congress.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
Z. CHANDLER, Secretary.

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask that the bill be read again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock and thirty minutes having arrived——

PRINTING OF PROFESSOR JENNEY'S REPORT.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to give notice of a motion to reconsider the order for printing the report of Professor Walter Jenney on the geological survey of the Black Hills, and I will call it up to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

C. G. FREUDENBERG.

Mr. BURNSIDE entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. No. 189) placing the name of C. G. Freudenberg upon the retired list United States Army was postponed indefinitely.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock and thirty minutes having arrived, legislative and executive business will be suspended, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment against William W. Belknap exhibited by the House of Representatives.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative session.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope not. I trust we shall proceed with legislative business to-morrow. On account of the interruption of our regular business by the proceedings of the court, that business has fallen very much behind, and it is getting worse and worse day by day. I know that there are measures pressing upon the attention of the Senate which are of great importance. How the Senators may feel who have these measures in charge, I cannot say. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] desires that we shall act upon the Japanese indemnity bill. That, I understand, is the unfinished business. My friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has in charge the silver bill, and has insisted that it is very important to have the early action of the Senate upon it. I know of no reason why these matters should not be taken up and disposed of to-morrow, and next day, if necessary, but certainly to-morrow.

If the Senators who have this business in charge do not value it so highly, and other Senators think these matters are not of so great importance, then I desire to say that there is pending before the Senate a resolution relating to a subject that is of great importance to the people of my coast, and as I believe will become important to the people of the whole United States, not far in the future. I refer to a resolution which I introduced some time since, which I gave notice that I would bring to the attention of the Senate, requesting the Executive to negotiate with the government of China in order to effect such a modification in the Chinese treaty that there may be a lawful restriction upon the immigration of Chinese to this country. I desire to be heard upon that question. I desire most especially to be heard if prima facie the Senate are in opposition to the views which I propose to advance. I think I can show to the Senate full and conclusive reasons why that course should be adopted; that our country is being filled up by slaves and worse characters; that American civilization is being destroyed; that San Francisco is being changed day by day to an Asiatic city; that there are six blocks there, large blocks, in the business part of our city, which are a mere desert, occupied by the Chinese; that our white labor is being expelled; and that our young men and women are kept out of employment on account of this degrading population. I desire to call these things to the attention of the Senate. If the Senate will meet to-morrow and give me the opportunity, I will then request that this matter be taken up and be considered as its importance and dignity demand. I trust the Senate will not adjourn over till Monday.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, is this a debatable question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the Senate will adjourn over until Monday, although I am certainly as willing as anybody can be to give to the measures to which the Senator from California refers a thorough consideration. I do know, at least I think I know, because it is a piece of presumption, as a very great philosopher once said, for any one to say dogmatically that he knew anything—I think I know that there is no better mode of hastening the business of the Senate than to adjourn over from Friday until Monday. When I first knew the Senate the universal practice was to adjourn over from Thursday until Monday. I do not think it ought to be done now.

Mr. SARGENT. Was that ever the practice at so late a period in the session as this?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes; as late in the session as this and long after this. Every Senator does know that he needs at least one working day in the week to attend to committee duty and for uninterrupted study (if he intends to perform his duty as a Senator) on the questions that come before us, to say nothing about private affairs. I hope that we shall not abandon the practice of adjourning from Friday until Monday, unless under peculiar circumstances, until the last two or three weeks of the session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. Of course I cheerfully acquiesce, and especially as this week has been so busy that I had really forgotten that to-day was Friday and supposed it was Thursday. [Laughter.] I make that apology in justice to the Senate and myself, and I will say now that early next week I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up the important measure to which I have referred.

IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to rescind the order which was passed this morning to print the proceedings of the impeachment trial with a view to offer an order in different language.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to rescind.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the other order be read first.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the proceedings in the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap be printed from day to day, and that 300 copies be printed for the use of the Senate, and that 25 copies be printed for the use of the managers, and 25 copies for the use of the counsel for the respondent.

Mr. DAVIS. Does that include what has already taken place?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It includes that, as the Chair understands. The former resolution certainly did.

Mr. ANTHONY. It includes the previous proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate rescind the former order and substitute this in its place? That is the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 28, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF HOMESTEAD LAW.

Mr. BANKS. Mr. Speaker, I present a bill at the request of a very large number of citizens of different States—laborers, mechanics, and persons connected with the minor manufactures of the country, but now out of employment—who ask the aid and protection of the Government in emigrating with their families and forming communities and settlements in the agricultural and mining sections of the public domain. It has been carefully considered, I am informed, and represents the interest of a large unemployed population in the more populous parts of the country. It embodies substantially the principles of emigration prepared by Franklin in the settlement of Pennsylvania, and more recently tried with success by Mexico and the states of South America. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and printed.

There being no objection,

Mr. BANKS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3265) to extend the scope and efficiency of an act entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

DISABILITIES OF JAMES E. SLAUGHTER.

Mr. McCRARY. The Committee on the Judiciary have directed me to ask unanimous consent to report a bill for consideration at the present time.

Mr. RANDALL. I must object to that.

Mr. McCRARY. I think that when the gentleman hears the title of the bill he will not object. Its consideration will take but a moment.

The SPEAKER. The regular order this morning is the unfinished business of yesterday; and these matters cannot proceed without unanimous consent.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 761) to remove the political disabilities of James E. Slaughter, of Alabama.

Mr. McCRARY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania does not object to that, I know. [Laughter.]

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

PROTECTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, with reference to the protection of immigrants; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States renders inoperative and void the laws of this State heretofore enacted for the protection of immigrants and the prevention of their becoming a charge upon any city, town, or county of this State within five years from their landing at the port of New York, on the ground that such laws are in violation of the Constitution and that the power to legislate on this subject is exclusively in the Federal Congress; and whereas the importance of the subject demands immediate attention: Therefore,

Resolved, (if the senate concur.) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use their influence to secure without delay the legislation necessary and requisite, as well for the protection of the immigrants as for the security of the cities, towns, and counties of this State.

POSTAGE.

Mr. COX. I desire also to introduce a bill prepared by the Board of Trade of New York on the subject of postage.

There being no objection,

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3266) fixing the rate of postage on certain mail matter, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS OF THE WAR OF 1812.

Mr. COX also, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of soldiers of the war of 1812, asking increase of pay and the pensioning of the widows of such soldiers as were married prior to 1850; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

ELECTION OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

Mr. SOUTHARD, by unanimous consent reported from the Committee on the Territories a bill (H. R. No. 3267) to provide for the election of a territorial governor, secretary, treasurer, auditor, and superintendent of schools in the several Territories of the United States; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

LANDS SOLD FOR DIRECT TAXES.

Mr. MAISH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be requested to furnish, for the information of this House, a list with location and description of all lands sold for non-payment of direct taxes thereon under and by virtue of the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and the various acts subsequent to and amendatory thereof, except such as were bought for and in the name of the United States; and also the names of the owners of such lands, the amount of direct taxes due upon the same at the time of such sale, the names of the persons by whom they were purchased, and the amount of money received therefor in each case.

JOSEPH W. PARISH.

Mr. STRAIT, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. No. 3153) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish, and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same and that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

OBSERVATORY OF CALIFORNIA UNIVERSITY.

Mr. PIPER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3268) granting a site for an observatory to the trustees of the Lick observatory of the astronomical department of the University of California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

BONDS OF THE UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. TARBOX. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for adoption now a resolution in regard to the purchase of certain bonds by the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. HURLBUT. I object, and call for the regular order.

DECISION ON HABEAS CORPUS—HALLET KILBOURN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a short communication from the Sergeant-at-Arms, accompanied by a certified copy of the decision of the chief justice of the supreme court of this District in the matter of Hallet Kilbourn, whom that court has discharged from the custody of this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., April 28, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I herewith hand you the decision of Hon. D. K. Cartter, chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in the matter of Hallet Kilbourn's petition for the writ of habeas corpus, and request you to lay the same before the House.

Very respectfully,

JOHN G. THOMPSON, Sergeant-at-Arms.

Hon. M. C. KERR, Speaker.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the paper be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HURLBUT. And ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. And ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

IMPEACHMENT OF WILLIAM W. BELKNAP.

Mr. LORD. I rise to a privileged question. Under a rule of parliamentary law we are required to ask this leave in regard to members. I ask the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the managers have leave to examine any member of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and any member of the House whom they deem necessary as a witness on the trial of the articles of impeachment against William W. Belknap, and that leave is hereby given to members to attend the trial for that purpose if they see fit to do so.

The resolution was adopted.

CENTENNIAL COINS.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I rise to a privileged matter. Two days ago I introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3159) to authorize the coinage of "centennial coins," and for other purposes, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. I find it has not only not been referred to that committee, but by a mistake of the Clerk referred to the Committee of Ways and Means. The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures have jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and I think it is a privilege of that committee that I should be heard to move that the Clerk shall have the correction made.

The back of the bill will show it was intended, as I said at the time, to be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say this is no matter of privilege. Is the House willing the Committee of Ways and Means shall be discharged from the further consideration of this bill and the same referred to the Commitee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order this morning is the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the consideration of the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, on which the main question has been ordered. The question first recurs on concurring in the first amendment upon which a separate vote has been demanded.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest the House concur in the amendments upon which separate votes have not been asked.

Mr. HURLBUT. I ask for a separate vote, as agreed to in Committee of the Whole, on the amendment increasing the salary of the territorial judges.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right; that we agreed to allow. There was not a quorum voting. It is not in the nature of an amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that this amendment in reference to the salaries of territorial judges was not reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but the agreement was that a vote should be taken on it in the House.

Mr. HURLBUT. The majority of the committee was against my amendment. It was agreed I should have a separate vote on the question in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not care how it comes up so the vote is got. I suggest the gentleman should make some motion by which the subject can be reached.

Mr. HURLBUT. I was waiting for its turn, but I am willing to have it considered now.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman had better move to strike out.

Mr. HURLBUT. I have simply considered the amendment pending in the House as in committee for a direct vote, whether the salary of the territorial judges should be $3,000 as I moved it, or remain as in the bill, $2,500 a year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the gentleman move to strike out $2,500 and insert $3,000.

Mr. HURLBUT. I make that motion in line 949, and in other places in the bill where it is necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. You want it all through these sections referring to the Territories?

Mr. HURLBUT. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. Then let us take a single vote in reference to all of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will do it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take the sense of the House on these amendments in the order in which they arise in the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. I move the House concur in all the amendments of the Committee of the Whole, except those upon which a separate vote is asked, or such against which the point of order is pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is certainly a proper one and will facilitate business very much; but I ask unanimous consent to call the attention of the House for one moment to the necessity of amending the text, which can be done by unanimous consent. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union adopted this language:

That the fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll shall be employed during the current year, and the sum of money necessary to pay the messengers on that roll is hereby appropriated.

That is in conformity with former practice. I ask unanimous consent, on line 191 of the bill, to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "eighteen," and to strike out the words "fourteen of whom shall be on the soldiers' roll," because otherwise there will be reduplication. I hope there will be no objection to that.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania had better be put to the House after the amendments on which separate votes are asked have been disposed of.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the suggestion of the Chair is very proper.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments.

The following amendment, adopted in Committee of the Whole on motion of Mr. O'BRIEN, was read:

In line 937, after the words "mint at New Orleans, Louisiana," strike out these words: "For superintendent in charge, for care and protection of the building and machinery and other Government property therein, $1,000," and insert as follows: "For salaries of assayer in charge, $2,500; melter, $2,000; one clerk, $1,500; wages of workmen, $3,000; fuel, fluxes, acids, and other incidental expenses, $5,000; in all, $14,0 0.

Mr. RANDALL. The majority on the vote in Committee of the Whole in favor of that amendment was so large that I do not wish to occupy half an hour in taking the yeas and nays on it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is a very proper amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded?

No separate vote was demanded, and the amendment was adopted.

The following amendment, adopted on motion of Mr. BENNETT, was read:

Add after line 945 the following paragraph:

Assay office at Boise City, Idaho Territory:

For salary of assayer, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $2,500; for wages of workmen, $1,500; for fuel, crucibles, chemicals, repairs, and other incidental expenses, $1,000; in all, $5,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The Director of the Mint appeared before the committee yesterday and expressed the opinion that $3,000 was a sufficient appropriation for that assay office: $1,800 for the assayer and the balance for the purposes indicated. If the gentleman from Idaho will consent to that, I will agree to his amendment as so modified.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not think that is sufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I must ask for a vote. The Director of the Mint says that $3,000 is sufficient.

Mr. BENNETT. Very well. If that is the best the committee will let us have, we will have to accept it or take nothing. I agree that the amendment shall be modified in the way suggested.

The amendment, as modified, was adopted.

The next amendment was that adopted on motion of Mr. DAVIS, as follows:

Add after line 945 the following:

Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina:

For assayer, $1,800; for melter, $1,200; for labor, fuel, lights, acids, chemicals, repairs, and other necessaries, $1,000; in all, $4,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DAVIS] who offered that amendment has consented to a modification, which meets the views of the Director of the Mint, and which I hope the House will unanimously accept. It is a reduction from $4,000 to $2,700.

Mr. DAVIS. I send to the desk the substitute for that amendment, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 945 add the following:

Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina:

For assayer and melter, $2,200; for labor and other expenses, $500; in all, $2,700.

The amendment, as modified, was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. Before we leave this subject, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement from the Director of the Mint, being a comparison of expenditures at the coinage mints and assay office, New York, during various years.

There was no objection. The statement is as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate was ready to proceed upon the impeachment of William W. Belknap, and to receive the managers on the part of the House, and that the Senate Chamber was prepared with accommodations for the reception of the House of Representatives.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The next amendment was that on which a separate vote was asked by Mr. HURLBUT, as follows:

In line 949, strike out "$2,5'0" and insert "$3,000;" so that it will read: "chief justice and two associate justices, $3,000 each;" also, in line 954 strike out "$2,500" and insert "$3,000;" so that it will read: "and the salaries of chief justices and associate justices shall be $3,000 per annum each."

Mr. HURLBUT. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me, I desire to say one word only. Since this amendment was debated the Committee of the Whole has still further amended this bill by striking out any possibility of a United States judge receiving any pay from a Territory. That, I think, lends additional strength to the amendment I have offered.

Mr. STEELE. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will consent to have that amendment adopted.

Mr. PATTERSON. I would like to state in this connection——

Mr. HOLMAN. Let us have a vote. We have discussed this matter very fully.

Mr. RANDALL. The previous question is prevailing. I object to debate.

The question being taken on Mr. HURLBUT's amendment, there were—ayes 65, noes 65; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HURLBUT and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 65.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 90, nays 119, not voting 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, George A. Bagley, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Cate, Conger, Cook, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Ellis, Ely, Fort, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Goodin, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Hartridge, Hatcher, Hays, Henderson, Henkle, Hoskins, Hurd, Hurlbut, Kehr, Kelley, Ketchum, Kimball, Lane, Levy, Lynch, Lynde, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Miller, Monroe, Morey, Morgan, Mutchler, New, Norton, O'Brien, O'Neill, Packer, Parsons, William A. Wallace, Ward, Warren, Whitthorne, William B. Williams, Willis, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, and Woodburn—81.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, said: My colleague, Mr. VAN VORHES, is sick, and absent by leave of the House.

Mr. YEATES. My colleague, Mr. WADDELL, is absent by leave of the House, and so is my colleague Mr. ASHE.

Mr. McDILL. My colleague, Mr. KASSON, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. My colleague, Mr. BOONE, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON. My colleagues, Mr. CANNON and Mr. BAGBY, are absent by leave of the House.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The next amendment was one offered by Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, to strike out in line 1476 "$2,700" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,000," so as to make it read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Agriculture, $3,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The vote on that amendment in the committee was very decided, and I do not ask for a separate vote.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes; let us have a vote on it.

The question was taken; and on a division there were ayes 39, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF RULE 120.

The following section upon which a point of order was raised in the committee and postponed for the decision of the House was then read:

SEC. 4. That the management of all Indian affairs, and of all matters arising out of Indian relations, be, and the same is hereby, transferred from the Department of the Interior to the War Department, and the same is hereby placed under the Secretary of War agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe: And provided further, That the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management of Indian affairs and of matters arising out of Indian relations is hereby lodged with the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the duties now being intrusted to and performed by Indian agents and other officials and employés of every kind and description will be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army.

Mr. SEELYE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that section which has just been read is in contravention of the rule adopted January 17, 1876, in these words:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenses.

This is a change in existing law; and while I do not raise the point of order that this would be a manifest extravagance and increase the expenditures, although I believe it to be true and hold that it can be proven, yet as that might be disputed, and could only be established after an argument, I do not raise it here; but I simply raise the point of order that this is not manifestly for the retrenchment of expenses, and is not germane to the appropriation bill.

It is said, to be sure, it was remarked in the committee by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations yesterday, that there is in this bill a leaving out of all other appropriations for the Indian Bureau and therefore it does retrench expenditures; but the gentleman surely will not upon reflection hold to such a ground, because with equal propriety he might introduce a section providing that the whole business of the Secretary of the Navy shall be turned over into the hands of the Secretary of War, and because he shall fail to introduce an appropriation for the Department of the Navy therefore the bill would be in the line of retrenchment of expenditures. I hold that under the rule which requires that the provision shall retrench expenditures that provision should bear prima facie evidence that it would thus retrench. This provision does not bear such evidence, and therefore I claim that it is not in order.

Mr. McCRARY. I rise to inquire whether the Chair will hear further argument on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. If it is the pleasure of the House, the Chair will certainly interpose no objection. This is an original point arising under a new rule, and the Chair considers it one of importance.

Mr. McCRARY. I desire to submit very briefly some views I have upon the subject, if it is the pleasure of the Chair to hear me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed, unless there is some objection in the House.

No objection was made.

Mr. McCRARY. Mr. Speaker, regarding this a very important question, I have given it some consideration, and, although my conclusions may perhaps be of little value, I wish to submit them for the consideration of the Chair.

The question how the new rule shall be construed is one of importance. If it can be so construed as to admit the amendment now before the House upon an appropriation bill, it is difficult to see how it is possible to draw a line which shall fix and determine what is and what is not in the line of retrenchment. The amendment is held to be germane because it relates to Indian affairs, and because the bill makes an appropriation for the Indian service. I do not stop to question whether it is germane; but, conceding that it is so, I call the Speaker's attention to the wide range of legislation that would be germane by the same rule. Anything that relates to any branch of the public service, whether in the legislative, executive, or judicial department, would be germane. Therefore a very wide field would be opened for crowding provisions upon all sorts of subjects into an appropriation bill unless a construction is given to the latter clause of the rule which will in some degree at least limit its scope. The amendment must "tend to retrench expenditure." How must this appear? Is the Speaker limited to what appears upon the face of the amendment or may he look beyond the amendment, and if so how far beyond it?

In my judgment the rule must have a reasonable construction, and I will state precisely what I think to be a reasonable construction. There are two views of the true construction of the rule; they are both extreme and both erroneous in my humble opinion. The first is that the Speaker cannot look beyond the amendment itself, and that it must appear from the words of the amendment without reference to anything else that it will, if adopted, retrench expenditure.

The other is, that the Speaker may examine estimates, take the opinions of experts, consider arguments pro and con upon disputed questions of fact, and from these make up his mind whether the proposed legislation will or will not retrench expenditures. I contend that both of these theories are erroneous and untenable, and that there is a "golden mean" between the two which will furnish the correct rule and the safe guide.

I say then, first, that the Speaker may look beyond the amendment itself, but, with this limitation, he is to look only at existing law. He is to take no uncertainties into his calculation. It must appear to a certainty that the proposed amendment will retrench expenditure. To illustrate: If an amendment is offered to fix the salary of a public officer at a given sum, the Speaker must look beyond the amendment itself and into existing law to determine whether the sum fixed by the amendment is less than that provided in previous legislation.

But when it is said that the Speaker is bound to go not only beyond the amendment itself, but beyond and outside of all existing law and into the uncertain region of argument and speculation, in which it will be affirmed on one side that the amendment will retrench expenditure and denied on the other, this is the other extreme and is wholly inadmissible. My reasons for rejecting such a construction of the rule may be briefly summed up as follows:

First. No certain result can be reached in this way. The rule requires that it shall appear as a matter of fact—not of opinion—that the amendment will retrench expenditure. The Chair may be of opinion that this amendment would retrench expenditure. Other gentlemen may hold the opposite opinion, but it is not to be left to opinion. To show that it is only a matter of opinion, of dispute, of uncertainty, of debate, is to show that it is not in order.

Second. The Chair cannot have before him the facts upon which to decide. The Chair cannot go into proofs upon the subject. The Chair cannot stop legislation and go into a trial upon the doubtful and difficult questions of fact which are presented by such an amendment as this. How is the Chair to decide what it will cost to carry on our Indian affairs under the War Department and how much under the Interior Department? How is the Chair to decide the disputed question whether frauds will be increased, decreased, or prevented by the proposed transfer? The House has listened to a long and able debate upon this very question, in which facts and statistics have been literally piled up on both sides. Is the Chair to be expected to go into these in deciding a point of order? If the Chair must consider them, it follows that gentlemen interested must be allowed to present them, and if this be permitted it is evident that a large part of the time of the House would be devoted to considering points of order.

Third. In the nature of the case a point of order must be decided summarily and without much discussion. It follows that all rules must have such a construction as will enable the Speaker to decide promptly and without the necessity for much inquiry as to matters of fact. It must appear from the record that the proposed amendment is in the line of retrenchment, and by the record I mean the bill and amendments before the House and existing statutes. If it appear from a reference to these that it will reduce expenses to adopt the amendment, it can be made to appear promptly and clearly.

Fourth. The practice of crowding legislation upon various subjects into appropriation bills was a great and growing evil under the old rule, and under the new one will become intolerable if that rule be construed so as to admit amendments such as the one now under consideration. If this amendment is in order the House can be called upon at any time to consider, without the report of a committee, without the introduction of any bill, without any notice that the subject is coming up, the gravest and most important subjects, and may be compelled to consider and pass upon them in Committee of the Whole with the five-minute rule governing the debate. The new rule should have a construction that will prevent such evils and abuses as these.

From what I have said it will be seen that I would construe this rule as admitting only an amendment which is germane and which, either from what appears upon its face or from what is found in the statutes, or from both, and without reference to extrinsic facts, without resort to evidence aliunde, or to speculation or debate, is clearly seen to be in the line of retrenchment.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I have but a few brief remarks to make upon this point of order. I maintain that this section is not only within the spirit but within the letter of the rule, that it does retrench and upon its face it retrenches. These words will be found in the section, "that the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished." But in further support of my position I want to quote from a document which I think the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] who makes this point here, will pay some deference to. I read from the minority report made to this House on the subject of the transfer of the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, and which is signed by Mr. NELSON H. VAN VORHES, Mr. JULIUS H. SEELYE, Mr. HORACE F. PAGE, Mr. JOHN Q. TUFTS, and Mr. WILLIAM W. WILSHIRE. In that report this paragraph occurs:

The transfer under consideration is sometimes urged on the score of economy. It would at least save the salaries of the Indian agents, amounting possibly to $150,000, but it is difficult to see how any other expense would be diminished.

I think the saving of $150,000 brings this section within the spirit and letter of the rule. Out of your own mouth I condemn you.

This appropriation bill provides usually for certain expenses of the Indian Bureau to the extent of $75,000. We have made no such appropriation in this bill, and we have therefore to state upon the face of the bill the reason why we have not done it, and it is because we propose to transfer the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, and to reduce expenditures by the total abolition of the Indian Bureau. I say here to-day that no other bureau anywhere will be required to be established. If this section is not within the letter and spirit of the rule I am at a loss to conceive what was the intention of the House in adopting the rule.

Nay, more, in another portion of this bill, to which no objection of this kind was made, we have abolished the special agents of customs, forty-three in number, and they are nowhere provided for in this bill or treated of in the bill, nor are they provided for or treated of in any of the annual appropriation bills. The money which by that portion of the bill we save to the people has usually come out of the permanent appropriations of the Government. If such a point of order as this is to lie against this section, then we never in any possible way can abridge the expenditures of the Government in this way. This section is not only within the spirit but within the letter of the rule.

The Speaker is not overestimating the importance of this subject when he refers to the gravity of this point of order. To my mind it involves hundreds of thousands of dollars in the direction of economy. We have excellent military authority for saying that this section involves the saving of millions of dollars. If this rule is not intended to reach just such cases as this, then it is nugatory and stripped of what was supposed to be its great beneficial power.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Speaker should treat this point of order as the courts treat a question of jurisdiction. For example, a case is brought to the Supreme Court of the United States by a writ of error. The writ must be accompanied by a bill of exceptions, in which the errors are assigned. If the parties have no bill of exceptions, the court will not look into the case at all, except for one purpose; if there is error apparent on the face of the record, such as that the writ has not been properly signed, has not been properly attested by the officer empowered by law to attest it, if such error is patent on the face of the record the court will take jurisdiction of the case, but for no other reason. The court will not look into the record unless there be such patent error on the face of it that they are bound to take notice of it and correct it.

Now, it occurs to me that in this summary proceeding of deciding a point of order the Speaker of the House is in exactly the predicament of the court. If on the face of the paragraph or amendment two things appear, he will take jurisdiction. First, is the paragraph germane to the subject-matter of the bill; and second, if it propose a change in the law, is it an amendment which by its terms is a retrenchment of expenditures? The Speaker under the rules cannot go beyond those two elements in considering the point of order.

Now, on the score of its being germane, I invite the attention of the Speaker to a fact which he may not have considered. Suppose I had offered this transfer section as an amendment to the Post-Office Appropriation bill, nobody would doubt that the Speaker would rule my amendment out of order on the ground that the Post-Office Appropriation bill is not at all related to Indian affairs. But I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that there is not one line, not one word in this whole bill, outside of the fourth section, that even names Indian affairs or that refers directly or indirectly to the Bureau of Indian Affairs. That subject is as clearly absent from this bill as though this were the Post-Office appropriation bill. There is no hook in this bill on which there can be hung a jurisdiction over this subject.

My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says that it is germane to this bill, because in the corresponding bill of last year there was an appropriation for the Indian Bureau. That has nothing to do with this case. The Indian Bureau is not in this bill; it is this bill on which the point of order is being raised. I have gone carefully through the whole bill, and if any gentleman will point out any provision, except this fourth section, relating at all to the Indian Department, he can find what I have utterly failed to discover.

In the next place, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] in order to sustain this fourth section as coming within the rule, goes outside of this bill and the statutes and brings in a report of a minority of a committee of this House and presents it to the Speaker as evidence that a reduction of expenditures will result by the adoption of this section. We are thus thrown into the precise predicament which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] points out, that the Speaker must sit here as a judge, hear witnesses, and have evidence aliunde laid before him before he can determine whether the proposed section will retrench expenditures or not. I submit that if that construction be given to the rule, the Speaker becomes a court to hear evidence and arguments on a mere matter of form.

The Speaker will remember that when this rule was adopted I tried to point out the evils which I thought would result from its adoption. It is clear to my mind that the construction now asked for will lead to all the evils and more than all that I suggested. If the construction be given as suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] much of the evil of this rule will be prevented, and all its good retained. But until such a construction be made, I believe we shall see only evil resulting from it.

Mr. SEELYE. I shall not defend the report of the minority of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which has been referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL,] until I find that it needs defense, which is not yet. I shall be sufficiently justified by taking from the mouth of the gentleman himself a condemnation of his own course, because there could not be a more conspicuous affirmation of the ground I take than the very process of argument which the gentleman has pursued.

I say that the retrenchment of expenditures does not appear from the face of the bill. The gentleman fully acknowledges this in leaving the bill and going into other processes of inquiry in order to determine the point. Now, in this line the argument is wide; and if it were open, I should have somewhat to say. In such a case I should bring evidence to show that this retrenchment of the salaries of Indian agents would be more than five times overbalanced by the increased expenditures in other directions, and that, instead of being in the line of economy, it runs to the utmost extravagance. I do not, however, urge that question here. I simply raise the point of order that the evidence of retrenchment does not appear upon the face of the proposition, and it is not germane.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. SEELYE. No, sir.

Now, in the same manner, a provision might be introduced into this bill transferring the whole work of the Interior Department into the War Department. Would the gentleman claim that that would be in the line of retrenchment, because forsooth we excluded any provision for the salary of the Secretary of the Interior? The matter is too absurd to need argument.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to direct the attention of the Speaker, and the House, and the gentleman from Massachusetts to one clause in this section; and if that does not retrench on its face, I do not know the meaning of language:

That the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished.

Mr. SEELYE. Suppose we should say "the office of Secretary of the Interior is hereby abolished," which is fully as germane; would that be in the line of retrenchment, or would it necessitate the inquiry whether the work of the Secretary of the Interior is going to be done without additional expense—a question which involves argument?

Mr. RANDALL. We save on the face of this bill the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. SEELYE. And so we would save on the face of the bill the salary of the Secretary of the Interior; and so in the same way we might save on the face of the bill the salaries of all the other Departments of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. Then it comes within the rule.

Mr. HALE. I have been listening attentively to this discussion and trying to attune my mind to a fair consideration of this subject. The only answer I have heard to the objection raised has been that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] He sees that under the rule he must maintain and establish that there is something in this proposition that contains in itself reduction, retrenchment, the lessening of expenditures. He is thus driven by necessity to this proposition; that because this section, which in its wide scope of legislation transfers the Indian Bureau from one Department to another, has in it a provision to reduce salaries or to strike out certain salaries, therefore it is in the interest of economy and retrenchment, and so properly belongs to the House. Now, let us see what would be the result of carrying out that theory. The gentleman says that this provision strikes out the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that it omits all the salaries of this Bureau, and that therefore the Speaker need go no further in deciding this point; that that is enough because it is retrenchment. Now, suppose that this provision be adopted and the bill goes through; but suppose that a month hence upon another appropriation bill—the Indian appropriation bill, on which the question of the proposition being germane would not arise—another committee of this House offers an amendment transferring this Bureau to the State Department, and as a part of the amendment abolishes the offices of certain captains, certain lieutenants, certain majors in the War Department upon the ground that if the transfer be made certain officers in the War Department, where we have just placed this business, can be dispensed with. Then upon the ground that the amendment abolishes offices you may transfer this Indian Bureau, which we now have landed in the War Department, from the War Department to the State Department. And if that may be done a month hence, then at the next session the Bureau may be put back into the Interior Department by some other committee coming in with an amendment to that effect abolishing certain offices in the State Department.

The trouble is that if this mode of reasoning be admitted there is no telling where it may lead. To-morrow this Bureau may go to the State Department; the next day it may be put back into the Interior Department; the next day it may be transferred to the War Department; and in each case upon the asseveration of a committee that the change is economical.

These seem to me practical considerations. They show where we would be led by widening this rule. An incidental question to this is the increase of transportation, which I will not go into; but it is just as germane as the other. Now, Mr. Speaker, all these considerations show that we should not embark in any such extension of the rule as is here proposed. And there is the less need of straining this rule, Mr. Speaker, because the House of Representatives has already considered this subject duly reported from two regular committees, has voted on it under the rules of the House, and has adopted it. So there is not the claim here that it is a subject-matter which cannot get before the House. It has been done in the regular way through the regular channel.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to detain the House long in the discussion of this subject. I would simply say, with respect to the position taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. SEELYE,] that the argument that there is no reduction in expenditures in this transfer does not come well from him in the face of his admission, in the minority report upon the transfer bill lately passed by the House, that there was a reduction to the extent of $150,000. I hold in my hand that minority report, signed by that gentleman, in which it is admitted that there would be a reduction of expenses by this transfer to the extent of $150,000 in the payment of agents' salaries, &c.

But, sir, those who favor the point of order against this section go further and say you must judge from the section itself to see whether or not there is a reduction of expenditure. As I read it, there is upon the face of the section a clear indication of, if not an express reduction. I will read:

And provided further, That the duties now being intrusted to and performed by Indian agents and other officials and employés of every kind and description will be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army.

Mr. SEELYE. Without any additional expense to the Army?

Mr. SPARKS. Here then, as I understand, we have these Army officials for whom appropriations are or ought to be made, and there is in this section the distinct allegation that they shall perform these duties.

The gentleman inquires whether without additional pay? Why, it is the imposition simply of additional duties upon them, and of course without additional pay, and is a reduction to the extent of the pay for duties being performed by employés of another Department of the Government, all of which is clearly expressed in the section itself, and, as I understand, it is conclusive upon this point.

Mr. BANKS obtained the floor.

Mr. SEELYE. My colleague yields to me for a moment. I would like to know if there is a member of this House who supposes that this transfer could be made to the War Department without increased expenditure in the War Department. If that is the case—and I take it no man will deny that it must increase expenditures, the expense of transportation, expense of agencies, the expense of supervision, the clerical expense here—if that is the case, then it opens the whole inquiry, and we cannot tell whether this provision shall result in a retrenchment until the inquiry is completed.

Mr. RANDALL. In answer to that I will say we have at this session given an example of how that can be done without additional expenditure. This House made a request to the President to send an agent to the Indian Territory and to an Indian tribe to make examination as to the necessity of a deficiency; and as requested he sent an Army officer, and that officer went there without any additional pay or salary whatever.

Mr. SEELYE. If the gentleman will allow me, he does not meet the issue I present, whether the transportation of supplies, for instance, to the Indians, which it is now proposed to carry over to the War Department, could be maintained by the War Department without any additional expense; whether the supervision of the Indians, which it is now proposed to turn over to the War Department, could be done without any additional expense to the War Department; whether the work of the Indian Bureau, which is now done here and which requires a large clerical force, could be transferred over to the War Department without additional expense. Now, until gentlemen are willing to claim it could be thus done, I say the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is running away from the record.

Mr. SEELYE. I am meeting the exact issue.

Mr. RANDALL. I hold you to the abolition of the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs and to the abolition, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, of various other officers, the duties of these officers being transferred to officers who are already paid and only have the imposition of additional duties without additional pay.

Mr. SEELYE. I say again the gentleman evades the point, and there is no one here in the House, I venture to say, who will venture to claim there is any such reduction.

Mr. BANKS. Both gentlemen are evading each other, and I must take the floor.

It seems to me this presents a simple, and yet an important question. A proposition for retrenchment gives the Committee on Appropriations of the House the right to move an amendment to a general appropriation bill. This is a great advantage. It elevates an ordinary and inadmissible subject of legislation to a privileged question. It is retrenchment alone upon which in this case it can claim this privilege. It is the only point at issue, and it must be clear, explicit, and absolute to give it precedence over all other subjects of legislation. It must be capable of being expressed in sums, in figures. Retrenchment is reduction in expenditures, and it must appear either in the amendment itself when compared with other propositions of the bill, or with previously existing laws, that there is actual retrenchment which is or can be so expressed. It is useless to talk of what any member of the House admits, or what is stated in any report outside of the amendment or report, or what may be conceded or inferred from argument. The Speaker cannot base a decision upon an inference or an assumption. He cannot evade or destroy the protection which long-established parliamentary law secures to the House upon an inference one man or another may draw from the facts in this case.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. BANKS. Let me express my views. The question as to retrenchment must appear in sums in figures in the proposition itself, as compared with other propositions in the bill or with existing law. There is no inference which will justify a change in the established system of legislation whatever, come from what source it may. It must have a more substantial basis, a foundation of fact.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman now allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BANKS. In a moment. No such proposition of retrenchment appears in this amendment; none at all. It is not pretended that it does. Now I will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Massachusetts recollects very well when we abolished all the assessors of internal revenue; and in this very bill we abolish many of the officers by the abolition of internal-revenue collection districts. Nothing was there said as to the salaries. The retrenchment is there shown in the reduction of the aggregate appropriations just as it is here in the reduction of the aggregate in this bill. And there will be the same retrenchment by the transfer of the management of Indian affairs.

Mr. BANKS. I think I can reply to the gentleman's proposition very satisfactorily. He stated a better case in his first remarks on this question to the House when he said that certain appropriations for custom-house officers had been reduced; and the proposition for amendment was debated on that ground. In that case he stated exactly what was right and what would bring the amendment within this rule; when for so many officers so much money was appropriated as against the appropriation of a larger sum for a larger number of officers. The retrenchment was there expressed in facts and figures.

Mr. RANDALL. It was not so expressed there at all. The gentleman is mistaken; because these officers are paid out of an appropriation that does not come under the view of Congress at all.

Mr. BANKS. I know that; but the proposition for retrenchment is embraced in the amendment itself.

Mr. RANDALL. So it is here.

Mr. BANKS. The argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania in regard to this section does not meet the case. Let me ask the attention of the Chair to what this amendment proposes. It proposes in the first place—

That the management of all Indian affairs, and of all matters arising out of Indian relations, be, and the same are hereby, transferred from the Department of the Interior to the War Department.

That is the proposition. It is a fundamental change in existing law, a change in the organization of the Government; and there is nothing upon which we can assume in any way whatever that it will cost more or that it will cost less. That is not in the bill. It is impossible that the Speaker can assume it will cost more or less. And you cannot admit a proposition for a reform in existing law or a fundamental change in the organization of the Government on the inference or guess of somebody, my colleague [Mr. SEELYE] on the one hand or the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the other, that this change may cost more or less.

Now the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggests to us his idea of retrenchment. He says the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is abolished. Why is it abolished? Because the duties of that officer have been transferred by the preceding paragraph from the officers of the Interior Department to the officers of the War Department. Is that retrenchment? Mr. Speaker, can you assume that to be retrenchment; that the cost of the performance of these duties is to be more or less expensive when they are transferred to the War Department than it is now, from anything that appears in this amendment? Certainly not. It may be more or it may be less, but there is not one word in the bill before us to show whether the cost will be the same or more or less than now.

Just so it is with regard to those other officers to whom the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] referred. The section has this proviso:

Provided further, That the duties now being intrusted to and performed by Indian agents and other officials and employés of every kind and description will be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army.

Does the gentleman believe that this is to cost less? Is there one soldier or officer now more than is necessary to do the duties of the War Department? And if you transfer the duties of the Indian Department to the War Department and require them to be performed by officers and soldiers, must you not add to the number of officers and soldiers? How can the Speaker, or this House, or anybody else assume that it is to cost more or less?

Where do we find that provision for an absolute retrenchment or reduction in expenditures which is indispensable to give the amendment precedence over other equally important subjects of legislation which are excluded under the rules of the House?

Mr. Speaker, the corruptions of this Government which gentlemen are so busily engaged in investigating come in a very great degree, if not altogether, from the vicious system of legislation which has been created in the last ten or twenty years. But all the vices of legislation brought together in a compact and solid body would not be equal to the vices of legislation if this proposition of the Committee on Appropriations, or whoever it may be that proposes this section, is admitted. Suppose I should myself propose, as I might very well do, that a committee should be appointed to revise and amend all the laws of the Government of the United States upon the theory that a better system and a cheaper system could be established; upon any claim of that kind made by any committee in any report, or by any member, or even by a vote of the House, could any positive conclusion be drawn that the new system of government would as a matter of absolute fact be cheaper, and that the proposition should therefore be admitted in an appropriation bill to the exclusion of others upon this mere inference of retrenchment or of reduction in expenditures?

There is but one rule for the Speaker in deciding a question of this kind, and it is where an amendment to an existing law is proposed, because it effects a retrenchment in expenses. That retrenchment must appear to the satisfaction of the Speaker somewhere, in sum and figures, as an absolute fact; it cannot rest upon any inference or any argument; and no such sum, no such figure, no such fact is expressed in this amendment. The rule is explicit. No amendment to an appropriation bill which changes existing law shall be admitted "except such as shall retrench expenditures." In this case, whatever may be intended or proposed, the amendment does not as a matter of fact "retrench expenditures," and therefore it ought not to be admitted.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. COX. I desire to say a word on this question.

Mr. RANDALL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX. I had the honor to report this rule to the House. I believe it was unanimously adopted, or nearly so, by the Committee on Rules. I never dreamed that this rule would have so loose an interpretation as has been given to it. I never dreamed that it would be carried so far as that you might tack on legislation that would extend to every Department of the Government, as would be the case if this point of order be not well taken.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania and others have argued the question of economy here and they argue it aliunde; they seek minority reports. They go into other considerations, and they show only on the face of the bill that one office or something of that kind is stricken out. I do not care if $180,000 is stricken out, the question is this: Does this paragraph retrench expenditures generally in its results? How can you ascertain that? Why, you will have to get a master in chancery to sum it up.

I do not propose to argue over again the question of economy about this transfer, for that was very properly and exhaustively argued on the proper bill for that transfer which has already passed this House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] says to me that it was intelligently voted on. That is another question to be considered. That is not the point of order. The trouble with the gentleman is that he is not logical; he does not stand to the rule; he will break down his own rule. What was the object of this rule? Not to retrench expenditures here and there in one particular paragraph, but as to the general results of that paragraph, and that cannot be ascertained by the paragraph itself.

Now, here is the trouble: We shall have difficulty with the Senate, and therefore I would adhere to our rule. We shall have conferences and non-concurrences by the Senate. This is a money bill. This is not a transfer bill, but transfer is in it, and therefore it is subject to the point of order. I would not carry this bill to the Senate and say to them: "Sirs, if you do not make this transfer, you will not get the money appropriated by this bill." If you do, there will come a deadlock. We have sent them a bill for this transfer to be voted on in the legitimate way.

To sum up all this whole question in a nutshell, this paragraph in the bill is not germane to an appropriation bill in so far as it makes this transfer, and in the next place no one, unless he was gifted with prescience like that of Omniscience, could tell whether or not this is a general retrenchment.

It has been argued here again and again that although we might save in some particulars by this transfer, in other particulars we would not save and that in the final summing up of results there would be a large balance against the people of the country and therefore this would not be a retrenchment of expenditures. I will not go into the question that has been raised here as to the Commissary Department or the Quartermaster's Department or other Departments, or as to the purchase of commodities by the Indian Bureau to strike a balance to show whether it be retrenchment or not, because that is all involved in the paragraph and no man can tell what the retrenchment is by a mere perusal of the paragraph. In my humble judgment, therefore, it is not within the letter or the spirit of the rule as I understood it when it was adopted.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, obtained the floor.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe this debate is all by consent.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I do not propose on this proposition to re-open the debate which we had here lasting for many days as to the relative merits of the question involved whether the Department of the Interior and the Indian Bureau or the War Department shall have control of the Indian question. I voted in favor of the bill as it passed the House, because in my judgment it was in the interest of humanity to do so as well as in the interest of economy. But as to the proposition now under consideration, I must express my surprise that my two intelligent friends from Massachusetts, and my intelligent colleague from New York cannot see in this a proposition of economy, a saving of the public money. I do not understand how they can view a simple proposition to abolish public officers and impose the duties under existing laws devolving upon those public officers upon existing officers without any increase of their pay—I cannot for my life understand how gentlemen can say that that is not a saving of the public money. If I had been consulted, or if I had been a member of the committee which reported this proposition, I should probably have objected to its phraseology; but understanding this to be in the line of economy, in the line of saving all the salaries of the Indian Bureau and imposing the duties of that Bureau upon an existing Department of the Government without any increase of compensation, and therefore to that extent at least it must be in the interest of economy, it is in my judgment an appropriate proposition to put in an appropriation bill.

I do not desire to discuss the suggestions of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] who last spoke, but there are many instances where appropriation bills in the last Congress and in the Congress preceding the last have created and unmade public officers; we absolutely made laws under the pretext of making an appropriation, and those laws thus made have been executed by the Government and recognized by such ever since. Very much of the legislation of the last ten years has been made in the last moments of the sessions of Congress, by conferees of the two Houses, by incorporating new legislation in appropriation bills; and it is, in my judgment, rather late in the day to raise that objection to this proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HOSKINS,] and then I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] and then I will ask the Speaker to enforce Rule 133.

Mr. HOSKINS. I do not rise to discuss this point of order to any extent, but simply to call the attention of the Speaker of the House to two or three considerations; and first I desire to read the rule. It is as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill, or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Just two propositions are to be considered: First, is this section germane to the bill; second, does it reduce expenditures? I submit that if this section is germane to the bill, then a section transferring the General Land Office to the War Department would also be germane to the bill. If this is germane, then the transfer of the Pension Office would be equally germane to the subject-matter of this bill. A transfer of every Bureau of every other Department might also be made to the War Department under the same rule.

Second, as to the question of retrenchment, there is nothing upon the face of the section itself which indicates, directly or indirectly, that it is in the line of retrenchment. It is asserted on the one hand that it is in the line of retrenchment. It is also as forcibly asserted on the other hand that it is not in the line of retrenchment. But upon the face of the section itself there is no evidence that can guide the Speaker in the determination of the question whether it is in the line of retrenchment or not.

One thing more and I have done. The point of order is taken upon this section, first, that it is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill; second, that it is not in the line of retrenchment. I submit that before the rule can be so construed as to allow this section to come into this bill, it devolves upon those who desire to so open this matter to show affirmatively both that it is germane to the bill and that it is in the line of retrenchment. Now neither of these propositions has been established by any gentleman on the floor of this House. It cannot be determined at this time whether it is in the line of retrenchment or not. Those on the other side of the question have not shown and cannot show affirmatively, first, that this section is germane and, second, that it is in the line of retrenchment. I therefore hold that by all safe and proper rules, both parliamentary and logical, the Speaker must rule this point of order to be well taken.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As to whether this section is germane to the bill or not, I have no doubt whatever. This bill is to make appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, and anything that treats upon those departments I consider to be germane to the bill in the sense contemplated in the new rule, the same as the numerous provisos adopted at the end of appropriation bills generally are; and a safe principle in parliamentary law is, where a doubt exists as to relevancy the House should not be deprived of deciding whether they will adopt or reject a proposition that may be of great interest to the country by the presiding officer, from whose decision the body would not appeal owing in great measure to personal considerations, although their judgment might not concur in the ruling.

As regards the other question, whether this section comes within the rule as to retrenchment, I must say that I believe it does. I was opposed to the adoption of the rule, foreseeing the perplexities that would arise of this nature; and gentlemen who have made arguments here to-day in favor of a ruling against the paragraph would have better made them against the adoption of the rule itself, in which case their conclusions would have been excellent. When we adopted that rule we made provision for passing upon all the legislation relative to the Government in appropriation bills. Then was the time to make these objections and show the dangerous scope of the rule. We now have the rule and see the extent to which it applies, and I see no way other than to enforce it. I see no other decision that the Chair can make except that, as this section does dispose of some of the existing officers of the Government, and confers power and responsibility on others who receive no additional pay, and consequently abolishes salaries, to that extent it does retrench expenditures, if the abolition of offices and the salaries attached can.

The scope and purport of this new rule is more comprehensive in its nature than many of its friends at first anticipated. But the best thing the House can do with the rule now is to enforce it rigidly and according to its letter. When gentlemen become satisfied that we have a rule which takes away from the standing committees of this House all the business heretofore transacted by them, and puts it in the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee of the Whole, under the five-minute rule, they will perhaps be willing to modify the rule, instead of pleading for a forced interpretation that will break its literal force and make its existence in the code tolerable. The habit of adopting new rules for an emergency and changing their literal meaning when they become a plague to their inventors makes it impossible for members to ever comprehend the practice of the House, as forced construction has changed and perverted its rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that he has been more than willing to hear this somewhat lengthy discussion upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. SEELYE] upon the fourth section of the pending bill, because that point is novel and intrinsically of very great importance to the House and to the country. The Chair confesses to a feeling of embarrassment in making his ruling, for the point of order is not free from doubt; on the contrary, it is very much involved and complicated. But as it seems to be the duty of the Chair to make a ruling, he will beg permission of the House to state briefly his reasons therefor.

In the first place, to what considerations, in the making of a ruling, has the Chair a right to look? Can he go outside of this bill and inquire generally, as it is the right and duty of a member upon the floor of this House to do, what will be the effect of this fourth section; or is it his duty to limit his inquiries to the face of the bill, to the specific terms of the section in question, the law of the land so far applicable, and the parliamentary rules and practices of this House? In the judgment of the Chair the range of his investigation is the latter, and he cannot properly go beyond these three considerations. The language of the amended rule is—

> No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

Much has been said on the question whether this fourth section is germane to the subject-matter of this bill. The subject-matter of the bill is indicated in its title, "A bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes." The purpose of the bill further is to regulate the salaries of officers, and in some cases to retrench expenditures by the abolition of officers, and necessarily of their salaries. In other words, in the judgment of the Chair the subject-matter of this bill is so comprehensive that it cannot be said that a provision proposing in specific terms the abolition of numerous officers is not germane to a bill which regulates many offices and fixes the salaries thereto attached and abolishes other offices and their salaries. The Chair has to say, therefore, in conclusion on this point, that he is not embarrassed by the question whether or not this section is germane to the subject-matter of this bill.

The embarrassment of the Chair arises out of the latter portion of the amended rule, "shall retrench expenditures." Does this section retrench expenditures? To answer that inquiry the Chair can only look at the section itself, to the existing law, and to the rules of parliamentary practice and proceedings in this House. The Chair sees that in this bill there is no provision for the practical management of this Bureau of Indian Affairs, if it shall be transferred as proposed by this section; there is no appropriation for that purpose, no regulation of and no indication how the duties of that Bureau after it is transferred shall be performed or by whom those duties shall be performed, other than in the somewhat general language of the section itself. It is true the section provides—

> That the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished, and the execution of all laws and parts of laws applicable to the management of Indian affairs and of matters arising out of Indian relations is hereby lodged with the Secretary of War; and that the duties now being intrusted to and performed by Indian agents and other officials and employés of every kind and description will be performed by officers, soldiers, and employés of the Army.

It is entirely apparent upon the face of this section that the section itself contemplates, distinctly and unequivocally, further and additional and important legislation on this same subject, in order to effectuate the intention of the House as evidenced in this provision. In other words, the section in itself, if enacted, will, of necessity, be incomplete; it will not accomplish the purposes intended by its movers and friends without the aid of additional legislation. It cannot be said, therefore, that, if enacted, it will be such an amendment as "shall retrench expenditures" as the mere result of its own enactment in this bill, unaided by future essential and appropriate legislation.

The inquiry then recurs, is this amendment such a one as by its own force and the other provisions of this bill retrenches expenditures? Does that appear? The Chair might answer, that to abolish an office is the retrenchment of expenditure; and if such abolition were begun and perfected by this bill, the Chair would have no hesitation in holding that such an abolition did accomplish a retrenchment of expenditure; there would then be no doubt on the point. The Chair might also hold that, because it requires the duties now intrusted to Indian agents to be hereafter performed by soldiers, it is the intention of the framers of the provision to require those duties to be performed by those persons without additional compensation. But that does not appear; that is not a perfected result that can follow the enactment of this section into law. Nothing of that kind can result except by the aid of further and additional legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. If the Chair will hear me on that point——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state that this amendment transferring the Indian Bureau needs no further legislation whatever; it stands upon its own feet. It provides that the management of Indian affairs be "transferred from the Department of the Interior to the War Department, and the same are hereby placed under the Secretary of War, agreeably to such regulations as the President may prescribe." It is intentionally so drawn as not to require any additional legislation to make it perfect.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. If the Chair will allow me one word——

Mr. BANKS. I ask that the Speaker's decision may be given without interruption.

Mr. RANDALL. The Speaker invited my suggestion.

Mr. BANKS. I did not so understand.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I beg to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the language used in this section in making the transfer is the precise language that was used in the act transferring this Bureau from the War Department to the Interior Department.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard with great pleasure the suggestions of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; he appreciates their force and is most willing to say that they contribute in great part to the embarrassment the Chair feels in reaching a conclusion on this subject. But the Chair must take official notice of the fact that in this bill no appropriation is made for the Army or for the performance of any of its duties in any of its several bureaus or departments; and the Chair must further officially know that in the ordinary course of legislative proceedings such an appropriation bill must be introduced and enacted before the session expires as of necessity will embrace the further and more complete regulation of this entire subject. Now, the Chair cannot look forward into that legislation and say, upon anything that appears on the face of this section, that such legislation will in all respects coincide with, sustain, or affirm the provisions of this section and carry out the proposed retrenchments indicated in it. In other words, the Chair desires it to be distinctly understood that the point upon which his decision in this case turns is that from the face of the section it does not appear that the provision comes within the requirement of this rule, which is that it shall be germane to the subject-matter of the bill and "shall retrench expenditures." It does not affirmatively appear upon the face of the bill or the laws of the land or the usual and customary mode of proceeding of this body that this section, if enacted in this bill, will retrench expenditures.

In the judgment of the Chair, this rule should have a liberal construction in the interests of retrenchment. The purpose of the rule is most beneficent and proper, and the Chair under any circumstances not attended with extreme doubt would hold it to be his duty to enforce the rule.

The Chair would be further disposed, acting upon a principle of law, to assume prima facie that the judgment of the House in its construction of this rule should be adopted by the Chair where that judgment had been reached after discussion and consideration. But here there is such a novel presentation of the proposition to retrench, having relation to matters to be done in the future, being in itself essentially incomplete, that the Chair does not feel at liberty to decide that the section is in order; and he therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I acquiesce of course in the decision of the Chair without a murmur; but I hope we shall find, and I believe we can find, some other and perhaps more acceptable mode of reaching this same result in some other bill, so that this transfer may be secured. I now ask that the bill may be put on its passage.

Mr. GLOVER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will permit, I ask unanimous consent to make an amendment to the last section.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is operating, and nothing of that kind can be done except by unanimous consent.

Mr. GLOVER. That is what I ask.

Mr. RANDALL. The decision just made by the Speaker takes the section in question entirely out of the bill, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. It does.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask unanimous consent to amend the last section of the bill by striking out the last three words, in order to make the legislation here contemplated in harmony with bills that will hereafter be introduced. I presume the House will understand from the reading of the section the propriety of the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. What are the words which the gentleman proposes to strike out?

Mr. GLOVER. The words are those at the end of the section: "in this bill."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right; those words ought to be struck out.

Mr. HURLBUT. Let the section be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the executive officers of the Government are hereby prohibited from employing any clerk, agent, engineer, draughtsman, messenger, watchman, laborer, or other employé in any of the Executive Departments in the city of Washington or elsewhere, except those for whom specific appropriations are made in this bill.

There being no objection, the amendment proposed by Mr. GLOVER was agreed to.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to reconsider the vote whereby the House non-concurred in the action of the Committee of the Whole upon the amendment to line 1475, increasing the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture from $2,700 to $3,000. Let me state that the matter was not understood on this side of the House when it was voted on.

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

Mr. RUSK. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will hear the explanation at least.

Mr. RANDALL. I will hear nothing out of order.

Mr. RUSK. This side of the House did not understand the question when the vote was taken.

Mr. RANDALL. If so, that was your fault.

Mr. PATTERSON. I wish to ask for a separate vote on an amendment of the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The motion to reconsider is in order to be voted on at this time.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to have a vote taken on one of the amendments of the Committee of the Whole. There was an amendment adopted on motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in committee prohibiting the Legislatures of the Territories from giving to their judges additional compensation. If by accident a respectable judge gets there——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota will state his motion again.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House non-concurred in the amendment of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to line 1475, whereby the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture was made $3,000, instead of $2,700, as it was in the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that motion in order after the previous question has been seconded and the main question ordered and partly executed?

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to inquire whether the motion is not one made in the House?

The SPEAKER. The House non-concurred in the amendment of the Committee of the Whole increasing the salary of the Commissioner of Agriculture from $2,700 to $3,000; and the gentleman from Minnesota now moves to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Which is the pending question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 63.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. RANDALL. I now yield to the gentleman from Colorado, who desires to ask for a separate vote on some proposition made in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment of the Committee of the Whole at the close of the bill in reference to the judges of the Territories.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment does not allow the Legislatures of Territories to vote additional salaries to the territorial judges.

Mr. PATTERSON. The amendment prohibits the territorial Legislatures from allowing additional salaries to territorial judges.

Mr. STEELE. It comes in at the end of line 1033.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no salary shall be paid to or accepted by any judge of the supreme court of any Territory except what is paid from the Treasury of the United States or by express enactment of Congress.

Mr. PATTERSON. This amendment of the Committee of the Whole prohibits the territorial Legislature from allowing compensation——

Mr. RANDALL. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The amendment comes from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the question is on concurrence in that amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 104, noes 23.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL. I now demand the previous question on the title of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the title of the bill was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. RANDALL demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 210, nays 18, not voting 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, Banks, Banning, Barnum, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Candler, Cason, Cate, Chapin, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Miles Ross, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Seelye, Sheakley, Singleton, Sinnickson, Slemons, A. Herr Smith, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Strait, Stenger, Stevenson, Tarbox, Teese, Terry, Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Tucker, Tufts, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Wait, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, James Wilson, Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates—210.

NAYS—Messrs. Bradley, Farwell, Freeman, Haralson, Benjamin W. Harris, Hoar, Hurlbut, Kelley, Lapham, Lynch, O'Neill, Plaisted, Platt, Smalls, Stowell, G. Wiley Wells, Whiting, and Alan Wood, jr.—18.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blaine, Boone, Cabell, Campbell, Cannon, Caswell, Caulfield, Crapo, Dobbins, Durand, Eames, Egbert, Faulkner, Foster, Frost, Gunter, Hancock, Hathorn, Hays, Henkle, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoge, Hubbell, Hunton, Hyman, Frank Jones, Kasson, King, George M. Landers, Edmund W. M. Mackey, Magoon, McCrary, Meade, Mills, Nash, Oliver, Page, Pratt, Purman, Sobieski Ross, Schumaker, Stone, Swann, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Ward, Charles G. Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Woodburn, and Young—62.

So the bill was passed.

During the vote,

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee, stated that his colleague, Mr. YOUNG, who was absent by leave of the House, would if present vote in the affirmative.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS stated that his colleague, Mr. DURAND, who was absent by leave of the House, would if present vote in the affirmative.

Mr. FORT stated that his colleagues, Mr. CAMPBELL and Mr. CANNON, were absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SAMPSON stated that his colleague, Mr. KASSON, was absent by leave of the House.

Mr. LUTTRELL. My colleague, Mr. PAGE, is detained at home on account of the serious illness of a member of his family.

Mr. MILLIKEN. My colleague, Mr. BOONE, is absent, by leave of the House.

Mr. MILLER. My colleague, Mr. GEORGE A. BAGLEY, has been called from the House to attend the funeral of a relative.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. My colleague, Mr. ADAMS, is absent on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri, said: I was unavoidably called out during the vote taken on the appropriation bill a few minutes ago, and I ask unanimous consent to record my vote.

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILIPS, of Missouri. I vote "ay."

DUTIES OF THE CHAIR.

Mr. RANDALL. At the personal request of the Chair I submit the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the following proviso be added to Rule 5, as part thereof:

Provided, however, That in case of the personal illness of the Speaker he may make such appointment for a period not exceeding ten days with the approval of the House at the time the same is made.

Mr. RANDALL. That changes the existing rule in this particular. The existing rule allows the Speaker—

To name any member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment.

This amendment allows him to make such appointment with the approval of the House for a period not exceeding ten days.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask that the resolution may be again read.

The resolution was again read.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. CONGER said: I wish to make a point of order on the resolution just adopted amending Rule 5. It is this: That as a two-thirds vote is required to change a rule it should have been announced by the Chair that the resolution was adopted by a two-thirds vote. I think the record should show that the amendment was made by a two-thirds vote, as was actually the case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair.) The Chair heard no objection to the adoption of the resolution and no negative vote was taken.

Mr. DURHAM. I beg to correct the Chair. There was a negative vote. I voted against the resolution myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair failed to hear the negative vote of the gentleman from Kentucky. The Chair heard no negative vote.

Mr. DURHAM. There were other votes in the negative besides mine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the judgment of the Chair, the point of order is fairly suggested and well taken; but it is too late.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before the Chair decides that it requires a two-thirds vote to change a rule, I desire to have the rule on that subject read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is useless to discuss the point of order as it was taken too late. It was not made until after the Chair had entertained the motion to reconsider, and had announced that the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I make no point of order; I merely suggested that the Chair should have announced that the amendment to the rule was adopted by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Chair should not have announced any such thing. It is not required by the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the judgment of the present occupant of the chair a two-thirds vote is not required to change a rule. It requires a two-thirds vote to suspend a rule. It requires one day's notice to change a rule; but the point was not made that there was no notice, and the resolution was treated by the House as being introduced by unanimous consent.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SCALES. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to introduce a bill on which it is necessary that there should be immediate action.

Mr. RUSK. I call for the regular order, so that we may have a morning hour.

Mr. SCALES. This is a bill which I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report. It makes an appropriation of $50,000 for subsistence supplies for Apache Indians in Arizona Territory. I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will withdraw his objection.

Mr. RUSK. After we have had a morning hour I will not object to anything.

Mr. SCALES. I have been waiting for one week to report this bill.

Mr. RUSK. I yield to the gentleman.

APACHE INDIANS.

Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3269) to appropriate $50,000 for subsistence supplies for Apache Indians in Arizona Territory, and for the removal of the Indians of the Chiricahua agency to San Carlo agency; which was read a first and second time.

The bill appropriates the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to provide for subsistence supplies for the Apache Indians in Arizona Territory, from the 1st of May to the 30th of June, 1876; said subsistence supplies to be purchased in open market, if in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior it shall be deemed best. And if any surplus remain after the purchase of said supplies, the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to defray the expenses incident to the removal of the Indians of the Chiricahua agency to the San Carlo agency in said Territory, whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior such removal may be deemed necessary.

Mr. SCALES. I desire to state to the House that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Indian Affairs. The necessity and urgency of the appropriation is shown by the letter of the Secretary of War, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, April 15, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit for your information copy of telegram dated the 14th instant, from General Sheridan, communicating reports of General Pope and Colonel Hatch of the breaking away from their reservation of Apache Indians, having killed several persons and stolen cattle; and that Indians of this tribe are leaving Canada Alamosa and stealing cattle because they have no food, from which serious results may be expected unless food is furnished promptly.

Copy of telegram of the 13th instant from Major-General Schofield is also transmitted herewith, reporting the killing of two men by Chiricahua Indians and their pursuit by troops, and that Governor Safford believes the whole tribe has broken out; and the measures taken under the circumstances by Colonel Kautz.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. F. CROSBY,
Chief Clerk, for and in the absence of the Secretary.

Honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. SCALES. I have here the telegrams referred to in the letter of the Secretary of War, but I will not ask that they be read. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage and that the accompanying papers be printed.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether this appropriation is under the stipulations of any treaty, or whether it is a mere appropriation within the discretion of the Department?

Mr. SCALES. My understanding is that it is not under any treaty. It is a deficiency in the appropriation of last year, a deficiency less this year than there has been at any time within the last four years. Before presenting this bill to the House I submitted it to the Committee on Appropriations, in order to see if it was possible that they might raise any objection to it, and I understood that they had no objection to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not raise any objection to the passage of this bill, but it is not inappropriate to call the attention of the House to the management of Indian affairs that requires constant deficiencies. This I think is the third this session, if not the fourth. Neither is this appropriation asked for in obedience to the requirements of any treaty between this Government and the Indians. It is a part of that system which has made the Indian appropriation bill amount to millions of dollars more to-day as compared with the former management of Indian affairs when the appropriations amounted to but a few hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the House in acting on this bill will understand that if this appropriation be made there will have been appropriated for the Indians, not under any treaty, a quarter of a million of dollars during the present session up to this time: $150,000, $25,000, and now $50,000, making in all $225,000. These appropriations are made not under treaties, but as deficiencies for the present fiscal year over and above the heavy appropriations made at the last session of the last Congress.

Mr. HALE. Is not the amount much smaller, large though it may be, than the deficiencies passed in years before?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, there have been larger deficiencies, certainly.

Mr. HALE. They were never so small within the last ten years.

Mr. SCALES. No, sir; never within the last ten years.

Mr. RANDALL. Not as to this tribe, perhaps.

Mr. HOLMAN. Until recently we appropriated no money for the Indians in Arizona and New Mexico; and while we left these Indians to themselves they seem to have got along tolerably well so far as the country was informed; it is only since we have taken them under our guardianship that these drains on the Treasury have been found necessary to provide food for them.

Mr. HALE. They got along well so far as the country in Indiana and Maine was concerned, but so far as the country on the border and the settlers there were concerned before we adopted this policy they did not get along very well; there were murders and raids every month.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the contrary, so far as the Indians in Arizona and New Mexico were concerned, with the exception of those down on the Mexican border in New Mexico, there were comparatively few disturbances for quite a number of years.

I do not overlook the claim that a humane policy toward the Indians imposes upon us. That cannot be overlooked; but it must be borne in mind that by these means we are making enormous appropriations for the support of Indian tribes, and not under any treaty stipulations.

Mr. SEELYE. The question is a very simple one.

Mr. HOOKER. Will the gentleman allow the telegram of General Sheridan to be read?

Mr. SEELYE. The gentleman asks for the reading of the telegram from General Sheridan, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. SCALES. It is already stated in the letter of the Secretary of War, which has been read; and therefore I did not have the telegrams read, because I did not want to detain the House. I think the House is ready for the passage of the bill, but if the gentleman desires it I will ask that the telegram of General Sheridan be read.

Mr. RANDALL. Read General Sheridan's opinion about the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department and the saving which it will involve.

Mr. SCALES. That question is disposed of.

Mr. COX. Have his dispatch from New Orleans read. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCALES. I move the previous question.

Mr. SEELYE. While the telegram is being found——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the gentleman from North Carolina who has charge of the bill has moved the previous question.

Mr. SCALES. I will yield for a moment to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. SEEYLE. It has been objected that there is no treaty stipulation providing for the payment of this $50,000. We have just had the return of an expedition from the Northwest which was fitted out under the War Department at an expense of $230,000, which made an expedition four hundred miles to the Northwest, which shot one Indian woman in the thigh, which broke up an Indian village of eighty lodges, and which scattered the old men and children among the snow, and then returned. There was no treaty stipulation for that; and there is no treaty stipulation for this. The question is whether we shall feed these Indians or fight them.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire for a moment to call the attention of the House to this character of appropriations in the management of Indian affairs without any treaty stipulations. In examining the Indian appropriation bill I discover that hundreds of thousands of dollars are being appropriated year after year, when in fact the treaties under which these payments were made have all expired; and I find furthermore that the terms of the treaties as to the goods to be furnished have been violated and changed, and that a double amount of money is used by the Indian Bureau in connection with the purchase of goods that the law or the treaties authorize.

I will be able to show these facts more intelligibly and more conclusively when the Indian appropriation bill shall come before the House. My purpose, however, is accomplished; not so much to obstruct the passage of this bill as to show to this House and to call their attention to the loss caused by the improvident management of Indian affairs by the Interior Department.

Mr. SCALES. I now insist upon the previous question.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I desire to say that this call comes from the Military Department, those who are charged with being the most unkind toward the Indians, but who are really the kindest toward them.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time.

The question was taken upon the passage of the bill; and upon a division there were—ayes 74, noes 43.

Mr. RANDALL. Is that a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. FORT and Mr. SCALES were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 102, noes 46.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. COCHRANE called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 25 in the affirmative; not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. COCHRANE called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering tellers, and there were 38 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of a quorum) tellers were ordered; and Mr. COCHRANE and Mr. SCALES were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 36 in the affirmative; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAISH. I ask that the bill be again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has already been read three times; if there be no objection it will be again read.

Objection was made.

Mr. SCALES. If the House will allow me to make a statement——

Objection was made.

Mr. SCALES. Well, I have done my duty.

Mr. TUCKER. The bill seems to have given rise to a great deal of difference of opinion, and I ask that it may be again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has been three times reported already, and objection is made to its being again reported.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is it in order now, so that we may vote intelligently, to have some telegrams read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No debate is in order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent for the purpose.

Objection was made.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 79, not voting 86; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, Banks, Banning, Blackburn, Blair, Bland, Bradley, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, William P. Townsend, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, Wheeler, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Young—86.

So the bill was passed.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. THROCKMORTON said: My colleague, Mr. REAGAN, has been called from the House by reason of sickness in his family.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Tennessee. My colleague, Mr. YOUNG, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. SCALES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1251) to exclude the State of Missouri from the provisions of the act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 536) granting the right of way through the public lands for wagon-roads over the Blue Mountains, in the State of Oregon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RUSK. I now call for the regular order of business.

Mr. BRIGHT. In view of the call for the regular order, I ask unanimous consent of the House that to-morrow be assigned for private bills, with the same privileges as to-day.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I must object. I am willing that the remainder of to-day may be devoted to the consideration of private bills, but I want to call up an election case to-morrow.

Mr. HALE. To-day and to-morrow were assigned for the consideration of the Geneva award bill. In the absence of the gentleman having that bill in charge, I must object to the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT.]

Mr. RUSK. I insist upon my call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being called for, the first business now in order, this being Friday, is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports of a private nature.

Mr. BRIGHT. Is it in order to move to dispense with the morning hour for the purpose of considering the Private Calendar in Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I move that the rules be suspended and the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the business on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to, upon a division, ayes 92, noes not counted.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. HOLMAN in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. This being objection day, the Clerk will resume the reading of the bills at the point where he stopped on the last objection day.

ALMONT BARNES.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1200) for the relief of Almont Barnes.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Almont Barnes, late captain of Battery C, First New York Light Artillery, the sum of $150, the amount of his claim for money advanced for the benefit of members of his battery while in the service of the United States upon the security of vouchers for company savings now unpaid and on file in the Office of the Commissary-General of the Army, such vouchers having been presented at too late a date for their payment from any fund authorized for such purposes.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

S. T. MARSHALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2695) for the relief of S. T. Marshall, of Lee County, Iowa.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to S. T. Marshall, of Lee County, Iowa, whatever sum may be found to be due him on account of beef-cattle furnished the United States for the use of the Indian Department in California in 1851 upon a fair and equitable settlement of his accounts (as assignee of G. M. Marshall) with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. McCRARY. I do not rise to object to this bill, but to offer a verbal amendment, which the gentleman having charge of the bill is willing to have adopted. I move to amend so that the last part of the bill will read as follows:

Upon a fair and equitable settlement of his claim therefor as assignee of G. M. Marshall, such settlement to be made with the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. COCHRANE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Objection to the bill was made by Mr. EDEN.

JOHN GOWERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to so correct the record of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, as to remove the charge of desertion now standing against his name.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

L. M. BLACKMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2695) for the relief of L. M. Blackman, late regimental quartermaster of the Fourth Tennessee Cavalry.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to L. M. Blackman, of Tennessee, the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant and regimental quartermaster from the 20th day of August, 1862, to the 13th day of December, 1862, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, deducting therefrom any pay or allowances he may have received as an officer or enlisted man for the time stated in this act.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

The First East Tennessee Cavalry, afterward the Fourth Tennessee Cavalry, was enlisted by our Army while in the field at Cumberland Gap, and elsewhere, from refugees from the loyal people of East Tennessee. A portion of this regiment was organized while at Cumberland Gap, in August, 1862, and the recruits, as fast as enlisted, were organized into companies and placed on active duty. It became necessary to have a regimental quartermaster to receive, issue, and be responsible for quartermaster supplies for this command, and Colonel R. M. Edwards, then in command, appointed and placed on duty as first lieutenant and quartermaster L. M. Blackman, who performed the duties of regimental quartermaster, and received, issued, and accounted for quartermaster supplies for this command until the 13th day of December, 1862, when he received his commission, and from which date he was paid. The failure to receive a commission and muster, it appears, was owing to the fact that the command of George W. Morgan was cut off from communication while occupying Cumberland Gap and while marching back through Kentucky to Western Ohio, and also owing to the fact that Tennessee was then under Andrew Johnson, military governor, who had not yet organized a State government sufficiently to furnish commissions and organize regiments which were on duty in the field when remote from the State capital. The committee find that no other regimental quartermaster served at this time or was paid for the time claimed; that L. M. Blackman did perform all the duties, and has not been compensated therefor, for the reason above stated. They therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

CLAIMS ON CHINESE INDEMNITY FUND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2697) supplementary to the act entitled "An act to carry into effect the convention between the United States and China, concluded on the 8th day of November, 1858, at Shanghai," approved March 2, 1859, and to give the Court of Claims jurisdiction in certain cases.

(Objected to by Mr. SEELYE.)

MARY DESBROW.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2698) granting a pension to Mary Desbrow.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-rolls the name of Mary Desbrow, widow of Erastus Desbrow, deceased, a private soldier in the war of 1812, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and that her pension shall be paid from and after the 1st day of January, 1870.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

THOMAS CRAWFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2699) restoring the name of Thomas Crawford, a soldier of the Mexican war, to the pension-rolls.

The bill was read. It requires the Secretary of the Interior to restore to and place upon the pension-roll of the United States the name of Thomas Crawford, a private in Company K, Second Regiment United States Infantry, of the State of Indiana, a soldier of the Mexican war, whose name was stricken from the roll upon his enlistment in the United States Army during the late war against the rebellion; and provides that Crawford be paid the same sum and under the same limitations that he was paid before his name was stricken from the pension-roll.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARIA W. SANDERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 375) for the relief of Maria W. Sanders.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Maria W. Sanders, of Pittsburgh, in the State of Pennsylvania, upon the list of pensioners, as the widow of Brevet Major John Sanders, at the rate of $30 per month, to continue during her widowhood.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

EDWARD DEMPSEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2700) granting a pension to Edward Dempsey, late private Company C, Fourth Kentucky Cavalry.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Edward Dempsey, late private Company C, Fourth Kentucky Cavalry, granting an increased pension, to be $36 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

CHARLES BUGBEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1995) granting a pension to Charles Bugbee.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles H. Bugbee, late a private in Company A, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

That the said Charles H. Bugbee was mustered into the service on August 6, 1862, as a private in Company A, Third Regiment Vermont Volunteers, and was mustered out of service on the 19th of June, 1865; that said Charles H. Bugbee, while in the line of his duty near White Oaks Church, Virginia, contracted a severe cold, which settled on his lungs, which cold and cough continued till his discharge, and at the same time contracted rheumatism, which continued and gave him much trouble, and from the effects of which he is still suffering. There is no hospital record of his case, but the fact is shown by the affidavits of comrades and the captain of his company. He is unable to furnish the evidence of his regimental surgeons, as one is dead and the other cannot be found. He has been treated since by several physicians, who concur in stating that he is disabled. The affidavits of his employers state that they only pay him partial wages when he does work, and that frequently he is not able to do anything. The evidence shows that he is a man of good habits and that he was a faithful soldier.

Further, that a bill granting said Charles H. Bugbee a pension passed the House of Representatives of the Forty-third Congress, February 18, 1875, and failed to pass the Senate for want of time.

Your committee would therefore report favorably and recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

NANCY H. BLACKNALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2701) granting a pension to Nancy H. Blacknall, widow of Thomas I. Blacknall, late private Company L, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy H. Blacknall, wife of Thomas Y. Blacknall, late private of Company L, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry, and to pension her from and after the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

NANCY TRUE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 504) granting a pension to Nancy True.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy True, dependent mother of Samuel F. True, late lieutenant and quartermaster in the Fourteenth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, to date from September 1, 1875.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELMIRA E. CRAVATH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 40) granting a pension to Elmira E. Cravath.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elmira E. Cravath, widow of Isaac M. Cravath, late captain in the Twelfth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE M. D. THORNTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2078) granting a pension to George M. D. Thornton, late of Company C, One hundred and nineteenth Illinois Volunteers.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George M. D. Thornton, some time a private in Company C, One hundred and nineteenth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BRIDGET T. HOPPER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2702) granting a pension to Bridget T. Hopper.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Bridget T. Hopper, widow of Edward A. Hopper, late captain of Company G, Fifth Regiment New Jersey Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WARREN F. WOOD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2703) granting a pension to Warren F. Wood.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Warren F. Wood, late a private in Company E, Eleventh Regiment of Vermont Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSHUA W. BLACK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2704) granting a pension to Joshua W. Black.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joshua W. Black, late a private in Company K, Twenty-sixth Regiment of Maine Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SARAH BUERY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2705) granting a pension to Sarah Buery.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Buery, widow of Charles Buery, late sergeant in Company D, Ninety-fifth Regiment New York Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE W. LEAMY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2706) granting a pension to George W. Leamy.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George W. Leamy, formerly a second lieutenant of Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Cavalry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY F. HALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2707) granting a pension to Mary F. Hall.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary F. Hall, widow of Theodore Hall, formerly a private in Captain W. H. Diggs's Company, District of Columbia Militia.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES ELI BUTTS AND MALINDA FRANCES BUTTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S No. 425) granting a pension to James Eli Butts and Malinda Frances Butts.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of James Eli Butts and Malinda Frances Butts, minor heirs of Joseph Butts, late a private in Company G, Seventh Regiment Maryland Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. ALLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1496) granting a pension to Mary A. Allen.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Allen, widow of George B. Allen, private in the Fourth Regiment of Michigan Volunteer Cavalry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PRESIDIO OR FORT POINT RESERVATION.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 130) to relinquish the interests of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California.

The bill, which was read, provides that all the right and title of the United States to the following-described portion of the military reservation known as the Presidio or Fort Point reservation, situated in the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, be, and the same are hereby, relinquished and granted to the said city and county, and its successors, assigns, and vendees, for the benefit of persons who, if the said land had not been reserved for public use, would have been entitled thereto under the ordinance No. 800, of the city of San Francisco, ratified by act of the Legislature of said State, approved on the 27th day of March, 1868, entitled "An act to confirm a certain order passed by the board of supervisors of the city of San Francisco," relating to these premises, and being more particularly described as follows: Commencing at the southeasterly corner of the said Presidio or Fort Point reservation, and thence running in a direct line due north to the shore-line of the Bay of San Francisco; thence westerly along the said shore-line to a point eighty feet west of the easterly line of the said Presidio or Fort Point reservation, as established by the United States authorities, said eighty feet being granted for a public highway or street, named Lyon street; thence southerly to a point on the southerly line of said reservation, where the west line of Lyon street intersects said line; thence easterly to the point of commencement, to conform as near as possible to the plan of the city map of streets of San Francisco outside of reservation, said plan being now on file in the office of the War Department of the city of Washington; provided that Lyon street shall be extended to the Bay of San Francisco eighty feet wide, and is hereby dedicated for a public highway and street forever; provided further that Broadway, Vallejo, Green, Union, Filbert, Greenwich, Lombard, Chestnut, Francisco, Bay, North Point, Jefferson, Tonquin, and Lewis streets, as laid down on the official map of the city and county of San Francisco, be extended westerly to intersect the easterly line of Lyon street as herein provided, be, and are hereby, dedicated as public highways and streets forever.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

This is a bill to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco, California. It appears from the records presented that the Presidio military reservation was originally surveyed and set apart under proper authority, but some years subsequently was resurveyed, when it was found that the new survey included a portion of the city plat of San Francisco, already laid out, settled upon, and improved to the value of a large amount. Hence the title originally acquired and held bona fide by the city of San Francisco to that portion of land found to be, by resurvey, included within the Presidio reservation is clouded by the title of the Government. The land is not needed for military purposes, and inasmuch as the title of the city and county of San Francisco thereto appears so have been acquired equitably, and in good faith, and in due respect to the original survey and determination of the boundary-line of the said Presidio military reservation and the rights of persons in and to the said lands and the improvements thereupon, having vested in good faith, and in proper succession under an equitable title, believed originally to have been legal, the Government should not continue to cloud the title through the errors or omissions of its officers who first made said survey.

The tract in controversy being only the narrow triangular or wedge-shaped area between the old meridian and new meridian, and containing but a few acres of land, the committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PETER WRIGHT & SONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2826) to refund and remit certain duties to Peter Wright & Sons.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Peter Wright & Sons, of Philadelphia, the amount of duties paid by them upon the entry of three thousand and fifty bags of potato-farina, imported per ships Vaderland and Nederland, in the months of April and June, 1874, and to remit any claim on the part of the United States for duties upon three hundred bags of the same, entered by said parties in December, 1873, and February, 1874, which had been admitted to entry free of duty; provided that from the amount of duties paid there shall be deducted an amount equal to all the profits which had been realized by said Peter Wright & Sons upon the sale of the article so imported, to be ascertained as the said Secretary shall direct.

The report was read as follows:

Farina, prior to June 6, 1872, was subject, as an unenumerated article not otherwise specified, to the ad valorem duty of 20 per cent. That act placed it upon the free list.

On the 16th of June, 1873, the petitioners, Peter Wright & Sons, received a consignment of fifty bags of potato-farina, which was admitted to entry and passed as such free of duty.

Subsequent importations were made, and in like manner entered and passed free of duty, as follows: December, 1873, one hundred bags; February, 1874, two hundred bags.

The attention of the Secretary of the Treasury was called to these importations by complaints made to him that unsuccessful attempts had been made to enter "potato-starch" as "potato-farina" free of duty at the ports of Boston and New York, but that such importations were admitted free of duty at the port of Philadelphia, in evasion of the law.

The Secretary of the Treasury, on the 24th of March, 1874, called the attention of the collector at Philadelphia to these reports and directed an investigation.

The subject having been referred to Mr. E. B. Moore, the appraiser at Philadelphia, by whom the importations had been classified as farina, Mr. Lorin Blodget, the general appraiser, made a report disagreeing with the conclusions of the appraiser, and holding as follows:

"The term 'farina,' as made free by the act of June 6, 1872, cannot be properly held to embrace any commercial form of 'starch.' The two products are distinct, and it cannot be that the act of 1872 was intended to repeal the duty on starch in all forms, as it must be held to do if the duty on potato-starch is repealed. Starch is always made by crushing and soaking any grain or starch-producing root in water; then it is repeatedly washed and settled until all the gluten, coloring-matter, and matter containing albumen or nitrogen is wholly removed; while 'farina' is simply a finely-ground flour of such grains or roots, and it still contains gluten, nitrogen, and albumen.

"Farina of wheat, corn, or grain is an edible product, while pure starch is not, or only partially so. Farina and starch would never be regarded as identical in commercial usage, although in chemical nomenclature they are not so far separated."

The collector thereupon assessed duty on the importations as starch, upon which, under the act of June 30, 1864, a duty was imposed of one cent a pound and 20 per cent. ad valorem, which rate was also assessed upon the prior importations.

The Treasury Department subsequently obtained the opinion of the appraiser at the port of New York, who approved and forwarded an able and elaborate report from the assistant appraiser. Defining starch, he says:

"The word 'starch' has been used in the laws from time immemorial. It is a word of exceedingly definite, scientific, commercial, and popular signification and in universal employment. It is the only word by which the commodity bought and sold under that name is ever designated in commerce. It is synonymous with no other, it is convertible with no other word.

"So far as the term 'farina' is used in commerce, it is employed altogether as an empirical designation for certain special or patented products, such as 'Hecker's farina' or 'Jewell's farina,' and neither of these, nor any other 'farina' of which any of the experts in this Department has knowledge, is manufactured from 'starch;'" and holding that the article in question was clearly starch, and liable to duty as such at the rate of one cent per pound and 20 per cent. ad valorem.

The committee concur with the opinion and final decision of the Treasury Department in regard to the duty imposed by law upon the several importations of potato-farina made by the petitioners.

The transactions, however, as claimed by the petitioners and sustained by affidavits, have resulted in a heavy loss to Messrs. Wright & Sons. Upon the decision of the appraiser and the admission of the first importations thereunder free of duty, the petitioners ordered further shipments, and made contracts at prices below the cost at which the goods could be laid down if dutiable.

That the entries were made in good faith and believed by the petitioners to be free of duty is not questioned, and seems to be attested by the attending circumstances and the conflicting opinions of the appraisers and seeming discrepancies in the definitions of farina as presented by the highest standard scientific and commercial authorities. The New American Cyclopedia (1860) defines the word "farina" as follows:

"Farina, (Lat. farina, flour,) the fine flour obtained by grinding and sifting any kind of grain. The name is also applied to the starch obtained from roots and grains."

Chambers's Encyclopedia says:

"Cassava-meal, which contains, along with starch, much vegetable fiber and protein or albuminous substances, is commonly called farina (Farinha) in many parts of South America, where it is a principal article of food."

Brande's Dictionary of Science and Art, however, defines it as follows:

"Farina, (Lat n,) meal or flour obtained by grinding and sifting wheat and other seeds; hence the term farinaceous food."

Farina is a Latin word transferred to our language, and in its original signification is defined by White's Latin-English Dictionary to be ground corn, meal, flour. The importers nevertheless might readily and honestly have entertained the erroneous opinion that the article in question was entitled to be imported free of duty.

Mr. Charles F. Conant, of the Treasury Department, in a letter to the collector of the port of Philadelphia, dated July 3, 1874, says:

"To the practice at your port of admitting potato-starch to free entry under the provision for 'farina' contained in the act of June 6, 1872. It appears that such action was based upon the opinion of the appraiser that starch and farina are the same article.

"Upon investigation of the matter, the Department has arrived at the conclusion that the opinion of the appraiser in this respect is not well-founded, but that there is a clear and well-recognized distinction between starch and farina, both in the nature of the articles and in their commercial designation. It would seem that farina is the flour of corn and starchy roots; while starch is not the flour, but is defined as the fecula or proximate principle of the corn or the root, and also that the processes of manufacture of the two articles are entirely different, nor is it understood that the articles are commercially recognized as one and the same thing.

"It is therefore the opinion of the Department that the importations of potato-starch referred to were dutiable at one cent per pound and 20 per cent. ad valorem, under the thirteenth section of the act of June 30, 1864, and you will therefore be governed accordingly.

"I have further to say that all doubt upon the question as to future importations has been removed by the codification act approved June 22, 1874, in which provision is made for starch made of potatoes or corn at one cent per pound and 20 per cent. ad valorem, while farina is therein placed upon the free list."

Upon this review of the facts connected with the importations referred to and the loss entailed thereby upon the petitioners, the committee concur in the conclusions of the Ways and Means Committee of the Forty-third Congress, "That it would be unjust to subject these importers to the loss inevitably resulting from a change in the ruling of the customs officers after the sale of the goods imported without fault on the part of the importers. They therefore recommend that the duties paid by Peter Wright & Sons, under protest, be refunded, and that they be further relieved by the remission of any claim on the part of the United States for the duties alleged to be due upon the like articles which had been passed duty free, so far as to indemnify them against loss in the transaction," and recommend the passage of the bill accompanying this report.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I move that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 25.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HOLMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole had, according to order, had the Private Calendar under consideration, and had directed him to report sundry bills, some with and some without amendment.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

Mr. RUSK. I object to anything but the regular order.

PRIVATE BILLS PASSED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the consideration of the private bills reported by the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar with favorable recommendations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the bills be reported by their titles, and that unless there be objection the bills be considered as passed.

There was no objection.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar were severally read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 1200) for the relief of Almont Barnes;

A bill (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2696) for the relief of L. M. Blackman, late regimental quartermaster of the Fourth Tennessee Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 2698) granting a pension to Mary Desbrow;

A bill (H. R. No. 2699) restoring the name of Thomas Crawford, a soldier of the Mexican war, to the pension-rolls;

A bill (H. R. No. 2700) granting a pension to Edward Dempsey, late private Company C, Fourth Kentucky Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1995) granting a pension to Charles H. Bugbee;

A bill (H. R. No. 2701) granting a pension to Nancy H. Blacknall, widow of Thomas T. Blacknall, late private Company L, Seventh Tennessee Cavalry;

A bill (S. No. 504) granting a pension to Nancy True;

A bill (S. No. 40) granting a pension to Elmira E. Cravath;

A bill (H. R. No. 2078) granting a pension to George M. D. Thornton, late of Company C, One hundred and nineteenth Illinois Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. No. 2702) granting a pension to Bridget T. Hopper;

A bill (H. R. No. 2703) granting a pension to Warren F. Wood;

A bill (H. R. No. 2704) granting a pension to Joshua W. Black;

A bill (H. R. No. 2705) granting a pension to Sarah Buery;

A bill (H. R. No. 2706) granting a pension to George W. Leamy;

A bill (H. R. No. 2707) granting a pension to Mary F. Hall;

A bill (S. No. 425) granting a pension to James Eli Butts and Melinda Frances Butts;

A bill (H. R. No. 1496) granting a pension to Mary A. Allen;

An act (S. No. 130) to relinquish the interests of the United States in certain lands in the city and county of San Francisco in the State of California; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2826) to refund and remit certain duties to Peter Wright & Sons.

MARIA W. SANDERS.

The bill (S. No. 375) for the relief of Maria W. Saunders, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, was read by its title.

Mr. RUSK. I call for the reading of that bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be no objection to recommitting this bill, as it is out of the usual order, to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and that it may be allowed to take its place on the Calendar without prejudice.

Mr. RUSK. I have no objection to that.

The bill was recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. MACKEY, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on the bill introduced by him with reference to the Washington Monument. [See Appendix.]

MACHINERY FOR PREPARATION OF RAW SILK.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3270) for the admission of machinery for the preparation of raw silk free of duty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MARY B. KIRBY.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3271) for the relief of Mary B. Kirby; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JONATHAN SCHROCK.

Mr. JOHN REILLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3272) granting a pension to Jonathan Schrock, of Somerset County, Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELLEN J. BROSMAN.

Mr. CONGER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 3273) for the relief of Ellen J. Brosman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SESSION OF SATURDAY.

Mr. DUNNELL. I suggest that the session of to-morrow, by unanimous consent, be a session for debate only, no other business to be transacted.

Mr. BANNING. Will the gentleman add: and the call of committees for reports on private bills?

Mr. FRY. I hope that order will not be made. The Geneva award bill was assigned for to-day, and from day to day thereafter; and I have no doubt that the gentleman from New York, [Mr. LORD,] who is otherwise engaged to-day, is very desirous of bringing up that bill to-morrow. There will be no vote upon it to-morrow, and the day may as well be spent in the discussion of that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Maine object to the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. FRYE. I do.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to state that there is a report on a contested-election case which the Committee of Elections desire to call up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has been made, and the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota is not before the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 522) to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was given, as follows: Mr. CLARKE, of Kentucky, till Tuesday next; Mr. DOBBINS for three days, on account of important business; Mr. JONES, of Kentucky, for ten days, on account of important business; Mr. HURD for five days, on account of business; Mr. WALKER, of New York, for ten days, to attend to important business; Mr. JONES, of New Hampshire, until Tuesday next.

JOHN R. HARRINGTON.

On motion of Mr. JOYCE, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in connection with the bill (H. R. No. 204) for the relief of John R. Harrington, introduced December 15, 1875, and referred to the Committee on Patents, there having been no adverse report thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, (at five o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BAKER: The petition of Erasmus A. Cockett, late a private in the United States Army, to be placed on the pension-rolls on account of disability contracted in the military service, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BANNING: The petition of S. G. Going, veterinary surgeon First United States Cavalry, that veterinary surgeons in the United States Army be placed on the same footing as Army surgeons, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BARNUM: The petition of John S. G. Burt, Galen A. Carter, and 150 other citizens of Connecticut and New York, for the appointment of a committee to investigate the alleged unjust and unjustifiable, if not unlawful, proceedings and decree of Justice W. B. Wood, issued on the 14th day of February, 1876, relative to the holders of United States court receivers' certificates, issued by order of Justice Bradley, August 26, 1872, in the case of The Alabama and Chattanooga Railroad Company, referred to Special Master J. W. Burke and Commissioner of Review Hon. P. Phillips, and since adjudicated by Justice W. B. Wood, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of Davis Hatch, for an investigation of the Santo Domingo violation of international law by the imprisonment of an American citizen without cause, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BLACKBURN: The petition of the heirs of A. C. Leekie, for compensation for the illegal seizure and sale of certain property in Iroquois County, Illinois, by United States revenue officers, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. COX: Memorial of soldiers of the war of 1812, for an increase of pension; for the passage of the bill, now pending, granting pensions to all those who served thirty days or more and were honorably discharged, and to the widows who were married to the soldiers of said war prior to 1850, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Also, the petition of Fabbri & Chauncey, of New York City, that they be paid $100, the amount of postage-stamps belonging to them, lost in the steamship Bienville in 1872, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. DE BOLT: The petition of Joseph Williams and others, for a post-route from Unionville, Putnam County, Missouri, via Terre Haute, Newtown, and Ravanna, to Princeton, in Mercer County, Missouri, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. DURHAM: The petition of citizens of Wayne County, Kentucky, for a post-route from Parmleysville to Mount Pisgah, Kentucky, to the same committee.

By Mr. FORT: The petition of O. D. Sackett and 90 other citizens of Ford County, Illinois, for the repeal of the resumption act of 1875, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts: Remonstrance of Edgar L. Clark and 21 other workingmen of Plymouth County, Massachusetts, against the proposed reduction of the duties on imports, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Ellridge G. Horton, by his attorney, Gordon Hall Nott, for an extension of letters-patent on the patent No. 95601, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HOPKINS: The petition of Mrs. Mary Lavalette, widow of Admiral Lavalette, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KELLEY: The petition of citizens of Philadelphia, for the repeal of the amendment to the postal law which increased the postage rates on third-class mail matter, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, protesting against any change in the tariff, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. McMAHON: The petition of citizens of Montgomery County, Ohio, for the reduction of the tax on tobacco and cigars, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Johanna Kuhlmann, for a pension, accompanied by a petition from numerous citizens of Ohio that relief be granted her, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of the executors of the estate of Admiral E. A. Lavalette, deceased, for compensation for the occupation of and damage to certain buildings belonging to said estate in Memphis, Tennessee, by the United States Army, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. RICE: Papers relating to the petition of Captain Robert Clark for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The petition of James J. Gibbs, for a pension, to the same committee.

By Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina: The petition of James M. Bell, for a reconsideration of his claim, rejected by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 29, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent of the House to make a transposition of some words in the legislative, &c., appropriation bill, so as to make the sense clear. The House adopted as the fourth section of the bill the following words:

That the fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll shall be employed during the current year, and the sum of money necessary to pay the messengers on that roll is hereby appropriated.

It will be seen that these words ought to come in immediately after line 204 of the bill, in connection with the appropriations for the House of Representatives. I therefore ask that in enrolling the bill the words be transposed so that they shall come in immediately after line 204, so as to show that the appropriation is for the expenditures of the House. It is a mere transposition of the words. The paragraph stands now as the fourth section of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. What is the parliamentary condition of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill has passed the House, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which it was passed has been laid upon the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent; of course it can only be done in that way.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman ought to submit his proposition in writing.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is too clear a question to discuss for a moment. I merely ask a transposition of certain words from one part of the bill to another.

Mr. HOAR. Has the bill been sent to the Senate?

Mr. HOLMAN. It has not. The enrollment is not complete. These words constitute, as I have said, the fourth section of the bill, but it is clear that they ought to come in immediately after the appropriation for the expenditures of the House.

The SPEAKER. Before the motion is put to the House the Chair will request the gentleman from Indiana, so that there may be no mistake about the matter, to reduce the motion to writing.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That in engrossing the bill (H. R. No. 2571) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, the enrolling clerk of the House be directed to transfer from its present position in said bill to line 204 of the printed bill the following:

"That the fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll shall be employed during the current year, and the sum of money necessary to pay the messengers on that roll is hereby appropriated."

The SPEAKER. This resolution can be considered and adopted only by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

HORACE BOUGHTON.

Mr. HURLBUT. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to submit a report on a matter of privilege which was referred to them.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution directing certain inquiries to be made in relation to Horace Boughton, clerk of said committee, beg leave to report the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas the examination already had before the Committee on Military Affairs in the case of Horace Boughton, acting as temporary clerk of said committee, shows that the foundation of the charges against him while assessor of internal revenue was in the affidavits of Joe P. Douglass and William P. Loftin, and in certain indictments found upon their testimony in the United States courts for the State of Texas in the year 1869, and that such indictments were afterward dismissed and nolle prosequi entered by the proper law officers of the United States; and whereas it is evident that, if this investigation is proceeded in, a large number of witnesses from the State of Texas must be summoned and this committee be required to pass upon the credibility of witnesses, which this committee has no means of determining in any satisfactory manner; and whereas the alleged wrong-doings, if any such occurred, belong to a remote time and a distant locality, and are now barred from criminal prosecution by the statute of limitations, and the present proceedings are nothing more than the revival of charges, and cannot in any way further the essential ends of public justice: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the matter.

Mr. HURLBUT. I ask for the adoption of the preamble and resolution.

The preamble and resolution were agreed to.

HARBOR OF REFUGE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution, with the view of obtaining some information from the War Department, as desired in a letter from General Humphreys.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested to cause an examination to be made of the harbors of Mendocino, Humboldt Bay, Trinidad, and Crescent City, in the State of California, with a view to establishing a breakwater and harbor of refuge, and report to this House the most suitable point for the construction of such harbor of refuge and the probable cost of the same.

Mr. DUNNELL. That ought to go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LUTTRELL. O, no. I have here a letter from General Humphreys which explains the matter itself:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, D. C., April 10, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: I send you a form of a resolution which I think will accomplish the object desired. We do not require any appropriation for the purpose of making the survey or examination and report.

Very truly yours,

A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Brigadier-General and Chief of Engineers.

Hon. J. K. LUTTRELL,
House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire now to call up the contested-election case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell, from the third congressional district of Illinois.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the gentlemen to yield to me to introduce a bill for reference only.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will yield for the introduction of bills for reference, but not for anything that may lead to discussion.

JAMES H. LAREW.

Mr. FAULKNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3274) for the relief of James H. Larew, of Preston County, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EQUALIZATION OF PENSIONS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the bill (S. No. 35) equalizing pensions of certain soldiers, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

BUILDINGS RENTED FOR NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back the communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement of buildings rented for the use of the Navy Department, as called for by the resolution of the House of February 14, and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

The motion was agreed to.

CLERK OF COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee of Accounts the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department be, and they are hereby, allowed to retain the services of a clerk for a period of thirty days from the expiration of the term of the present clerk.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Accounts, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee for the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, allowed to employ a messenger, whose compensation shall be fixed at $3.60 per day, said compensation to begin from the date of his oath.

LIGHT-HOUSE IN YORK COUNTY, MAINE.

Mr. PIERCE, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Commerce, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1819) to erect a light-house on the Nubble, Cape Neddick, in York, York County, Maine, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

SICK AND DISABLED SEAMEN.

Mr. PIERCE also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 83) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide for the accommodation of sick and disabled seamen in the district of Cape Cod, Massachusetts; and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

JACOB AND ELIZABETH SENER.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3275) for the relief of Jacob Sener and Elizabeth Sener; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. STONE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 1724) organizing the National Railway Company of the United States of America for the purpose of constructing, operating, and maintaining a double-track cheap-freight railway from the Atlantic seaboard to the cities of Chicago, Illinois, Saint Louis, Missouri, and Council Bluffs, Iowa, together with branches to other centers of population, production, and commerce, and to regulate the same in the interest of commerce among the States; and moved that the bill, with the amendments, be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

NELSON TIFFANY.

Mr. BANNING. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Military Affairs, for consideration at this time, the bill of the House No. 1337, for the relief of Nelson Tiffany. He was a soldier and was badly wounded while in the service, and is now dying of the effects of the wound. This bill is to relieve him from the charge of desertion made against him, and the Committee on Military Affairs are unanimously in favor of the passage of the bill. A bill for the same purpose was once before passed by this House, but failed to be reached in the Senate.

There was no objection.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to remove the charge of desertion from Nelson Tiffany, late a private in Company H, Twenty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EDWIN MORGAN.

Mr. JOHN REILLY, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Edwin Morgan, late captain of Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

STORAGE OF FERMENTED LIQUORS.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3276) regulating the storage of fermented liquors; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

BROTHERTOWN RESERVATION, WISCONSIN.

Mr. MORGAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with amendments, a bill (H. R. No. 2096) to authorize the issue of a patent of certain lands in the Brothertown reservation, in the State of Wisconsin, to the persons selected by the Brothertown Indians; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSK, by unanimous consent, reported back, with favorable recommendation, bills of the following titles; which were respectively referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2242) granting a pension to George McColly; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3277) as a substitute for House bill No. 2810, for the relief of Mrs. Kate L. Roy, widow of Lieutenant-Colonel James P. Roy, late of the United States Army.

Mr. RUSK also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported bills of the following titles; which were severally read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 3278) as a substitute for House bill No. 2405, granting a pension to Ellen Fechtel;

A bill (H. R. No. 3279) granting a pension to Benjamin C. Webster;

A bill (H. R. No. 3280) as a substitute for House bill No. 2168, granting a pension to James Johnston;

A bill (H. R. No. 3281) as a substitute for House bill No. 2577, granting a pension to Hannah A. Wood; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3282) granting a pension to Sarah McCovey.

Mr. RUSK also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back, with favorable recommendation, bills of the following titles; which were respectively referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar:

A bill (S. No. 641) granting a pension to Julia Scroggin;

A bill (S. No. 121) granting a pension to John Pierson;

A bill (S. No. 43) granting a pension to Urial Bundy; and

A bill (S. No. 545) granting a pension to Abraham Ellis.

Mr. RUSK also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back adversely the bill (H. R. No. 1295) granting a pension to Thomas Smith; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. CAULFIELD, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House.

GENEVA AWARD BILL.

Mr. LORD. On account of the priority which is given to reports from the Committee of Elections, I am prevented from calling up the bill relating to unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award. I want to ask unanimous consent of the House to entertain a motion which I am about to make. This bill has been delayed several times for reasons which I need not now explain. On Thursday next I expect to be called again from the House, perhaps for an indefinite period, and therefore I desire to have the bill certainly considered between now and next Thursday. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill relating to the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award be taken up on Monday next and continued from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Allow me to suggest that the election case has no priority over the order which set the Geneva award bill for consideration to-day. I would be very glad if that bill could be brought up now. I for one am ready to discuss it, and I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] and others are also ready.

Mr. HURLBUT. I shall have to object if it requires unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Questions relating to the right to seats upon this floor, involving the right of representation, are questions of the highest privilege. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] therefore has the right, notwithstanding the special order, to ask the House to proceed to the consideration of the Illinois contested-election case.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. If the House should refuse to consider the contested-election case, then would not the motion of the gentleman from New York be in order?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly it would.

Mr. LAWRENCE. As a matter of course.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I supposed the report of the Committee of Elections was a privileged one, and with that understanding I made arrangement with the gentleman from Virginia to yield to me, or rather I supposed he had the right to take by compulsion the question into his own hand. I asked him to yield to me to move the bill in relation to the Geneva award should be taken up on Monday. There are other reasons why it is better to be taken up on Monday. Members who desire to speak on the opposite side from that I represent cannot be here until then. Therefore I think it would be more just to take up the Geneva award bill on Monday under the motion I have made and for which I have asked unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman from Virginia?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 1595) for the relief of John T. Burchell, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for services rendered the Government in small-pox hospital, without amendment.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I wish to call up for consideration at this time the contested-election case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell, and while perhaps I did not submit the formal motion to the House, notwithstanding the Speaker recognized me for that purpose, I was proceeding to submit some remarks on the subject when I was asked to yield to various members upon the floor for the purpose of introducing bills and making reports. I understood the House gave its consent without a formal motion that I should proceed with that case. If the Chair did not so understand I submit the motion now, that the House proceed to the consideration of the report from the Committee of Elections in the Illinois contested-election case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, the inference of the gentleman from Virginia is justified by the fact, and he is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Allow me to suggest that the gentleman from Virginia did not announce what his object was when he was recognized.

The SPEAKER. In the judgment of the Chair, he had announced what his purpose was.

Mr. LORD. I now ask unanimous consent to submit the motion which I have already stated.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield for that purpose?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I yield for that specific purpose, and for none other.

Mr. LORD. I ask unanimous consent the motion be entertained that the bill to distribute the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award be taken up on Monday and be continued from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. MILLIKEN. That comes in conflict with the special order made to take up the Post-Office appropriation bill on Tuesday.

Mr. FRYE. It is understood that it is not to interfere with appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that motion with the understanding that it is not to interfere with appropriation bills?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether unanimous consent will cut off the privileged motion to suspend the rules on Monday, being the only day of the week we can make that motion? I desire to say further that the bill I had the honor to report from the Committee of Ways and Means, in favor of the Hawaiian treaty, is in a worse position than my friend's Geneva award bill. We have had it up half a dozen times, and it has been discussed in small doses, and we are now willing to submit the question to the House. I am struggling every hour of the day to get an opportunity to have it taken up and disposed of.

Mr. LORD. I think perhaps the gentleman from New York did not understand the reason I gave for this motion. I expect to have to leave to attend the impeachment trial on Thursday, and will be absent for an indefinite period. I thought, therefore, under the circumstances, that, as the Geneva award bill has been postponed from time to time to accommodate other committees and other bills, it was not asking too much to be permitted to have it taken up on Monday next and continued from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I have no wish to antagonize my colleague, but I wish now to give notice that at the earliest practicable period I intend to call up the bill in reference to the Hawaiian treaty.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York made an inquiry of the Chair, in response to which the Chair says, if this order be made, it will cut off the right to move to suspend the rules on Monday next after the morning hour. Is there objection to the motion?

Mr. FORT. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. The understanding is that appropriation bills are excepted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the motion, appropriation bills excepted?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Will not this require unanimous consent? I do not make any objection to the order.

The SPEAKER. It does require unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry before the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] proceeds. By the order of the House on the 9th day of March, the bill (H. R. No. 293) was made a special order for the 16th day of March and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with the legislative appropriation bill. The legislative appropriation bill has been considered from day to day and has now been passed. I wish to inquire what is the status of the bill I have mentioned in the order of the business of the House?

The SPEAKER. In order to answer the gentleman's inquiry it would be necessary for the Chair to suspend business, and inquire what are the special orders hitherto made and undisposed of. The Chair will say generally that these orders are entitled to execution in the House in the order in which they are made by the House; and that where they are made for a special day, and to run from day to day thereafter until disposed of, they do not lose their precedence by not being taken up on the day indicated. But the Chair has no time now to look into the condition of these orders so as to be able to answer the gentleman's inquiry in regard to the particular bill he has mentioned.

Mr. LORD. I understand that the objection to my motion is withdrawn, so that I have now unanimous consent to the proposition I have submitted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object; for the reason——

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

CONTESTED ELECTION—LE MOYNE VS. FARWELL.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now call up the report of the Committee of Elections in the case of J. V. Le Moyne vs. C. B. Farwell, of the third congressional district of Illinois. I ask the Clerk to read the resolutions of the majority and of the minority of the committee.

The resolutions of the majority of the committee were read, as follows:

Resolved, That Charles B. Farwell was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seat in this House as a member of the Forty-fourth Congress from the third congressional district of Illinois.

Resolved, That John V. Le Moyne was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in this House as a member of the Forty-fourth Congress from the third congressional district of Illinois.

The resolutions of the minority of the committee were read, as follows:

Resolved, That John V. Le Moyne was not elected, and is not entitled, to a seat in this House from the third congressional district of Illinois.

Resolved, That Charles B. Farwell was elected, and is entitled, to a seat in this House from the third congressional district of Illinois.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It will be observed by the House that the majority and minority reports are directly opposite. The majority report, it may not be improper to say, is signed unanimously by the members of the committee representing the majority in this House. The minority report is signed by the members of the committee representing the minority in this House.

Sir, it has occurred to me at other times, but not upon this committee, when I saw Committees of Elections dividing as it is termed on party lines that such a result must have been owing to the influence of party and not of principle. But, sir, after a laborious investigation in this case, and I believe an honest investigation on the part of every member of the committee, we find that we unfortunately came to a division on the line of party. This is not surprising. This may be done by men all of whom are in search of truth and acting as honestly as it is possible for men to act. For there are cases where the facts are so nearly balanced and where the law is so uncertain and unsettled that honest men having the same political views often differ upon the question. But when the facts are so nearly balanced and the law not decided, perhaps it may reasonably be expected that men may divide upon one side or the other, and each be equally honest and conscientious in his investigation of the facts and in his determination of the law. It is the weakness, perhaps, of poor human nature that our prejudices without our knowledge may turn the scale when it is almost at an equipoise.

The contest in this case was a very laborious one. Many charges were made by the contestant and all were denied by the contestee. But fortunately for the committee and for the House, after investigating a pamphlet of about five or six hundred pages, the case has been reduced to two points alone and two precincts virtually. One is in regard to the first precinct of the twentieth ward of the city of Chicago, and the other is in regard to the right of some persons alleged to be paupers in a poor-house to cast their votes.

First, as to the first precinct in the twentieth ward. There the contestant charged fraud on the part of every officer conducting the election. He charged and he has proved that nearly 300 votes, representing men who had no places of residence, who had no homes in that county, and who did not live in the township at all, were cast at that election. Under the law of Illinois the clerk is required to number the voter on the poll-book as he deposits his ballot; also to number his ballot corresponding with the number opposite his name on the poll-book; and thus it can be ascertained how every man voted. The law of Illinois requires every voter living in a city to state his residence, giving the street and number. These fictitious voters gave residences that were proved to be in the occupation of other people, and they had never been known to have residences at those places. As many as forty or fifty of them gave as their residence one house which was a comparatively small house, proven to have but six or seven male adults in it, called the Hatch house.

We all agree, both branches of the committee agree, that this poll was fraudulent, that the clerk was corrupt, that the judges of election were corrupt. They refused to allow, under the law, democratic challengers to be heard. They drove them away by their mobs. They allowed no man of the democratic party to be present to ask questions or to superintend the election. And that, too, Mr. Speaker, was in a township which was so intensely democratic that no republican candidate ran for a local office. But it was managed in this way: An independent democrat was started, and that independent democrat linked his fortunes with the contestee in this case, Mr. Farwell, who was the candidate for Congress.

It is not necessary to detain the House by entering into the details as to the frauds committed at that poll. The committee on both sides agreed that it was so tainted with fraud that it cannot be relied upon; and the committee, having agreed upon that, split on this line, the minority contending that under the law the whole vote must be thrown out, and only such votes counted as each party afterward proved were cast for him by bringing up the voters seriatim and counting them. The majority of the committee agreed with the minority as to the law, but differed in the application of it. The law says that wherever the true vote can be ascertained, though the returns may be set aside, it is the highest duty of the committee and the House to count it.

Well, sir, in this case it so happens, as I said, that the law of Illinois, unlike the laws of most of the States of the Union, requires that all voters shall be numbered on the poll-list, and that whenever a voter comes up to vote, if his number for instance is one hundred, the clerk shall take his ballot out of his hand and mark it one hundred and put it in the ballot-box; so that in the case of every man who votes it can be ascertained by an examination of the ballot-box as accurately how he voted as if the vote had been viva voce and the clerk had recorded the name of the voter and the party for whom he voted at the time. There is then no difficulty in ascertaining, if the polls are properly kept, who voted for Le Moyne and who for Farwell.

But the minority say that there was so much fraud on the whole poll-book that it gives no verity to anything connected with it, but they will admit the fact, as the record will show, that the poll-book was brought before the committee and that it is admitted by the contestant and the contestee to be the poll-book which was kept on that occasion on that day between Farwell and Le Moyne. Well, now, admit the proposition to be correct as laid down by the minority of the committee that the whole poll must be thrown out, and where does it lead us? A gentleman who is a candidate for office has this chance to take: he may corrupt the poll-book by sending in three or five hundred illegal voters, and he says, "If I can get the benefit of this fraud by a large excess of votes to which I am not entitled, then I have a clear gain to the extent of the illegal vote; but if I cannot, then the whole vote must be thrown out by reason of my fraud, and my adversary loses the large majority which he would otherwise get; so I am bound to succeed if I can pollute that poll and commit frauds upon it."

The position of the minority of the committee is an advertisement to men who are in the minority to hurl upon that particular poll 500 illegal votes and take the chance of their being counted, and if they are not counted to so corrupt the poll-book that his adversary will not get the majority to which he is entitled.

Fortunately, sir, for the people of Illinois the law of that State requires that the names shall be recorded on the poll-books, with the number attached, and upon the ballots.

Mr. FORT. The gentleman will pardon me; I know he does not wish to misrepresent; the law does not require that the name of the voter shall be put upon the ballot.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I do not mean the name, but the number. The name is on the list with the number against it, and that number is transferred by the clerk to the ballot, so that you can always tell how a man votes as well as if you had heard him vote. Well, now, in case of a contested election the ballot-boxes can be opened and their contents examined, and you can see how each man votes.

What is the duty of the committee in a case of this sort? The gentlemen of the minority say that these poll-books are so fraudulent that we cannot rely upon anything. Now the law lays it down that fraud must be always construed against the party who perpetrates it. The doctrine is laid down that no man can take advantage of his own wrong. I send up to the Clerk authorities on this question and ask that they be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

An irregularity in an election may be overlooked "if it cast no uncertainty on the result and has not been occasioned by the party seeking to derive a benefit from it." (Piatt vs. People, 29 Illinois, page 72.)

"It is undoubtedly the rule that if the canvassing court can separate the legal from the illegal votes and reject the illegal ones, they are bound to do so; and * * * fraud on the part of the officers will not vitiate, unless it be of so gross a character as to destroy all means of ascertaining the true result." (Cass County, Illinois, Brightly's Election Cases, pages 495, 496.)

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I now read McCrary's American Law of Elections, page 135:

What we mean here to assert is only this, that where a return is clearly shown to be willfully and corruptly false in any material part the whole of it becomes worthless as proof. * * *

If satisfactory proof of the actual vote can be made, and the result thus ascertained, the election may stand, although the result falls to the ground.

Now, sir, in this case all parties agree that the returns themselves were entitled to no weight, and the law which I have just read states that although the returns may fail, you may look at the poll-books to ascertain how the vote was. Well, we had the poll-book in this case before us. But gentlemen tell us in the minority report that the poll-book itself is so fraudulent that we cannot rely upon it. I admit that you cannot rely upon that poll-book to show the vote received for the contestee, for the parties who committed the frauds were in his interest. But these corrupt officers have admitted by the poll-book that Le Moyne received two hundred and odd votes, and those votes we allowed to be counted for him, and we gave him other votes which the testimony showed he had received. If a man confess against himself, he must be held responsible for it. And we count that vote on the principle that the poll-book and the ballots show at least how the vote for Le Moyne stood and it showed the fraud of the vote for the contestee. We therefore followed the injunction of the law, and eliminated the vote. We did not rely upon the uncertain mode recommended of calling on each voter to tell how he voted.

The law says that no man who has voted a secret ballot can be compelled, if he gave a legal vote, to tell how he voted. A man voting illegally can be compelled to show how he voted; but the law says that any man who has voted an honest vote by secret ballot cannot be compelled to tell how he voted, for that would defeat the very object of the system of secret ballot.

Now, in regard to the doctrine laid down by the minority of the Committee of Elections that an election is void when either party has injected into it enough of fraud to cast a suspicion upon it, it would surprise gentlemen of this House if they had time to read the record in this case and see how elections were carried on in the first precinct of the twentieth ward of the city of Chicago. The testimony shows that after the election was over, when the poll-books and registration-lists were in the presence of Mr. Le Moyne, the counsel of Mr. Farwell, and the commissioner taking testimony, the poll-books being there on a table right before their faces, they disappeared in the twinkling of an eye, and have not since been heard of. A sleight-of-hand performance unparalleled in this country was enacted right before all parties sitting there, and no one can tell who stole them or where they went. They were not stolen in the interest of Le Moyne, for he wanted them to sustain his case.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. Does not the evidence show that Lieb, the county clerk, who was the custodian of the returns and the ballots and a partisan of the contestant, refused to allow the contestee to examine them unless the contestant should agree to have them produced in evidence and examined by the contestee?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The evidence shows that the poll-book was right there before their faces and it disappeared in the twinkling of an eye, and no one can tell who took it or where it went. From this it would seem the clerk had good cause to keep the books in close custody, and even then could not preserve them.

I now pass to another point of divergence, to the Norwood Park precinct. It is alleged that the contestant received nearly a hundred pauper votes. Under the constitution of Virginia no pauper can vote; and that is the case in other States. But Illinois has a very broad constitution in regard to the elective franchise. It inhibits no male citizen from voting, except it directs the Legislature to pass a law prohibiting from voting any man convicted of felony and not pardoned. That is the only exception in the constitution of Illinois, and I believe in the first part of the constitution "any person" is permitted to vote, not confining it even to "male citizens," though that of course is understood.

In the Norwood Park precinct, in the city of Chicago, there was a poor-house, in which it was proved there were between one thousand and twelve hundred inmates. It was further proved that a few days before the election the superintendent of the poor-house went down to the registrar's office—and bear in mind that all the officers of election were in the interest of the contestee—and the registering officer told him to bring down the names of the persons at the poor-house who were entitled to vote and he would register them without requiring the persons themselves to come down. The superintendent went down there, but could not find the registering officer, but he found the clerk. On the last day when he went there to register the names he found that both the clerk and the registering officer had disappeared, and thus he was deprived of the opportunity of having the names of the men registered. Election-day came and these alleged paupers went down there and voted. The contestee alleges that there were over a hundred; the proof shows that there were only sixty-one who went from the poor-house, and of that number some twelve or fifteen were the regular employés, men who had been there for months. Two of them voted for the sitting member, thus leaving only forty-five in dispute. The question recurs whether they were paupers, and, if so, whether they had the right to vote. As to whether they were paupers the testimony is very conflicting, but the weight of the testimony is to the effect that they were a class of poor people discharged from the sick-hospital, and the superintendent of the poor-house under the authority of the board had employed them for their food and clothing.

Mr. HURLBUT. How did they get into the poor-house?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. They went there under the certificate of the physician and were employed by the superintendent of the poor-house to do light work for their board and clothing.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Paupers are required to do work, so far as they are able, for their support.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I know that there are certain regulations of law requiring them to do certain work. But the testimony in this case is conclusive that these persons were not paupers; that the superintendent applied to the board for leave to contract with them for their labor, and he did contract with them to remain there and work. Had they been paupers it would not have been necessary for him to contract with them, but he could make them work by reason of their position as paupers. By the testimony it appears that everybody who was at the poor-house was called a pauper; but the weight of evidence is to the effect that they were this class of laborers of whom I speak; poor people who were working for their support.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we know it to be a fact that in every country where civilization and education prevail there is a great horror in the human heart at being called a pauper. We all know how readily many a poor, decrepit old man will work for his food and clothing rather than be called a pauper and be supported by the people of the county. In my opinion, these voters belong to this class. But, sir, if they had not belonged to that class, if they had been paupers in the broad and unqualified meaning of the term, the question is whether they had the right to vote. Under the law of Illinois paupers as well as other persons have the right to vote.

The law of Illinois in respect to supporting the poor in that State is very singular. There may be other States where the laws are similar, but certainly I cannot now call to mind any such. The law is rather singular in this. It requires the relatives of a poor person, if they are able, first to support them in the following order: First, children shall support their parents; next, parents support their children; next, brothers and sisters; next, grandchildren; next, grandparents. And it is made the duty of the State's attorney for the county to apply to the court for judgment and award of execution against such relative for the support of his pauper kinsman; for the statute recognizes all persons as paupers who are not able to support themselves.

Now, sir, if such persons be regarded as paupers, and, therefore, not allowed to vote, how would such a rule operate? We all know hundreds and thousands of cases everywhere where the generous heart of a son prompts him to take into his own household (he would be almost a fiend if he refused) his poor decrepit old father. The gentleman from Illinois would say in such a case the father, being dependent upon the son, cannot vote in that township, because he is a pauper and has no residence there.

Mr. HURLBUT. There is no such law in Illinois, and never was.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Well, sir, if some one will bring me the statutes of Illinois, I will show that I am right. My friend's ignorance on this subject pains me and overwhelms me with astonishment. I would be glad to read the statute of Illinois right here, not with a view of exposing his ignorance of the laws of his own State, but to show that when he does not understand the subject he is talking about he ought not to interrupt a gentleman.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The gentleman from Virginia will allow me to suggest that the law of Illinois does not require the relative who is supported to be taken to any particular place. It only imposes a legal liability, which can be enforced by action; a liability to provide for the support of the relative unable to provide for himself.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The gentleman agrees with me more closely than does his colleague, [Mr. HURLBUT.] The law, as I said, requires the next of kin to the second degree——

Mr. HURLBUT. Let us understand each other. The gentleman states that if a son supports his father, the father, living in the son's house, becomes under the law of Illinois a pauper.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. HURLBUT. There is no such law in Illinois.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My friend is shifting his ground. After his colleague [Mr. BURCHARD] has shown him what the law is, he changes his position a little. But, Mr. Speaker, the law of Illinois does require a father to support the son, and vice versa, when able. If he does not do so, then the Commonwealth's attorney is required to go before the court and serve notice upon the party (they do not even honor him with a suit) that judgment will be asked for at the next court; and when judgment is obtained against him, execution from time to time is sued out against him. The only exception to that law is where it appears to the court that a man's poverty is produced by drink.

Now, if a son, being required to support his father, takes that father from one neighborhood and carries him to another to be a resident of his own house, that house becomes, as respects the old gentleman, the poor-house; as much so as the county poor-house would be to one who had no relatives to support him.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The law does not require the relatives to support the person at any particular residence. There may be a dozen or more grandchildren who are liable to contribute to the support of the grandfather; these relatives may be residing in various parts of the county or State, and each of them is required to contribute according to his means, pro rata, to the support of the grandfather.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois this question: If a person is maintained by his relatives, does the law of Illinois permit him to vote?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The right to vote depends on residence, and that is defined by statute.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I am coming to that presently. There is no difference between my friend from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] and myself as to what the law is. We both agree that the next of kin is required to support the pauper.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. To contribute to his support.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. If he is able, if he has enough to support him, he must divide with him. He may be made to pay it in money; but if, instead of paying money monthly, he chooses to take his father from one district and carry him to his house, he has the right to support him there. He has the right to support him in his own house without paying money to any one.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. That is, if he can induce his relative to go; but it is a matter of free will with the relative to go or not.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. When the relative goes to his house, although he may be constrained by poverty, still by the laws of Illinois it is as much his home as it is the home of his son with whom he is living. In that district he acquires residence and has the right to vote. Decide otherwise and you will throw out of the ballot-box the votes of some of the purest and most intellectual men we have ever had. I know there is not to-day upon this floor from Illinois or from other States a member who does not know of some who are supporting their fathers—who have been in their day among the first in the country, men who helped to make the laws of the land. They were honest public men, made no money by their office, but who are now reduced to poverty and are supported by their sons. Those fathers, under the theory of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HURLBUT,] cannot acquire a residence where they live, and are deprived of the right of suffrage. I hold differently and the majority of the committee hold differently on that question. I will review the question, Mr. Speaker, for a moment.

This question of the right of paupers to vote has been before the House of Representatives very seldom. There have been only four cases in which this question was ever discussed before this House. The first was the case of Monroe vs. Jackson, from the State of New York. The majority of the committee reported that these paupers could not acquire residence at the poor-house because the statute of New York said that no citizen of New York should acquire residence by reason of his being in any asylum, poor-house, or any university or college. The statute expressly provided that he should not acquire residence at a poor-house. Notwithstanding that, the minority of the committee reported that was unconstitutional because the constitution said that every resident should vote, and the Legislature had no right to say what a residence should be, and therefore had no right to say a poor person could not acquire residence at a poor-house. The result was two reports. The majority was in favor of the contestant, who was a whig, although the House was whig by a good majority. They sustained neither report, but referred the case back to the people for another election, thus furnishing no precedent either way; but it is rather in favor of the paupers voting, than against it.

Another case was that of Covode vs. Foster, from the State of Pennsylvania. Foster was elected by some forty-odd pauper votes. In that case the committee decided, and the House sustained the committee, that under the laws of Pennsylvania paupers could not acquire residence at a poor-house, and Foster was unseated and Covode seated.

The next case that came before Congress was that of Taylor vs. Reading, in the Forty-first Congress. Reading, the democratic candidate, had received 3 pauper votes. The counsel for Reading, under the influence of Covode vs. Foster, admitted those 3 pauper votes were bad and therefore ought not to be counted, and gave it up. Consequently there was no decision in that case, except so far as the admission of the attorneys goes.

We next come to the case of Cessna against Myers, also from the State of Pennsylvania. I want to read something that was said on that occasion, because I see the distinguished author of the report before me, the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] I am sure, Mr. Speaker, when the time comes for voting in this case he will vote the sentiments he so well expressed on that occasion. In the case of Cessna against Myers the Committee of Elections, in the Forty-second Congress I believe it was, acted on the question, but did not decide it formally. I will read from the report:

> The case of the paupers presents greater difficulty. Under the laws of Pennsylvania it is conceded they may be entitled to vote. In several contested-election cases cited by the contestant it is stated by the committee that, in the absence of statute regulations on the subject, a pauper abiding in a public almshouse locally situated in a different district from that where he dwells when he becomes a pauper, and by which he is supported, away from his original home, does not thereby change his residence, but is held constructively to remain at his old home.
> And there are some strong reasons for this opinion. The pauper is under a species of confinement. He must submit to regulations imposed by others, and the place of his abode may be changed without his consent. Having few of the other elements which ordinarily make up a domicile, the element of choice also in his case almost wholly disappears. There are also serious reasons of expediency against permitting a class of persons who are necessarily so dependent upon the will of one public officer to vote in a town or district in whose concerns they have no interest. On the other hand, the pauper's right to vote is recognized by law. It can practically very seldom be exercised except in the near neighborhood of the almshouse. In the case of a person so poor and helpless as to expect to be a life-long inmate of a poor-house, it is, in every sense in which the word can be used, really and truly his residence, his home. And it is important that these constitutional provisions as to suffrage should be carried out in their simplest and most natural sense, without the introduction of artificial or technical constructions. It will, however, be necessary to determine this question, as will hereafter appear.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be observed that the committee of the Forty-second Congress, making a report through Judge HOAR, of Massachusetts, unanimously decided the question that a pauper at the poor-house did acquire a residence there.

Mr. HOAR. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. With great pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that the committee of the Forty-second Congress decided any question on that subject at all. The case was referred to me to write a report. And I wrote a report in which I stated as well as I could the arguments on both sides of that question, and at the same time stated that it was entirely unnecessary to decide it in that particular case. So that the authority of that report—or rather the weight; there is no authority in it on that subject—the weight of that report depends upon the weight which the House will give to the reasoning on that subject which it contains. There is no opinion expressed either by the committee or the author of the report. There is a mere statement of the reasoning on each side. I do not know what bearing it has on this case, as I have not followed the argument of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will refresh the gentleman's recollection. I am satisfied that my distinguished friend is wrong in saying that this was not the opinion of the committee, for it is reported in the Congressional Globe as the unanimous report of the committee. And from that unanimous report, written by my distinguished friend himself, I make this quotation. This is what the gentleman says on behalf of the committee:

> In the case of a person so poor and helpless as to expect to be a life-long inmate of the poor-house, it is, in every sense in which the word can be used, really and truly his residence—his home. And it is important that these constitutional provisions as to suffrage should be carried out in their simplest and most natural sense, without the introduction of artificial or technical constructions.

This is not an argument; it is a positive assertion of a principle or of an opinion.

The committee therefore say that it is his home, his residence.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me to read the very next sentence?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will read the next sentence. I am not going to give quotations by piecemeal.

> It will, however, be unnecessary to determine this question, as will hereafter appear.

But the committee did sanction the vote by leaving it to stand as counted and made a part of the record; and it stands to-day as having been legally cast and counted, and the House so passed upon it.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the gentleman will allow me a little further explanation, because it was a matter in which I took a great interest.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. So I understood.

Mr. HOAR. That was a case in which the Committee of Elections unanimously gave the seat to a gentleman opposed to the majority of them in political opinion; so that if any election case can have weight, that should have weight.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Certainly, sir. That is the reason I attach so much importance to it.

Mr. HOAR. Now there were several very interesting questions of domicile, and very doubtful ones, which arose in that case. Deciding those questions made it unnecessary to decide this particular question whether a pauper could vote. It was claimed on the part of Mr. Cessna, the republican contestant, that all the paupers in the county almshouse who had voted for his antagonist should be deducted from his antagonist's poll; but if they were deducted it did not give Mr. Cessna the seat. It was unnecessary therefore to decide it; but the question having been argued the committee summed up the arguments on the one side and on the other. In summing up the arguments on one side, it is true the report says that in the case of a pauper so poor and helpless that he will evidently and beyond question be at the poor-house for life, having no ties elsewhere, in that case it would seem to be his home in every sense in which the word can be used. And as he is a person having the right to vote by the Constitution and as that right would be destroyed if he were obliged to travel to a distant precinct, it is very proper that he should vote there.

Now, if the gentleman from Virginia will pardon me I wish to say, if it be not improper to make the statement, that that expresses the exact limitation. You find the number of twenty or one hundred paupers in a county poor-house being supported at this county poor-house by the various parishes, or precincts, or townships which make up the county. Now, one of those paupers may be there with a broken leg, expecting to return to his work in six weeks, when he gets well. Another may be there with a temporary disability of any kind, expecting to return within a year. Another may be one of that permanent class of paupers who are manifestly confined for life where they are. Now, one of those paupers may have the intention to return to his old precinct; he may not have the intention to remain in the poor-house permanently, and his location there is temporary. Now it seems to me—and I have not the slightest idea how this affects the case my friend from Virginia is arguing, for I do not know anything about the facts—it seems to me you should apply to those paupers having the right to vote just the doctrine you would apply to any other persons found in any particular place, that what determines practically the permanent or the temporary place of residence for them is the intent to remain, the intent to treat the place of residence as a home existing in the particular case or not. If that be so, here are two paupers, one of whom is at the almshouse as a home and the other there as a place of temporary sojourn and support. That is the view I took of the question at the time it was before the committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I agree with the distinguished gentleman that a pauper at the poor-house is prima facie at his home; but if he is there temporarily sojourning for a broken limb, as a matter of course he acquires no residence. No man goes to the poor-house who has a home elsewhere; he never goes there until from necessity he is compelled to go. When a poor, unfortunate man has not a place that he can call a home, except the poor-house, where under the sun of heaven is his residence, his home, if it is not at the place where he lives and expects to make his home until he dies?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. How can he be a pauper if he has a home?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. As my friend suggests, if he had a home of his own he could not be a pauper, and that is true because the law requires a man to support himself as long as he is able. To tell me that a poor man, after having struggled against adversity until at last he goes to the overseer of the poor and says, "I have supported myself as long as I can and must now come to you for support," goes there with the animus revertendi is absurd. He goes with a sad and heavy heart, but he goes to make it his home until the Father of us all calls him home to his last resting-place. It may not be a pleasant home, but it is the only home he has and is his residence.

Well, the laws of Illinois on this subject are very singular. I know that my friend who says he helped to make these laws will not claim credit for helping to make this law.

The constitution of the State of Illinois says, on page 14:

> Every person having resided in this State one year, in the county ninety days, and the election district thirty days, shall be entitled to vote.

The learned Legislature of the State of Illinois at its next session or some subsequent session after the adoption of the constitution undertook to tell what the constitution meant, and they say in section 66, chapter 46:

> A permanent abode is necessary to constitute a residence within the meaning of the preceding section.

Now here was the Legislature of Illinois undertaking to amend the constitution of the State in regard to what would constitute residence.

It is the province of the courts to construe the constitution, and this act of the Legislature can neither enlarge nor abridge the right of suffrage by undertaking to define what shall constitute a residence. Their act is simply null and void.

Sir, the minority report relies with great confidence upon the decision in the forty-first Illinois report upon the subject of the residence of a pauper for police purposes.

I admit that the Legislature of Illinois has passed laws defining what shall be the residence of paupers, and for all police purposes the Legislature has the undoubted right to define what shall be a residence where the poor shall be supported. In one county, Stephenson County, I believe they built a county poor-house, and the townships from which the paupers had gone to that poor-house refused to contribute to the support of their poor at that poor-house, saying that they had lost their residences in those townships.

The suit was brought, and it went to the supreme court of the State of Illinois, and there they decided that a pauper at the poor-house under the pauper laws could not acquire a residence.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavor in my argument of this case to confine myself closely to the real questions in issue, and shall be as brief as possible; but if I should occupy my full time it will be because, having examined the case as one of the subcommittee of the Committee of Elections, I have reached in my own mind most positive conclusions both in reference to the facts and the law, and am exceedingly anxious that the House shall fully weigh and consider the matter before it commit what would, in my judgment, be a great wrong in depriving Mr. Farwell of his seat.

The committee are divided chiefly upon three points; the disposition to be made of the first precinct of the twentieth ward of the city of Chicago, the third precinct of the eighteenth ward, and Norwood Park precinct, in which the Cook County poor-farm is situated.

In the third precinct of the eighteenth ward the majority of the committee recommend the exclusion of the whole returns, because the night after the election and before the official canvass was made the ballot-box was left unprotected in a grocery with the ballots in it, liable to be tampered with. The evidence shows this to have been the fact, and did nothing appear to rebut the presumption that the ballot-box was interfered with, we should without hesitation hold that such exposure destroyed any reliance that might be placed on returns based on the count of ballots coming from such a source. The presumption would be against them, unless there was proof that they had not been tampered with, as in this case we believe there is. John J. Clifford, clerk of the election, testified in reference to this matter, and while his evidence proves the bane it also presents the antidote. He testifies, and we read from his testimony, as follows:

Question. Were you present at the opening of the polls on that day?
Answer. Yes, sir.
Q. How long did you remain at the polls that day, and act as such clerk?
A. I remained from the opening to the closing of the polls, and then remained to count the ballots.
Q. State whether the votes were all canvassed and counted in your presence, while there.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were all the votes duly canvassed and counted that night?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was it done in the presence of the board of election?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. State whether the result of the canvass was then publicly announced by the said board, and before the board separated.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did any one take the result to the police headquarters; if so, whom?
A. Mr. Fisher, I think.
Q. Did the vote as announced at that canvass that night correspond with official returns?
A. No, sir.
Q. In what respect did it differ?
A. It differed in the aldermanic count; any further I don't know.
Q. Did it differ in any respect with the vote for Mr. Farwell and Mr. Le Moyne?
A. I think not.
Q. Then I understand you to say that the votes for Mr. Farwell and Mr. Le Moyne, as announced by the board, as you here stated, corresponded with the official returns?
A. I think so.

Cross-examination by Mr. LE MOYNE:

Q. What was done with the ballot-box the night of the election? Where was it left?
A. It was left in a grocery store.
Q. After you ascertained how many votes were cast, did you or did you not then proceed to ascertain who those votes were cast for?
A. We did.
Q. How soon after you had ascertained the number of votes cast did you proceed to ascertain who those votes were cast for?
A. Immediately.
Q. When did you get through with ascertaining who the votes were cast for?
A. About two o'clock in the morning.
Q. Was it after you had thus ascertained who the votes were cast for and the public announcement of the result made that the ballot-box was left at the grocery, as you have said?
A. Yes, sir; after.

Mr. Fisher, the policeman, corroborates Mr. Clifford. The following is his testimony:

Question. State what you know of the counting of the votes, and the canvassing, and the announcement of the result, and all you know about it.

Answer. I remained at the polls until the closing of the polls; they then immediately retired to a room up stairs, in the rear; we then had something to eat; consumed not over half an hour. After our supper, the ballot-box was opened on the table and its contents emptied out. The three judges then counted the number of votes polled at that precinct. There was some dispute in regard to the number of votes polled; they were counted some two or three times, and they then tallied with the poll-book; that is, they corresponded with the number of votes cast as on the poll-book. In straightening out the ballots they discovered a double vote, also a twentieth-ward ticket; those were laid on one side and not counted. After straightening these tickets out they commenced to tally, and continued until near one o'clock. I then got one of the judges—I think it was Mr. Rankin—to read off the number of votes cast for each candidate, which I entered on my tally-list. After getting the full number of votes cast for each candidate, I asked them if this was the final count. They answered me affirmatively. I then immediately started for headquarters with the report. I mean the police headquarters—the general office.

Q. You have spoken of the judge announcing to you the result. State whether that was done in the presence of the other judges of the election.
A. Yes, sir; and the clerk, and publicly announced—read out in a loud voice.

The same witness being recalled, testified:

Direct examination by Mr. VAN BUREN:

(Handing witness a paper.)

Q. State what this memorandum is; in whose handwriting it is, and when and for what purpose it was made, and what was done with it.

A. This paper was given to me on the morning of the election in blank to be filled out after the closing of the polls and counting of the votes, showing the number of votes cast for each candidate. It is in my handwriting—the figures are mine. I received the report from one of the judges and copied onto this. He read them off and I copied them that night of the election. After the count was announced and I received this report I carried it immediately to police headquarters and left it in the hands of Mr. Rehm, the superintendent of police.

Mr. Van Buren now introduces said memorandum in evidence, marked "Exhibit I."

Exhibit I shows, on Congress, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL—THIRD DISTRICT.

Farwell	239
Le Moyne	225
Hoffman	1

There is no evidence on the part of the contestant to contradict this, and that of his witnesses incidentally corroborates it, as they say the judges of election, at the time they were making the official canvass, told them they had counted the ballots the night of the election. In the case of Cox against Strait, the Committee of Elections unanimously decided that though the ballot-box at one precinct was left exposed an hour and a half unprotected, yet as there was no evidence that it had been tampered with, and negative evidence that it had not, they would not exclude it; while in this case, although there is positive evidence from Fisher that the two counts agreed, corroborated by Clifford, and no claim by anybody that there was any irregularity prior to the first count, the same committee decide by a majority vote that the returns shall be excluded. The minority, thoroughly agreeing with the decision in Cox against Strait, here apply the same principle to a stronger case. The evidence here rebutting the presumption of tampering with the ballots is positive, while in that it was merely negative. In that case the evidence showed the ballot-box was left in a room of a hotel an hour and a half unsealed, to which room the landlord and his family, and perhaps others, had access; but as the landlord is proved to have been a partisan of Cox, the committee do not believe the box could have been tampered with in behalf of Strait. This is a reasonable conclusion, but is it as positive testimony as the evidence of Fisher and of Clifford? We think not.

One point more. What was the object of Mr. Fisher in taking the returns to police headquarters? Evidently that it might be known what the real result was, and to furnish information for the public and the newspapers. I am credibly informed and I think none of the members from Chicago will deny it to be the fact that it is the custom of the police of that city after every important election to collect the returns as soon as announced and take them to the police headquarters for that purpose. If this be so, why are not the files of the Chicago papers here; why is not some evidence produced in rebuttal to Fisher and Clifford by the contestant? There can be but one reason and that is their evidence is true.

The majority of the committee in their report state that while the result is not changed they would reject these returns; their whole report on this point is a complete non sequitur and really sustains our view. We read from their report:

> In the third precinct of the Eighteenth ward it clearly appears from the testimony that, after the election had closed, the ballot-box, together with the ballots and all the papers pertaining to the election, was left open over night in a drinking-saloon, in charge of no one, unless it was the keeper of said saloon, who is shown by the poll-book to have been a supporter of contestee, and who was not an officer of election in said precinct nor authorized to take charge of said ballot-box under the law. Further, it is shown by the testimony that on the day after the election some of the officers thereof, together with several other unauthorized persons, went to the said saloon, took charge of the ballot-box and ballots and made a count thereof, whereupon what was claimed to be an official return of the election in said precinct was made, either by some of the officers present or by their unauthorized assistants, showing a majority in said precinct of 14 votes for contestee. It is shown by the testimony of one witness that the said majority of 14 votes for contestee was stated to him on the night of the day of election by some of the officers, after a count of the ballots had been had by them, and that he reported the same to police headquarters that night; but it clearly appears that said officers did not regard the count had or report given thereon, upon the night of election, either as final or official, as no record or memoranda thereof were made; and upon the following day they proceeded to the canvass of the said poll, as stated above, and from such count made out that which purports to be the official returns of the election in said precinct. Under these circumstances, although it does not change the result, we feel constrained to regard the returns from this the third precinct in the Eighteenth ward as wanting in regularity and certainty, and think they should be rejected.

In the first precinct of the twentieth ward the committee are agreed that the evidence proves fraud most gross and glaring on the part of the judges of the election, which renders the returns absolutely valueless; but we disagree as to what must be done in such a case, six of the committee holding that when the returns are destroyed the whole credit to be given to the ballots, poll-books, and returns is taken away and the votes of the legal voters must be proved aliunde. The other five hold that the polls can be purged; and they attempt to do it by recourse to the poll-books and ballots which come from the hands of the corrupt judges whose returns are pronounced by them to be thoroughly impeached. Had not the matter been urged strongly by members of the committee and been relied on in the report of the majority, we should feel that a mere statement of the point was sufficient to satisfy any reasonable man of the absurdity of the proposition to purge the poll by a reference to ballots, which the evidence proves to be unreliable and which came from the hands of men we all admit to be corrupt and dishonest. We prove the witness corrupt and perjured, and yet would settle the case on his testimony.

Now, see if we are not right. Mr. Le Moyne, in the abstract of testimony in the case in reference to this precinct, which evidence was brought forward to impeach the returns, shows that in numbering the ballots, which is required under the Illinois law, it was so incorrectly done that out of 677 numbers 183 are entirely missing and 198 appear more than once. The evidence also shows that the ballots found in the clerk's office do not agree with the returns, but that the ballots show 213 majority for Mr. Farwell while the returns show but 171. Yet the committee would take these ballots so numbered and from them attempt to purge the poll. We ask this House how this can be done? For instance, Hy Mitchell, an illegal voter, is numbered 25 on the poll-book. Four ballots bear this number; which did Mitchell vote? Tom O'Neal, an illegal voter, is numbered 532. Three ballots bear this number; which did O'Neal vote? Peter Hogan is numbered 344. Three ballots bear that number; which did he vote? Now this thing Mr. Le Moyne, in his brief, page 5, abstract of testimony, says happened one hundred and ninety-eight times. The committee propose to settle this matter in this way: Mr. Mitchell is an illegal voter; his number is 25; therefore all ballots numbered 25 must be excluded. Is it reasonable to suppose Mitchell cast four votes, one for Farwell and three for Le Moyne; that O'Neal and Hogan each cast three; that 198 men cast from two to four votes apiece, and the 183 whose names appear upon the poll-list, but for whom there are no corresponding ballots, never voted at all? Yet if this method of purging is to be followed, that is what is meant, for that is what we do. We disfranchise the 183 and presume the 198 repeated; that the judges coolly took two, three, or four votes from one man, not caring whom they were for, numbered them the same, and the election went on. The idea is absurd. The only explanation we can make of this numbering is that the judges while committing their frauds endeavored to cover their tracks and prevent us from determining who the voters cast their ballots for, and therefore purposely and systematically misnumbered. And that fact in itself is strong argument why we should not follow the majority of the committee.

Again, what presumption arises from the discrepancy between the ballots and the returns? We have shown a recount of the ballots as found in the clerk's office increases Mr. Farwell's majority 42. To our mind it throws additional discredit on the ballots; it takes away the last vestige of faith we could have in them; it raises such a presumption of ballot-box stuffing that we can scarcely doubt the fact, especially taken in connection with the evidence of a score of men who swear they voted for one person but whose votes are for another. The evidence impeaches the ballots as badly as it does the returns.

That we are sustained by the authorities we would refer to Washburn vs. Voorhees, 2 Bartlett, page 58; American Law of Elections, §§ 302, 303, 363, 391, 441, 442,; People ex rel. Judson vs. Thatcher, 7 Lansing, New York. Against these authorities the majority report relies on 4 Brewster, 531, commented upon in American Law of Elections, § 300. We have examined the reported contested cases and find none which sustains this case of Duffy. In the case of Finley vs. Walls, decided at the present session of Congress, the committee decided in reference to a large number of non-registered persons who voted, that as no fraud appeared requiring the rejection of the returns the illegal votes should be divided between the two candidates in proportion to their respective votes.

We know of no theory upon which the burden of proof is shifted. Our statute in reference to contested elections provides for the contestant making his case. He charges that illegal votes are cast and proves it; and does that shift the burden? If it does, the legal principle that the position of the possessor is the better is reversed, and to be a contestee makes a party bear the burden of proof. It is making presumption take the place of evidence and saying that in case an illegal vote is proved, and it becomes impossible to show for whom it was cast, then the person benefited by the general count must suffer. It is absurd.

The only ground upon which the case of Duffy can be sustained is this, that it is the general rule that when illegal votes are proved and it is impossible to know whom they were cast for, it makes the poll liable to rejection for uncertainty; and when the majority for a party is in excess of the illegal vote, that then it is better for him that all the illegal votes be counted for him, and he allowed his undoubted majority, than to reject the returns entirely. But this committee goes beyond this; and instead of leaving him a majority, absolutely presumes one against him.

In the case of Finley against Walls the majority of the committee held, in reference to the colored academy precinct of Columbia County, that, fraud being proved on the part of the judges of the election, the entire returns should be rejected. And this, although it was evident from the character of voters at the precinct that Mr. Walls had a large legal majority. Had they done what they propose to do in this case, charged all the illegal votes proved to him, there is no question that Mr. Walls would now be a member of this House. The rule in that case is, we believe, the legal one, and to attempt to change it is not to the credit of the committee. It is too much like the choice the white man gave to the Indian with whom he had been hunting and killed a turkey and a buzzard. "You take the buzzard and I'll take the turkey, or I'll take the turkey and you take the buzzard." They do not say turkey to the minority once, although if they would take either rule we must, in my judgment, retain one member.

We are convinced, where the officers acted corruptly, as in this case, that the only safe rule is to reject every scrap of testimony that comes from the corrupt source, the returns, poll-list, and ballots, and call the voters to find how they voted, and let the party who desires to have the question opened call the voters and prove the legal votes. This rule is safe and fair. We must act not on presumptions, but on evidence; the parties are not responsible for the acts of the officers of the election. The judge and clerks of this precinct were in no respect the agents of Mr. Farwell; they were the agents of the law, and can bind him by no acts or admissions; they may be his partisans; they are not his agents; and he, like every other litigant, has the right to demand that his case be tried according to the rules of law, and that only legal evidence be allowed.

We also call attention to another matter. The frauds in this precinct were committed in the interests not of Mr. Farwell, but of an aldermanic candidate who received 200 more votes than Mr. Farwell did. The contest was between democrats. The judges of the election were democrats, and all Mr. Farwell and his friends did in the matter was to widen the breach and help one democrat against another in order to make votes for him. And with this evidence it would be absurd to presume that all frauds were in Mr. Farwell's interests. The other rule is indeed the safer one, and I believe this House will agree with the majority of the committee, for on this point six members of the committee take the position I do against five who follow the majority report in its full length.

Having rejected the returns, the ballots, and the poll-list as unworthy of credit, we look to find what evidence exists as to the legal vote of the precinct, and we find that during the first forty days of the taking of testimony the contestant proved 16 legal votes for himself; and the contestee during the succeeding forty proved 3 for himself. These we allow. During the ten days which the statute gives to contestant to take evidence in rebuttal only, he proved 11 legal votes. These the minority do not allow, as not being properly in rebuttal. The contestant successfully impeached the returns during the opening forty days and effectually destroyed their force and effect. Having done this and wiped out the majority of 171 for Mr.

Farwell, it was his duty, to make his case complete, to call in the legal voters, prove that they had voted, and how. This he did to the number of sixteen; he then rested his case.

The sitting member never really went into this question, but incidentally three votes were proved for him. Does this then allow contestant in rebuttal when the contestee's evidence is forever closed to re-open the matter and prove his legal votes? The law is intended to work justice, not injustice; and we hold that this is not within the scope of the intent and meaning of the language in rebuttal only. Eleven votes are proved in this way which we do not count, and this brings us to the real, vital question in the case, Norwood Park precinct; but before entering upon this let us see where we stand. Under any aspect of the case except the following of the five members in reference to the first precinct of the twentieth ward it leaves this precinct to settle the case. If the minority report is followed to this point Mr. Le Moyne is 16 votes ahead; if the 11 votes proved in rebuttal are counted he is 27 votes ahead; while if the third precinct of the eighteenth ward is rejected he is 41 votes ahead.

As it is claimed by the minority that Mr. Le Moyne received 45 illegal votes here and Mr. Farwell but 2, it becomes a matter of vital interest in every aspect of the case what we do with Norwood Park. In reference to this precinct it is admitted that in it is situated the Cook County poor-farm in which there are some one thousand inmates under the charge of one Kimberly, the warden; that at the election in 1874 fifty-eight men voted at this precinct who were unregistered and who gave in their affidavits, upon which they voted their residence as the Cook County poor-farm. Of these it is on all hands agreed that eleven were legal voters, being regular employés, but in reference to the remaining forty-seven there is a disagreement in the committee on each of the three points—first, as to whether these men were paupers; second, as to whether, if paupers, it is shown they had no prior residence in Norwood Park before they became inmates of the poor-house; and third, if paupers, and without prior residence in Norwood Park, does that prevent their being legal voters at that place; or, in other words, can paupers in Illinois gain a residence sufficient to constitute them legal voters by being inmates of a poor-house? The first two questions are purely of fact, the last of law, and we shall consider the three seriatim.

First. Were these men paupers? The presumption arises that they were from their residence; they were from the poor-farm; they were not on the regular pay-rolls. These facts, which are positively proved, certainly would raise strong presumptions as to their status. They were a motley crew, halt and blind. D. C. Dunlap testified:

> There was the lame, the blind, and the halt, and most everything else. They were brought there in the county ambulance and one or two teams that were provided by the county-house.

On cross-examination this witness explained what he meant by "most everything else" as follows:

> It refers to the general looks and character of the people who voted. It was the general appearance of these paupers. They were ragged, and represented most any class of people in appearance.

And one witness being asked facetiously if this represented the class to which he belonged, answered:

> No, sir; I have reference to the lower grade; the people you can pick up in the streets, such as are dependent on other people for support, the county or State.

Dunlap had lived six years in the precinct, and had been to the poor-house many times; had seen the inmates and of course knew their general appearance.

James Winship testified:

> I think somewhere in the neighborhood of sixty voted on that day. It was exceedingly difficult to get any information as to their status, as to whether they were paupers or otherwise, from the fact that they refused to answer questions. They presented affidavits, and, acting under the advice of Kimberly, the warden of the poor-house, refused to answer questions whether they were paupers or not. * * * They were most of them brought to the polls in the county ambulance. * * * They were a hard-looking crowd. A good many of them appeared to be too old and too infirm to be workingmen; some were lame and one was blind.

The same witness testified that he made a memorandum of what these men said and he reads:

> Daniel McFarland, supported by the county in hospital.
> Daniel Boyle, supported by the county, not on pay-roll.
> William Fleming, blind pauper.
> W. A. Kinsella, pauper, supported by the county at the poor-house.
> John Mathews, pauper, does not receive wages; came from Chicago.
> Patrick McCormick, supported by the county at the poor-house; not paid wages; does not know whether he voted or not.

He states that he never saw the men before; that whatever knowledge he had of their residence and condition he got from themselves at the time they voted; any further than that is hearsay. He swears in cross-examination that Kinsella, McFarland, Daniel Boyle, McCormick, and Mathews all stated at the time they voted that they were supported by the county and not paid wages. This man Winship was a lawyer, justice of the peace; and his evidence is very convincing.

Corse, town clerk, testified that some fifty or sixty paupers voted; that when they voted—

> Kimberly came to the window with them, gave the names, presented the affidavit, and in most cases presented the ticket folded; and when objections were made to their voting he dared the judges to refuse their ballots. * * * There were three loads brought in the county ambulance and two or three loads in a large farm-wagon.

This witness, on being asked, "What do these check-marks on the left of the voter's name in ink indicate, opposite Nos. 52, 54, 55, 58, 59, 73, 78, 91, 92, and who made those check-marks and when?" answered:

> They indicate that the parties who voted the ballots of those numbers said that they were paupers and most of them hadn't been in the county-house over thirty days. There were three or four of those that were checked; I think three of them that were employés at the county-house, plumbers and carpenters that resided in the city of Chicago and were only out at the county-farm during the week. Mr. Winship, one of the clerks, made the check-marks at the time the vote was presented. I will state here that their residing at the county-farm was their answers in response to questions put to them by the judges.
> Certain parties challenged their votes on the ground that they were not residents of the town, being paupers. The first few that attempted to vote were rejected. Afterward Mr. Kimberly dared the judges to refuse his votes and threatened to come inside and smash the ballot-box, and after his threats the judges decided to take them all.

He swears that four or five of these men refused to answer questions:

> Mr. Kimberly stood at the window and told them not to answer, and there were four or five that refused to answer after he told them not to. * * * I think the rest answered.

Stephen Pennoyer testified, and his testimony is to the same effect. I will not take time in quoting from it. Jesse Ball and John R. Stockwell also fully sustain them, and if their evidence is not satisfactory and conclusive I cannot tell what is. It amounts to this: Fifty or sixty men came to the polls in the poor-farm ambulance and in wagons; men who, there is no doubt, staid at the poor-house. They were ragged, a hard crowd, like what would be collected in such an institution; one was totally blind, one had his legs off at his hips, several were lame. A dozen of them at the time they voted admitted they were paupers, that they were supported by the county, and that they were not paid wages. Could a stronger case be made out? Is it not absolutely conclusive? It seems so to me.

But George Kimberly comes to the rescue, and his evidence the majority say proves that these men were employés, laborers at the institution. His testimony is well worth reading, and I am free to confess that I am such a dullard in reading evidence that when I finished this evidence of Kimberly I said, "Well, that settles the question;" and I was utterly confounded when I found other members of the committee agreed with me that it settled it, but disagreed as to how. I quote his testimony at length. He says:

> There is a class of employés to whom, in lieu of money, I allow payment in the way of extra clothing, board, and accommodations and liberties.

He then shows who were on the pay-roll:

> Assistant physician, deputy warden, two housekeepers, two watches, two supervisors, eighteen attendants, two nurses, five cooks, four in the laundry, one carman, two waiters, one helper, school-teacher, baker, one farmer, and three assistants. Think that about all.

This makes a regular corps of forty-six persons besides the warden; also a carpenter, Kehoe. Of these he testifies that twenty-five were women, leaving but twenty-three men; and of these the evidence shows that thirteen voted and three did not vote, leaving but seven to be in any way accounted for; and those who voted embrace every name Kimberly in his testimony can remember as having been on the pay-roll as regular employés. And when we recollect that Mr. Kimberly was called in rebuttal after the poll-list and the affidavits had been put in evidence and for the very purpose of proving these men to have been employés, the inference becomes perfectly irresistible that none of the men whom he does not testify to could have been the men on the pay-roll. They certainly do not explain these seven, and certainly this warden, who swears he is a democrat, who was so zealous on election day for Mr. Le Moyne, would when called as a witness in rebuttal make the strongest case possible for Mr. Le Moyne; and hence it is safe to say none of the forty-seven men who voted were regular employés.

A regular force of forty-eight persons would seem sufficient for such an institution as this; but there were other employés, so Kimberly states, whose duties are these: assistants in the bakery, cooks in the kitchen, men in the wash-house and soup-house, men in care of the wards of the almshouse, nurses, teamsters, men in care of stock, and men on the farm, gardeners. These are employed by the authority of the board of public charities, and are paid in extra board, accommodations, clothing, and are allowed small perquisites—liberty. Mr. Kimberly then testifies that he presumes most of these men were convalescent patients from the hospital and that they gained admission to the hospital on physicians' certificates from the city. He also testifies that as a general thing they came as paupers, and he can state no exceptions. In answer to the question, "Was not all of this employment that you have referred to given to the paupers in the institution?" answered—

> That question I could not answer positively. Generally, as far as my knowledge goes, they were from the inmates.

In answer to the question, "What was the extra board these men got for their services; how was it different from the other paupers?" answered:

> Extra allowances of food, tobacco, privileges at first table, extra diet, or what we call special diet, and with some the privilege of eating at the hostpial-table, and in the winter time we have an extra meal, extra allowance of clothing, accommodations in the receiving-house, hospital, and the privilege of selecting their own ward.

We are astonished these men came there as paupers; they did the menial work usually done by the paupers at such an institution; they received small privileges in order to encourage them to labor and be industrious; they receive no money; they work at the poor-house to which they were sent as paupers for their board and clothes, and yet they are employés and not paupers.

But there is still stronger evidence that they were paupers. I would call the attention of the House to the minority report, and you will see that seven men whom Kimberly calls employés call themselves paupers, say they are supported by the county, and receive only their board and clothes.

We are satisfied this House on such evidence will not call these men employés, but will hold with me that they are paupers. And this brings us to the second point of difference: If paupers, did they have a residence in Norwood Park prior to becoming inmates of the poor-house? On this point the evidence is all of a negative character, but we submit that it is conclusive. Six witnesses, all old residents of the town, its officers and principal men—the men who are its clerk, its justice of the peace, its tax assessor and collector, the men who were the board of election—all testify with more or less certainty that they never knew these men except as inmates of the poor-house. We quote. Winship testifies:

I had not seen them before to my knowledge.

Corse says:

I could not recognize any of these people as inhabitants of the town. * * * That they had no other evidence except at the poor-farm. * * * When they voted didn't swear they resided in that precinct. Mr. Walsh made affidavit that they resided at the county-house, and when the judges asked them they said they resided in this city.

This in reference to some whom he calls mechanics.

Pennoyer, an old resident of ten years' standing at Norwood Park, swears "that he could not recognize any of them as having ever been residents at Norwood Park, and there was not one; they were questioned on that point."

Jesse Ball, who had lived in the town since 1866 and had been through it three times within two years in assessing and collecting taxes, says that one of them, whose name he forgets, had worked for a neighbor two years, and could not recognize any of them as voters except that one.

Now we would call attention to the rule from McCrary's American Law of Elections, quoted in the minority report, and insist that when six men from the old residents in a town casting but 84 votes outside the poor-house, men who were the judges and clerks of election, the town clerk, the tax collector and assessor, the justice of the peace, who have lived there from three to ten years, and they swear that they never knew these parties as residents, except as living at the poor-farm, that a strong case is made which uncontradicted is sufficient to base a finding upon. Kimberly, the contestant's only witness, does not attempt to contradict it; but, on the other hand, he swears "these men came mostly on physicians' certificates from the city," and that they came as paupers; and finally, after admitting, as we have seen, that they came as paupers, testifies "that to his recollection none of these employés came as paupers from Norwood Park; that there may have been one but he cannot be positive; and that is as near as he can come to it." Some of the committee argue that this is not definite; but it certainly is strongly corroborative of the evidence of the citizens of Norwood Park.

There are two more circumstances which lead us to believe they could not have come from Norwood Park. The first of these is the absurdity of the idea that in a county like Cook, embracing nearly three congressional districts and having within its limits the great city of Chicago, any considerable number of the inmates of the poor-farm would come from a county precinct casting but eighty-four votes; and the second is that these persons when they voted were all vouched for by a deputy warden of the poor-farm, and by no one else, showing they had few acquaintances there.

The evidence is very strong in every respect, and the contestant virtually admits it by making no attempt to rebut it and by relying on the pitiable subterfuge concocted by Kimberly, that these men were employés! I hardly think I need animadvert to any length on Kimberly. His animus is too plain, his cloak too thin to require his ventilation. The man who marshaled the motley host had them swear they resided at a poor-house and then himself presents the affidavits and the ballots, who told the men not to answer legitimate questions and threatened the officers of the election to exclude their votes, who calls paupers employés and endeavors by every means to bolster up a falling cause, his evidence cannot be of much weight nor his theories worthy of much thought. That the majority of the committee should follow him in his vagaries seems passing strange, for we think the evidence so conclusive that we believe any respectable court, if this evidence was submitted to a jury and they should find that these men were not paupers, would set aside the verdict as clearly against the weight of testimony. And if they should find that they had a prior residence at Norwood Park it would set it aside as being totally unsustained by any evidence whatsoever, for even the circumstances and presumptions would refute it.

Now, if these men were paupers and came to the poor-house from outside Norwood Park precinct, could they be legal voters in Illinois? Paupers in Illinois have the legal right to vote in the precinct of their residence, and if the poor-house is the legal residence of these men for voting purposes there can be no question of their right to vote either under the law or the evidence. After a most careful survey of the whole ground of the whole evidence, we are satisfied the whole case must turn on this legal question, and as this shall be decided by the House so will the final judgment of the case be. If paupers, as inmates of institutions to which they are sent by the authorities of other localities, and not by their own choice—for no pauper or poor person goes to the poor-house through choice, but impelled by dire necessity and by the authorities that are charged with their support—can there gain a residence for purposes of voting, the case, in our opinion, must be decided in favor of the contestant, if not of the contestee, and it is purely a question of law, and should be so considered. The constitution of Illinois provides that every person who has resided in the State one year, in the county ninety days, and in the precinct thirty days immediately prior to any election shall be a legal voter in that precinct. I merely quote from memory, but believe I am substantially correct. The statute follows the terms of the constitution, except that it defines the word residence, and declares that a permanent abode shall be necessary to constitute a residence under the requirements of the election law.

We shall not discuss the power of the Legislature to change the qualifiations prescribed in the Constitution, for nothing of the kind is attempted. The utmost that is done is to define a term used, and as this is done in a reasonable manner and fully in accordance with the intent and spirit of the Constitution—for a residence certainly requires that the party have a fixed abode for the length of time required by the Constitution, and that persons without any permanent home, who are merely transients, here to-day and gone to-morrow, should not control the politics of a community—we believe residence itself means a permanent abode, and so we shall not have any conflict on the constitutional point. Now, do paupers have such a residence when sent to the poor-farm, sinking lower and lower, vagrants from a city, persons too unfortunate, dissolute, imbecile or indolent to support themselves? The authorities take them in hand and without any will or consent on their part send them to the poor-house to be supported at the public expense. There is no wish or intent on the part of these paupers to make the poor-house their home any more than there is on the part of criminals to make the jail or penitentiary their home; they are there because they are sent there. Under these circumstances, does not the last place of abode they voluntarily had continue their only home? Their voting precinct continues to remain where they resided when sent to the poor-house. Any other construction would be unjust.

We have in this very case seen how such people are controlled. Kimberly and Walsh take them to the polls, make the affidavits, have them swear to them, and then vote them, even as is here in evidence, handing in the tickets, so that they may vote as their keepers desire. Two men then control the precinct, for outside of the poor-farm there is a republican majority; with this vote it is strongly democratic. The politics of the township are controlled by men who have no interest whatever; taxes may be levied, bonds voted, improvements made by the inmates of an institution dependent on the public for their daily bread, and who are under such confinement and control that they are not free moral agents. We must say that the spectacle is quite refreshing to see our democratic friends so strenuous and urgent in behalf of the right of these poor paupers to vote on the ground that the spirit and genius of our institutions demand universal suffrage, when in time past they have contested every step toward universal suffrage and have yielded only inch by inch.

But this question must be settled by the authorities. In Illinois the rule has always been that paupers cannot gain a residence by being inmates of a poor-house. On which point see 41 Illinois Reports, page 491, and 29 Illinois. These cases, it seems to us, should settle the question as to what construction is put upon the term residence in Illinois. But the majority claim they are in point only as showing what the term residence means under the poor law and not under the election law. The word used is the same, but the majority say it has two meanings. When used in reference to paupers it has one meaning; in reference to electors the opposite.

But let us analyze this case in 41 Illinois. It seems that formerly counties were responsible for the support of paupers; latterly townships. That while the former rule prevailed paupers were sent to a county poor-house centrally located and remained there two years, more than long enough to become legal voters in the town where the poor-farm was situated. The county was responsible for their support, not the town from which they were sent. When the law was changed the question of course became important whether their residence had been changed, and the court said it had not.

The question turns right on the point could they have gained a residence by being in the poor-house, and the court says no. It will be noticed that the case uses language almost identical to that used in the contested-election case of Covode vs. Foster, 2 Bartlett, 609, which we quote in full. The construction placed on the term residence by the Illinois authorities should control in this House. (American Law of Elections, § 313.)

As to general rule in reference to paupers gaining residence, see American Law of Elections, § 42. Against all this the majority of the committee rely on Cessna vs. Myers, which discusses the question on both sides and expressly declines to decide it, and does not even express an opinion except in reference to those so poor and helpless that they expect to be life-long inmates of the poor-house. We quote the whole of that part of the opinion at length, and submit whether the argument against the right of the pauper to vote even from that opinion is not greater than it is in his favor, and whether the case is not in favor of the minority report rather than the majority. (American Law of Elections, page 431.)

We now refer to a few minor details in the case in reference to other points. We see that the majority report 6 votes for Farwell in the fourth precinct of the eighteenth ward, who being unregistered made affidavits, the jurats to which were not signed. The evidence shows ten such affidavits on file. There is no ballot numbered 316, so we exclude the name of Burrit Burns, numbered 316 on the poll-list. We also exclude the names of J. H. Hansen and Nick Jensen, the former because the affidavit is signed Rasmus H. Hansen, and the name J. H. Hansen on the poll-book does not appear as that of an unregistered voter, the words "not reg." being omitted against the name. We have proved Jensen an illegal voter, and already subtracted him from Le Moyne as an illegal vote, leaving seven; of these, five voted for Mr. Farwell and two for Mr. Le Moyne, making the result reached by the minority and not the majority. There is also another error in the same precinct. Hersh proved, we admit, 13 illegal votes, but the ballots show that one of these, John Cowley, numbered 390, voted for Mr. Le Moyne; which leaves the precincts, other than the three I have especially discussed, as stated in the minority report.

I trust the House will judicially decide the question that it will take the evidence and the law, and on them reach the truth. To me it seems there may be ground at least for argument as to the law of the case, but with all due deference to the members of the committee who signed the majority report, I do not believe its facts are sustained by the evidence, and I am convinced in my own mind that Mr. Farwell is elected and that the minority report ought to be sustained by the House.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, there are two questions in this case, either of which is decisive of it. If the action of the majority of the committee in regard to the poll in the first precinct of the twentieth ward of Chicago is accepted, then Mr. Le Moyne was elected, whatever may be done with the Norwood Park poll. On the other hand, if the House does not believe that it can safely make an attempt to purge the polls at the first precinct of the twentieth ward, then, if it allows the vote to stand in Norwood Park as found by the committee, Mr. Le Moyne was elected.

In the view I take of this case it is important to consider the question whether a pauper in the State of Illinois can acquire a residence at the poor-house in the voting-precinct where he may be supported, provided that is not the precinct in which he resided at the time of his going to the poor-house. Although it may be difficult to define with perfect accuracy what is meant by a residence, still I think for this case it will not be found necessary to give more than the usual, the general definition: "One who is residing in a place with the purpose of remaining there for an indefinite period of time, and without retaining and keeping up any intention to return to his former home, which he has abandoned, will have his domicile in the place of his actual residence."

Chief Justice Bigelow, late of the supreme court of Massachusetts, in Whitney vs. The Inhabitants of Sherborn, 12 Allen, page 111, says:

> The proper instruction would have been, that if the plaintiff was residing in Sherborn on May 1, 1862, with an intention to remain there for an indefinite period of time, and without a fixed purpose to return to Ashland as soon as his work in Sherborn was completed, or if the latter purpose was uncertain or doubtful, then his legal domicile would be in Sherborn. The plaintiff must have a domicile somewhere. It could not be in Ashland if he had gone to reside elsewhere, having no intention to return to his old home, or if his purpose was unformed or indeterminate, either as to the length of his residence in Sherborn or as to his eventual return to Ashland. If such was the state of the case there could be no concurrence of fact and intent which would be necessary in order to create a legal domicile in the latter place.

In fact no question is made but that the voters, whom the contestee claims were paupers, had previous to the election of November 3, 1874, actually resided at the Cook County farm for a length of time sufficient to meet the requirements of the constitution and laws of the State of Illinois in relation to the qualification of voters. And the only question is, could they, however long they may have resided there and whatever may have been their intent, have acquired such a residence at this precinct while supported by a town as paupers as to entitle them to vote at this precinct? There are decisions of the supreme court of Illinois that a person under the pauper laws of that State does not lose his residence by going to a poor-house to reside and residing there, nor does he gain a residence by living at the poor-house. That is, when a pauper is at a poor-house he retains while he remains there his old residence, and does not acquire a new one so as to relieve the old town from the charge of his support and put the burden upon the town in which the poor-house is situated. These decisions rest upon the assumption that the Legislature could not have intended that a residence at the poor-house should relieve the old town from the duty of supporting the pauper and impose that burden upon the town in which the poor-house is situated; that if it had intended such a change it would have been expressly provided to that effect by the laws of the State. In other words, it will not be presumed that the Legislature intended so manifest a wrong. This is good law. An opposite construction would have shocked everybody's sense of justice. But those cases have no bearing upon the one under consideration. This is not a process to determine the legal status of the pauper with reference to the party bound for his support.

The reasoning of the court in those cases has no pertinency in reference to the present case, or if it has any, it is in favor of the position that a pauper, although he may not during the time he is supported by a town be permitted to change his residence so as to affect the party chargeable with his support, still he may while he is thus supported acquire a residence so as to entitle him to vote at the precinct where he actually resides. It would be such a hardship not to permit the pauper to do this, that it will not be presumed to have been so intended by the constitution or the Legislature in the absence of any express provision to that effect; for had such a thing been intended, it would have been done by a clear and positive provision. Certainly the natural and reasonable construction of the provisions concerning the qualification of voters would give the person who might otherwise be qualified to vote the right to vote, provided he had resided in the State one year, in the county ninety days, and in the voting precinct thirty days prior to the day of voting. The law relative to the obligations of parties to support a pauper is to have a reasonable construction with reference to the subject-matter of the law and the party bound to his support. The law with reference to the qualification of voters is to have a reasonable construction with reference to the matter of suffrage and the party, namely, the pauper, who is to exercise the right of suffrage.

There are no substantial reasons why a pauper should not gain a residence so as to entitle him to vote at the precinct where he may actually reside with the intent of remaining, but many reasons why he should acquire such a residence. The only reason he may not be able to acquire such a residence at the poor-house precinct while he is supported by a town outside of the precinct is that the town supporting him may be entitled to his vote, may be entitled to have the benefit of his wisdom and judgment, through his vote, in reference to those local affairs which are the objects of town government; but had this been the intention of the Legislature it would certainly have been provided that, where a party goes to a poor-house for support under the laws of the State, he shall not vote unless he shall return to the town charged with his support and contribute his vote in such town toward the proper administration of the affairs of such town. If that was not the clear intention of the framers of the constitution of the State and the Legislature, then certainly it is not the law. It can only be determined by the courts of law or by this House that such is the case, upon the ground that the framers of the constitution and the Legislature of the State must have clearly intended this, for the reason that an opposite construction would lead to gross and manifest injustice. I submit that nothing of the kind can be fairly presumed from the facts.

The proper construction of the law will be such a construction as will further the manifest object of the law, namely, to give every man in the State liberal facilities for voting. As I have before said, there is no analogy between the gaining of a settlement by a pauper at the poor-house for the purpose of charging his support upon a particular town, and the gaining of a residence for the purpose of acquiring the right to vote. To enable the pauper to do one would be manifestly unjust; not to permit him to do the other would be equally unjust. The pauper in the State of Illinois has the same right to vote as the millionaire. He has the same right, so far as anything appears in the constitution or statutes of that State, to choose his residence as the most favored citizen. There is the most perfect equality in this particular of all men under the constitution and laws. To say that the pauper shall not acquire a residence so as to entitle him to vote in the precinct where he actually resides, is to discriminate against him on account of his poverty, to abridge his power to exercise the elective franchise as a punishment for becoming a public charge. Whatever may be the action of other States in that respect, it is clear that the State of Illinois is determined no such wrong shall be done to the unfortunate poor of her State.

It may be said that the stay of the pauper at the poor-house is an "enforced stay;" that it is not a residence by his free will, and therefore cannot be fairly said to be his residence; that the residence of a party, in order to be his residence within the meaning of the constitution, must be a voluntary residence. In other words, that the pauper's will is so much under restraint that he cannot exercise it with reference to the place where he may reside for voting purposes. Under restraint from whom? From no one certainly but the law, and the law leaves him free to vote and permits no unnecessary restraint to be put upon him in the exercise of this right. The poor-house is a public charity for the relief of the poor, not a penitentiary in which to punish them. The unfortunate man often goes to the poor-house from choice; the old man often without any intention of ever leaving the institution. He exercises as much of a choice as any man does when he changes his residence for the purpose of benefiting his condition. It cannot be said that the pauper is compelled to go to the poor-house any more than it can be said that a man who is dependent upon his labor for support is compelled to leave the place that has ceased to furnish him with employment. They are both made willing to change their actual residences by force of circumstances; but it cannot be justly said that either has been compelled to change his residence so as to forbid his gaining a residence in the place where he may go for the convenient exercise of his political rights.

I submit there is really nothing in this matter of an "enforced stay" which ought to affect the right of the voter. The most that can fairly be said is that the pauper shall not, by going to the poorhouse be compelled to take up his permanent abode at the poor-house precinct, but may retain if he chooses his old residence if he has an intention of returning there and of remaining only temporarily at the poor-house. This undoubtedly is the law; and those paupers at the Cook County farm who had retained their old residence by having an intention of returning there would have had the right to vote at their old precincts, while those who had abandoned all idea of returning to their old residences and had formed an intention of remaining in the new an indefinite time would have the right to vote in the new. This view of the case appears perfectly just, and the only one that can be fairly adopted or defended.

But there is still another view of this case which it appears to me leads to the same conclusion. The right to vote carries with it the correlative duty of voting. The pauper is bound to vote. If he does not, he fails to discharge a duty which he owes to the town, the county, and the State. The town, county, and State demand of him the performance of that duty. Self-government under our system is no more the privilege than the duty of the citizen. The pauper owes to the State his best judgment; he is bound to give that judgment through his vote. The State having demanded it of him, can it be assumed that the State, in the absence of any express provision, has intended to throw any obstacles in the way of his free and convenient discharge of that duty? Can it be said that he has no interest in government because he is supported by public charity? Are not "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" still his inalienable rights and of incalculable value to him?

But it may be suggested that it is unjust to the precinct where the poor-farm is located to allow paupers to vote there; that they may vote in local matters in such a way as to injure the town, and that they may be under the control of the officers of the poor-house and compelled to vote as such officers shall direct. There is certainly no presumption of law that a party will vote wrong; the presumption is that he will vote right, vote for the best interests of the town as well as of the county and State. The State considers that his vote will be a benefit to the State, and can there be any such presumption that the voter whose vote will be of benefit to the State will be of injury to the town? Any suggestion that such will be the case is anti-republican, is anti-democratic, and not in harmony with the genius of our institutions. Sir, the theory of our Government is that an increase of voters is a benefit to the town, the county, and the State. Any other theory is founded upon a distrust of the people. Our political institutions are based upon the fact, "in multitude of counselors there is safety."

There is certainly no presumption that the public officers will attempt to control the ballot of the pauper. The presumption is that they will perform their duty and not trespass upon the rights of those in their charge. And we may safely assume that had the State contemplated that any evil would arise from paupers gaining a residence and voting at the precinct where they actually reside and intend to remain, the State would have provided against it. In whatever view we may look at this question, it seems clear that the State did not intend to place any restrictions upon the right of the pauper to vote, or in any way to limit his opportunity for a free and convenient exercise of that right. To restrict his power to gain a residence for the purpose of voting is to restrict his right to exercise his privilege of voting. It increases the burden of the duty put upon him of exercising the right of suffrage, which is unjust and wholly without any warrant of law. And in large counties, if the pauper is not allowed to gain a residence in the town where he may live, he will be virtually denied the right to vote; the expense of going to a distant part of the county to vote will be more than he can meet.

But it may be said that this question has already been settled against the position I have taken; that the authorities are the other way. I submit that this is now an open question, one yet to be settled. The election case of Foster vs. Covode, 2 Bartlett, page 600, is the strongest authority against the right of the pauper to gain a residence while living at the poor-house. This point does not appear to have been very fully discussed or considered, and the decision of the point was not conclusive as to the rights of the parties. The only authority cited by the majority report in support of their position is Burrill's Law Dictionary. The point that a party may have a residence for one purpose and not for another does not appear to have been considered, and this authority is but little more, so far as it relates to a pauper, than a repetition of the familiar principle that a party while at the poor-house, subject to public charge, should not be permitted while there to so change his residence as to affect the obligation of the party to his support who was chargeable with it at the time he became an inmate of the poor-house. That case being from the State of Pennsylvania, its authority is greatly shaken, if not completely destroyed, by the action of the State senate of Pennsylvania in the case of Scull vs. Finley about the time of the report of the Committee of Elections in that case, in declaring in the most explicit manner that a pauper may gain a settlement so as to entitle him to vote while at the poor-house precinct, and this, too, under the advice of the attorney-general of that State, whose able opinion upon the subject is given in the report of the committee. It appears to me that the great consideration given the case of Scull vs. Finley by the senate of Pennsylvania, and their action upon the same as a construction of the law of that State, is entitled to great weight. The fact that the paupers were not legally assessed and their taxes illegally paid appears to have had great weight in determining the decision of the committee and the action of the House in the case of Foster vs. Covode.

The reasoning of Mr. HOAR, in his able report in the case of Cessna vs. Myers, in the Forty-second Congress, which is referred to in report of the committee, leads directly to the conclusion that a pauper may acquire a residence for the purpose of exercising the rights of suffrage; but that point was not decided in that case. And I believe that I am fully borne out by the facts when I say that the question as to whether a pauper can gain a residence for the purpose of voting is still an open question and that it ought to be settled with a liberal construction in favor of the right of suffrage. The whole course of legislation in this country is in that direction, and we ought not unnecessarily to give a decision in opposition to that principle. I have briefly stated my position without illustrating it, but trust that I have made my position clearly understood, which is all that I have aimed at or desired in the remarks I have submitted on this point.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. One who spoke with the tongue of inspiration, when addressing himself to an individual from whose eyes the scales had not yet fallen, and who I presume was a good sound democrat at the time, said, "It is hard to kick against the pricks." I apprehend that it is just as true now as it was then, and that that word of inspiration was probably intended for these times and for just such occasions as this, when a republican in pleading on behalf of the minority is speaking to the deaf ears, I will not say the dumb consciences, of an overwhelming majority, who, not content with the overwhelming proportions of that majority, are still possessed of a transcendent yearning to add other recruits by depleting the small minority that the republican party has on this side of the House.

I was not at all surprised to see my distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] roll up the whites of his eyes and with extended hands invoke the gods, infernal and supernal, to bear testimony whether or not such infamous villainies were ever practiced in all the recorded annals of time as had been practiced by the republican managers of elections in the first precinct of the twentieth ward of the city of Chicago. Now I beg that my distinguished friend and his coadjutors on that side of the House will not be seized with this sudden spasm of virtue. I beg to say to them that in my opinion the day that sees the conversion of the democratic party to purity will see its final demise; and for one I hope that party will live until after the next election shall be held.

I want to say here and now that I agree with the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Elections [Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia] that there were grave frauds practiced at the election in the first precinct of the twentieth ward of Chicago. But when he undertakes to say that no such frauds ever before occurred in the history of the world he certainly must have forgotten the record of the last presidential election that was held by the democrats in the South and in the great cities of this country, where frauds were perpetrated of such grave character that almost open rebellion against the constituted authorities of certain cities in this Union has been witnessed, and where the people rising in their righteous indignation have appointed committees of safety for the purpose of seeing, not that republicans should not trample on the sacredness and sanctity of the ballot-box, but that the democrats, that party which is lauded so highly by my friend from Virginia, should not prevent a free and fair election at the polls.

I admit, and I regret to do so, that the republican party have in some measures, with somewhat shorter steps, but still steps all too long, been marching in some instances in the direction of corrupting the ballot-box, the only refuge that is left to liberty in America, for which direction they have such repeated and such illustrious examples in the history of the democracy of this country. When the democratic party evinces as great regard for the purity of the ballot-box as does the republican party, the patriotic citizen will know and feel that a better day has dawned upon the country than has been seen since the democrats first became a party.

There are but two questions that I propose to discuss to-day in connection with this case, and I hope to get through with their discussion in much less than the time that is allotted to me. One of the questions relates to the election that was held in the first precinct of the twentieth ward of the city of Chicago, and the other is whether or not the pauper votes cast in the Norwood Park precinct in the county of Cook are to be counted for the contestant in this case.

Now, I desire to say at the outset that, if it shall be held by this House, as the majority of the Committee of Elections hold, that the return of the first precinct of the twentieth ward ought to be thrown out because of fraud, then the result of this contest depends upon the decision of the question whether or not the legal and qualified voters of the residue of the third congressional district of Illinois are to be disfranchised by the counting of the pauper votes imported into the Norwood Park precinct from the third and the two other congressional districts that are in part formed from the city of Chicago.

I desire to say that I believe that, for some reason which I am not able to fathom, the election board that took charge of the election in the first precinct of the twentieth ward of the city of Chicago is covered all over with fraud from the inception of the election until its final conclusion. Without dwelling on the evidence, I shall refer simply to five or six points that are so clearly and overwhelmingly established by the testimony as, in my judgment, to leave no possible doubt on the question of fact.

The question of law before the House on these facts, then, is what is the legal consequence deducible from the admitted fact of fraud on the part of the judges of election? In the notice of contest the contestant alleges, as ground of contest, that there was fraud in connection with the election held in the first precinct of the twentieth ward. The charge made in the notice is in words of most comprehensive import. The contestant, in his notice of contest, does not claim—there is no such claim made, no such intimation given—that it is possible to purge this poll of the fraud that commenced with the registering of the voters, and did not end until the ballot-box had reached the office of the county clerk.

First with reference to the proof. The proof clearly discloses the fact, and on this point there is substantially no dispute, that the registry-lists were fraudulent; that from two hundred to three hundred names of persons who were dead, of persons who had never resided in that precinct, and of fictitious persons, persons who, so far as the evidence goes, do not appear ever to have had any existence at all, were placed on the registry-lists.

It appears that there was a mob surrounding the voting-place, and that the officers of the election were apparently in collusion with this mob. It appears by the evidence that under the law the democratic challenger, who was entitled to be within the room where the election was held, was by violence prevented from having access there by the officers holding the election. It appears further that ballots which under the law are required to be numbered were falsely numbered. When the ballot-box was opened at the time of taking the evidence in this contest there were found to be six hundred and seventy-three ballots in the box; and under the law there ought to have been six hundred and seventy-three numbers on those ballots, running consecutively from 1 to 673. Instead of that, there were found on the ballots numbers as high as 677; and instead of being numbered consecutively as required by law, to correspond with the poll-list, there were one hundred and eighty-three numbers on the ballots for which there were no names of voters on the poll-list. There were one hundred and ninety-eight ballots of duplicate and triplicate numbers; and in some instances as many as four and five ballots were numbered with a number corresponding with a single name on the poll-list.

The judges returned that Mr. Farwell had received 422 votes at this poll and that Mr. Le Moyne had received 231, giving Mr. Farwell a majority of 171. When the ballot-box was opened and the canvass of the votes was had while the evidence was being taken in this contest, the ballots disclosed 443 for Farwell and only 230 for Le Moyne, making, instead of the certified majority of 171 for Mr. Farwell, as given by the return of the election officers, a majority of 213, showing a change or a falsification of the ballots in the ballot-box to the number of at least 21. The judges of the election were proved by evidence which, in my judgment, is incontestible to have been in fraudulent collusion with repeaters and ballot-box stuffers; and they were engaged actually in falsifying the ballots.

In addition to all these circumstances of fraud, the returns were not made until the second day after the election. The ballots, poll-books, affidavits—in short all the record evidence of the election—were left over night and the greater part of a day unsealed and unguarded in a low, disreputable tavern, where any person who had the disposition might tamper with any and all of these evidences and muniments of title under this election.

The evidence with reference to this precinct, from first to last, as connected with the registry, with the poll-list, with the ballot-box, with the returns, with every single instrument of written evidence connected with the election, shows open, notorious, flagrant, and high-handed fraud. In fact, Mr. Speaker, a minority of those who sign the majority report admit in the most unmistakable language that fraud existed on the part of the officers conducting this election. "It is clear," they say, on page 6 of their report, "that the ballot-box had been tampered with; but it must be remembered that the box was in the custody of the friends and supporters of the contestee." I take it then as established that the officers are proved to have been guilty of fraud; that every single item of written evidence connected with this election is affirmatively proved to have been tampered with and falsified. The question of law arising on this state of facts is, what is to be done with it? On that question of law there was a division in the committee. The five democratic members of the committee believed that it was their duty and that they were able out of this mountain of fraud and corruption, without a single paper that had not been affirmatively proved false, to build up a structure of truth in favor of the contestant; while, on the other hand, the republican members of the committee believed, and in that belief two of the democratic members join, that where it is proved that the officers were guilty of fraud and that every single instrument of evidence connected with the election—the registry list, the poll-list, the ballot-box—has been falsified, it would be unsafe and unwise to establish the doctrine that out of these fraudulent elements you can deduce truth and by means of that purge or attempt to purge the poll.

On this point I wish to call attention to a few authorities before I proceed to consider the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, a suggestion plausible, but, in my judgment, utterly unsound, by which he seeks to avoid the consequences which flow from this fraudulent conduct. Why, sir, I had supposed that there was no question about the correctness of the proposition that fraud vitiates every act, however high or solemn it may be; that fraud nullifies everything it comes in contact with, and that you can deduce no safe conclusion from instruments of evidence which may be manufactured by men engaged in a fraud, instruments every one of which are proved to be fraudulent in their character. But we are told that this principle is not correct. Let us see what is said with reference to this subject by Mr. McCrary in his approved work on elections. I desire to call attention to a paragraph or two. I first read from the conclusion of a paragraph on page 134:

And the safe rule probably is that where an election board are found to have willfully and deliberately committed fraud, even though it affect a number of votes too small to change the result, it is sufficient to destroy all confidence in their official acts, and to put the party claiming anything under the election conducted by them to the proof of his votes by evidence other than the returns.

I read from the next page:

The presumption is that an election is honestly conducted; and the burden of proof to show it otherwise is on the party assailing the return. What we mean here to assert is only this, that where a return is clearly shown to be willfully and corruptly false in any material part—

In this case we go further and prove every single item of evidence in this case, the registry, poll-list, ballots, returns, all to have been falsified—

When a return is clearly shown to be willfully and corruptly false in any material part, the whole of it becomes worthless as proof, for if false and corrupt in one part, it may be in others; and all faith in its reliability is destroyed. In such a case, however, it must not be assumed that the election is necessarily void. If satisfactory proof of the actual vote can be made, and the result thus ascertained, the election may stand, although the return fall to the ground.

I read further from the same work, page 334:

There is a difference between a fraud committed by officers or with their knowledge and connivance and a fraud committed by other persons, in this: the former is ordinarily fatal to the return, while the latter is not fatal, unless it appears that it has changed or rendered doubtful the result. If an officer of the election is detected in a willful and deliberate fraud upon the ballot-box, the better opinion is that this will destroy the integrity of his official acts, even though the fraud discovered, is not of itself sufficient to affect the result. (Ante, § 184, Judkins vs. Hill, 50 New Hampshire, page 104.) The reason of this rule is that an officer who betrays his trust in one instance is shown to be capable of the infamy of defrauding the electors, and his certificate is therefore good for nothing. If, for example, an election officer having charge of a ballot-box prior to or during the canvass is caught in the act of abstracting certain ballots and substituting others, although the number shown to have been abstracted be not sufficient to affect the result, yet no confidence can be placed in the contents of a ballot-box which has been in his custody. We repeat, therefore, the opinion expressed in a former chapter, that a willful and deliberate fraud on the part of such an officer, being clearly proven, should destroy all confidence in his official acts, irrespective of the question whether the fraud discovered is of itself sufficient to change the result. The party taking anything by an election conducted by such an officer must prove his vote by evidence other than the return.

These authorities establish two propositions: first, that fraud practiced by an officer vitiates the return and, secondly, that whoever would take anything by such an election must go to the voters and prove the actual votes cast.

But it is suggested that it must be assumed that these frauds were committed in the interest of the successful candidate, on the ground that at least two of the inspectors of election were the party friends of the sitting member. And we were told that it is an old and familiar principle of law that no man shall take advantage of his own wrong; that no man shall reap any profit from the fraud of his agent. It was argued that the officers of the election were all agents of the candidate who was running and asking the ballots of the people, and that thus, being the agents of the party, the successful party was to be assumed to be the one in favor of whom all these frauds were practiced, and consequently he was to be charged by having the fraudulent votes proved, without any evidence for whom they were cast, struck from his majority. I say there is another principle of law, of justice, and of common honesty, equally as old and exactly correlative to the other proposition, and that is, neither the law, nor any third party, without my consent, can constitute an agent for me to practice a fraud which shall work to the injury of my rights.

I say the law is this, that these men are officers of the law, that they are not the agents of either party, and that there is no presumption one way or the other. I undertake to say, with the single exception of a nisi prius case decided by a common-pleas judge in 4 Brewster's Pennsylvania Reports, that is commented upon and its authority denied by McCrary in section 300 of his Election Laws, there is nowhere to be found an authority supporting the doctrine that when I happen to run for an office every man who sits as a judge of election, whether I know him or not, is my agent, and I am to be charged with all the fraud he may see fit to perpetrate if I happen to be the successful candidate. And that is the conclusion reached by five of the eleven members composing this committee.

But, Mr. Speaker, without going any further for authority, I beg to say that against this nisi prius opinion, delivered by a Pennsylvania common-pleas judge, the authorities are legion, and it is simply reversing the whole current of authority to say that the man who as plaintiff comes into court and alleges he has been wronged shall, upon presumption, without proof, take advantage of the alleged wrong and compel his adversary to prove no wrong has been done. It is reversing the maxims of the law in thus assuming these officers are guilty of fraud and wrong in that particular direction without proof. I will not discuss it, and will not refer to any but a single authority, and that authority, Mr. Speaker, is a decision in Illinois, the State in which this contest arises, giving an exposition to this very question of presumption, and which, unless this House desires to reverse that old democratic doctrine that in local matters and in reference to elections we should have "home rule," and the laws of the States shall determine who have the right to vote, and when they have voted what shall be the rule by which the validity of these elections shall be determined.

In the case 29 Illinois Reports, the very same case referred to by the learned chairman, on the petition of a railroad company, an election was ordered in a particular county, and, of course in pursuance of that, officers of election were designated by the constituted authorities of the law. The law of Illinois provided that the election should close at five o'clock. It was imperative on that point, and one of the grounds upon which the enemies of the proposed aid that was declared to have been voted to this railroad company sought to contest the election was because the officers of the election, in the interest of the railroad company, had kept the polls open for a long time after five o'clock, and had actually received a sufficient number of votes after that hour to change the result of the election. And it was argued on the part of those who were contesting this aid that was thus voted that the presumption of the law, inasmuch as the polls were kept open after five o'clock, when they were to be closed by law, was, that in this election, held at the instance of the railroad company, the officers of election acted as agents and in the interest of the railroad company, and consequently it did not require any proof to show that they had knowingly and wantonly transcended their authority in that direction.

The judge of the circuit court in delivering his charge to the jury uses this language; and it is language, Mr. Speaker, that demonstrates beyond all question of doubt the fact that this election was held at the instance of the railroad company, that the railroad company was the only one to be benefited by it, and that the officers of election could act only in their interest. If they acted wrongfully, it demonstrates the fact that no presumption arose, and that whoever chose to claim advantage in consequence of the wrongful act of those officers had affirmatively to prove injury. The fifth charge is this:

If the jury should believe from the evidence that the judges of said election kept the polls of said election open until after five o'clock p. m. on the day of said election, this alone will not defeat or affect the validity of said election, or establish the defendant's defense, unless—unless the jury shall also find, from complete and satisfactory evidence, that this was done at the instigation and request of the said railroad company, or its agents duly authorized to act in the premises; and the fact that the said railroad company was interested in the result of said election, alone, is no legal evidence whatever to establish any improper act or interference on the part of said railroad company or their agents.

The only party interested in this fraudulent holding of the polls open was the railroad company; and yet the court say that the fact that they alone were interested in the result of that election was no proof that they had kept it open in violation of law, and that it had to be affirmatively proved by satisfactory evidence in order to justify the jury in finding that fact established.

Now then there is a decision on the very question that is involved here, the question of presumption, decided by the supreme court of Illinois, that completely covers the ground, and is in accordance, as I submit, with every authority in the books, with the exception of a mere rambling discussion by a nisi prius judge in one of the Pennsylvania common-pleas courts, that is relied upon by the majority, or rather that is relied upon by the five democratic members, to support this proposition; I say all the authorities concur with the judgment of the supreme court of Illinois upon that question. It is but right that I should say that the supreme court, in speaking of this charge of the judge in the court below that I have just read, says that it gives "a fair exposition of the law of the case on the facts proved."

I submit then that it is established beyond any question, and that it must be the law, that a man who has the good or bad fortune to be a candidate for Congress cannot be charged with all the frauds of all the election officers of his congressional district simply because the majority of them happen to belong to the same party to which he belongs. The principle is monstrous in its character, and it seems to me that the statement of it would have been sufficiently cogent and persuasive on the judgment of the five gentlemen who concurred in holding the contrary that they would without hesitation have joined with the majority in holding that the first precinct of the twentieth ward ought to be utterly rejected, and that out of these fraudulent elements no truth could be deduced for the purpose of setting it up and counting the returns; that it required the application of the rule that I have read in the three citations from McCrary, that whoever in this state of the proof would take any advantage of such an election must go to the voters and prove by them how they voted.

With reference to the other proposition, Mr. Speaker, that has been commented on so ably by my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. THOMPSON,] I shall say but very little, for the reason that there are gentlemen, lawyers with a life-time of experience, from the State of Illinois who will speak to that question of law, and do it more forcibly and more pertinently than I possibly can. I desire to say, in the first place, that I sympathize as deeply as any man can with the unfortunate condition of a man or of a woman either that compels him or her to seek refuge in a poor-house for shelter and to depend upon the charity of the public for the means of subsistence with which they may eke out their life. It is not, however, a question of sentiment. It is not a question as to whether or not we may feel that these paupers ought to vote. But the question is, What is the law of the State of Illinois upon this particular subject; and what is the decision of this House upon that particular question? In my judgment, Mr. Speaker—and I shall not refer to authorities—in my judgment, the weight of authority, so far as this House is concerned, is in the direction of holding that a pauper, who gains no other residence except such as he acquires by living in a poor-house, is not a qualified voter. In the case of Monroe vs. Jackson, that has been referred to by the gentleman from Virginia, the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Elections, I understood him to say that no decision had been reached on this question. If such was the observation of the gentleman—and I so understood it—I have to say that the compiler of the decisions of the House of Representatives in contested-election cases, as reported in 1 Bartlett, page 98, entirely differs from the distinguished gentleman. The syllabus of that case announces this as the proposition decided:

That where paupers voted for the sitting member, they having been admitted to an almshouse from another congressional district, the committee held that the previous residence of such paupers was their legal residence.

"The previous residence of the paupers was their legal residence;" the very doctrine I contend for. But the gentleman says that, that being a whig House and the sitting member being a democrat, they did not decide it, because they held the election for some reason or other that is not disclosed in the report of the committee to be void. Well, now, to my mind it simply settles this question: That the conscience of the old whig party was a little keener than the present conscience of the democratic party; because the whigs resolved the doubt in favor of a political opponent and declared the election void and relegated the question back to the people. Every doubt is resolved by our democratic friends in favor of their party every time without missing a single count. But here it appears that the whigs held that these paupers who were imported into that poor-house from another congressional district still retained their residence in the place from which they had been transported; yet they held that the election was void on some ground, and instead of seating the whig member sent both parties back to the people.

There was another case in which the question was squarely decided by the House. I refer now to the case of Koontz vs. Coffroth, decided in 2 Bartlett, 145, in the year 1866.

The majority of the House voted in that particular case to allow the pauper vote to stand. In the case of Covode vs. Foster, in 2 Bartlett, 609, the decision in the case of Koontz vs. Coffroth was overruled; and from the decision in that case I will read an extract:

But did these persons acquire a residence in the election district where the county house was situated, within the meaning of the law of Pennsylvania, which requires that the voter shall have resided at least ten days immediately preceding the election in the district where he offers to vote? We think not. Their residence at this place was not their own voluntary act, but the act of the public authorities who, for the reasons of economy and convenience, sent them here that they might be supported at the public expense.

The court in Murray vs. McCarty, 2 Munford, 397, says that to divest a person of the character of citizen of a particular place "there must be a removal with an intention to lay aside that character, and he must actually join himself to some other community." The italics are those of the original report.

So Burrill (Law Dictionary, title Residence) defines residence as "the place which one has made his seat, abode, or dwelling." The derivation, as well as the ordinary acceptation of the term, denotes the place where the party has seated himself, and his own choice or free will in the matter is asssumed. We think this the legal as well as the ordinary meaning of the term, and that accordingly the soldier who occupies a place at the command of his military superiors, the criminal who does the same thing while in custody in the hands of the criminal authorities, and the pauper who is placed and supported in the county poor-house at the public expense, gains no residence in the town of his enforced stay.

That was the last case in this House in which the question has been squarely decided, and that case was later than the case of Koontz vs. Coffroth, in 2 Bartlett, this last case having been decided in 1870 and the Koontz vs. Coffroth case in 1866, so that so far as the authorities of this House are concerned they established the proposition that a pauper is not entitled to vote. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that in the case of Cessna vs. Meyers, reported somewhat later than the case of Covode vs. Foster, the authorities and all the arguments upon one side and the other upon the question as to the propriety of allowing paupers to vote were very fully and very vigorously stated by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts who was a member of the Committee of Elections at that time; but it was distinctly declared, however, in that report that it was not necessary to decide the question, and it was distinctly declared that it was not the intention to express any opinion upon it. So that, instead of its being an authority affecting the weight of the authority in the case of Covode vs. Foster, it does not overrule the decision in the case of Covode vs. Foster, in 2 Bartlett, 609, which overrules the decision in the case of Koontz vs. Coffroth, in 2 Bartlett, and holds to the rule as laid down in the case of Monroe vs. Jackson, making a perfect line of authorities in this House holding that paupers do not acquire a residence by being transported to the poor-house from the place of their residence.

The same doctrine is maintained in the case that was referred to by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BROWN] in 41 Illinois decisons, the State from which this contested-election case comes, and in that decision it is squarely held that a pauper does not become a charge upon the township or municipality where the poor-house is located by gaining a residence there while he is thus supported at the public expense.

I want to say to the gentlemen who maintain the contrary proposition that that doctrine is as old as the common law itself. We imported it from England; we inherited it from our ancestors, and it has always been maintained, where it is not abrogated by statute, as the law of all the States of this Republic down to to-day, that a pauper does not by remaining in a poor-house obtain a residence so as to become a charge on the township where the poor-house happens to be located. Unfortunate indeed would be the condition of a township where a poor-house like the poor-house in the Norwood Park precinct was located if the thousand paupers who are sent from the three congressional districts in Illinois that are within the limits of Cook County, by remaining in the poor-house, became entitled by their residence there to the rights of citizenship there. There are only eighty-four citizens in the Norwood Park precinct, and yet the thousand paupers collected together at the poor-house from three congressional districts may be carried in ambulance-wagons to the polls to control every single election that takes place there and to vote down the actual residents of that precinct and deprive them of the dearest rights of American citizenship.

But gentlemen undertake to say that there is a different rule, that a man can become a citizen for the purpose of voting taxes out of another man's pockets, and yet he cannot become a citizen for the purpose of becoming chargeable as a pauper in the precinct where he has acquired the right to vote. He can vote taxes out of my pocket, but he cannot be charged upon the township where he has a right as an American citizen to vote. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] says that it is a high privilege and a solemn duty resting on a pauper to vote, and that the presumption of law is that he votes right. Now, I did not expect any other conclusion than that from my democratic friend. No paupers ever went in ambulance-wagons to the polls and voted down the honest citizens of the ward or precinct that a democrat who was benefited by it did not, like the Pharisee, fold his hands upon his breast and thank God that he was purer than other men, and declare that the election was all right.

I say that when it is admitted that every authority from the earliest history of the common law down to this day says that a man cannot go into a poor-house and gain a settlement so as to become chargeable on that township, it rests with those who claim that he can thereby become a voter in that township or precinct to show how he can become a voter, how he can obtain the right of citizenship, be enfranchised, and, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] says, clothed with all the rights and prerogatives that I am or any other American citizen is invested with under the Constitution of my country; and yet he cannot call on his peers in the township where he votes to support him, but he must derive the means of his support from the township from which he came when he became a public charge and where he has ceased to be a voter. I say that is not law, it is not common sense, it is not common justice.

What would be the feeling of any one of you on that side of the House, if you were one of the eighty-four legal and qualified voters in the Norwood Park precinct, if you were gravely told by a democratic House of Representatives that the thousand paupers who came from the dens and cess-pools of the great city of Chicago had the right to be carted in an ambulance-wagon to the polling-place of your precinct, and these paupers have the right to vote you down, vote your rights away, and to put you in the abject condition of being at their mercy?

The law pleads for it, say they; justice, they say, pleads for it; humanity, they say, pleads for it. But in the name of outraged humanity may I not plead for the men who by years of diligent toil and well-doing have built up their homes and amassed property there in that precinct? Have they no rights that a democratic House of Representatives is bound to respect?

Nay, more than that; my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. THOMPSON] says that the presumption is that these paupers voted right. That presumption is, I suppose, because they regularly voted the democratic ticket as often as they were carted up to the polls. And how does it happen that they voted the democratic ticket? Because the unscrupulous man in charge of the poor-house, a democrat in politics and I suppose a democrat in practices, as his own witnesses testify carried these paupers in his ambulance-wagons to the polls. Why were they so carried? Evidently for the purpose of striking down the inestimable rights of American citizenship and of defeating the will of the lawful voters of this precinct. The affidavits and ballots of these paupers in a large number of cases were passed into the ballot-box by the hand of the very man, George S. Kimberly, keeper of the poor-house, who carted them to the polls.

And yet we are told that the presumption is that that was a fair and honest election; that these poor paupers—imbecile, helpless, maimed, crippled victims of misfortune, who could not walk a mile to the polling-place of the precinct, but had to be carted there like cattle to the market—voted from that exalted and patriotic impulse that animates the heart and swells the breast of every man who is engaged in exercising the sacred right of the elective franchise. Who believes it? Who believes they were aught else but the mere tools of Kimberly? Who believes they knew or cared for whom they voted so they voted as their master bid them vote?

I say with all deference and respect, and I want it recorded here, that I sympathize with these poor people. I recognize their right to vote in the several congressional districts and precincts from which they were taken to the poor-house. I hold that they had the right to go back to and vote in the precinct from which they came; that was their undoubted right. But I say if you are going to carry such people to the polls, then in the name of common fairness let them be carried back to the precincts from which they came and where they resided. While I concede their right to vote where they came from, and would be the last man in the world to object to it, I do say, in the name of American justice, in the name of the outraged ballot-box, in the name of the rights of American citizenship, stricken down in Norwood Park precinct, in the name of that Constitution which we ought to venerate and respect, such a great wrong ought not to be perpetrated as the seating in this House as a member of it one whose sole muniment of title is the vote of forty-five non-resident paupers, wheeled by the master-overseer from the poor-house to vote and carry the election by this vote alone.

Mr. POPPLETON obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the gentleman will yield to me I will move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. POPPLETON. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move that the House now adjourn.

DAVID W. STOCKSTILL.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1183) for the relief of David W. Stockstill, of Sidney, Ohio, and moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and that the accompanying report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS ON GALVESTON ISLAND, TEXAS.

Mr. BANNING, from the same committee, reported back, with a unanimous recommendation in favor of its passage the bill (H. R. No. 2089) to provide for the erection of military fortifications on Galveston Island, in the State of Texas, and moved that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that the accompanying report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

GENEVA AWARD.

Mr. LORD. I again ask unanimous consent, for the reasons which I stated this morning, that the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2685) for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award be postponed until Monday next after the morning hour and made the special order for that time and from day to day thereafter until disposed of.

Mr. FORT. I object.

Subsequently,

Mr. LORD said: Mr. Speaker, the objection to the request I made in regard to making the Geneva award a special order is now withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection should be withdrawn by the gentleman who made it.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] who made the objection, stated to me that he did withdraw it.

Mr. LORD. I ask the Chair to submit the request again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] asks unanimous consent that the bill for the distribution of the moneys obtained under the Geneva award be made a special order for Monday next after the morning hour and from day to-day until disposed of.

Mr. DURHAM. I must object. I have given way several times for special orders——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The subject is not open to discussion. Objection is made.

D. P. ROWE—BROWN & CROWELL.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, a bill (H. R. No. 1219) for the relief of D. P. Rowe, and Brown & Crowell, of Morristown, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CHARLES METCALFE.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3283) for the relief of Charles Metcalfe; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RECIPROCAL TRADE WITH CANADA.

Mr. PIERCE. I ask unanimous consent to present a memorial thirty feet long and signed by 1300 merchants and citizens of Boston and vicinity, in favor of an equitable treaty for reciprocal trade by the United States with the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland. I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and be printed in the RECORD without the names.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the experience of the last several years has served to deepen the conviction in the minds of the business men of this country that important concessions might be made by both the United States and the Dominion of Canada, which would serve to materially increase the trade between them and relieve it from many vexations restrictions to which it is now subjected; and whereas the treaty of 1854 between Great Britain and the United States was abrogated by a notice from the United States in 1865, it would be courteous and desirable that the first steps toward negotiating a new treaty should be taken by the United States: Therefore,

We, the undersigned, merchants and citizens of Boston and its vicinity, reiterating our earnest desire expressed heretofore in resolutions of our board of trade for the consummation of an equitable treaty for reciprocal trade by the United States with the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland, and our belief that it would be mutually advantageous and greatly facilitate the business of the respective countries, hereby respectfully memoralize your honorable body and pray that action may be soon taken for the negotiation and ratification of such treaty.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BLACKBURN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the petition of sundry citizens of Clark County, Kentucky, praying for the establishment of a post-route.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. LAWRENCE for ten days during the month of May; and to Mr. KIDDER for two weeks, on account of sickness in his family.

JOSEPH DIEHL.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in the claim of Joseph Diehl; which were referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. THOMPSON, that the House adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. CHITTENDEN: The petition of Petronila D. G. Clarke, to be placed on the pension-roll, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JENKS: The petition of John Mervine, to be relieved from the charge of desertion, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LAPHAM: Resolutions of the General Assembly of New York that the Senators and Representatives in Congress from that State be requested to use their influence to secure without delay the legislation necessary and requisite as well for the protection of the immigrants to that State as for the security of the cities, towns, and counties thereof, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MAGINNIS: A paper relating to the establishment of post-routes from Boulder to Butte City; from Fort Shaw, via Smith's River, to Camp Baker; from Old Agency to New Agency, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McFARLAND: The petition of Mrs. Malissa Burton, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Martha E. Jones, for a pension and for bounty and back pay due her late husband, James S. Jones, to the same committee.

Also, the petition of Malinda Lea, for a pension, to the same committee.

By Mr. MEADE: The petition of liquor dealers of New York, for the definition of the powers and duties of officers of the internal revenue and to further provide for the collection of the tax on distilled spirits, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. PARSONS: The petition of J. L. Spaulding, that certain amendments be made to sections 2249, 3270, 3287, 3320, and 3321 of the Revised Statutes, relative to distilled spirits, to the same committee.

By Mr. THROCKMORTON: Memorial of the county judge and other county officials of Shackleford County, Texas, and many citizens, for legislation that will relieve the Tonkaway tribe of Indians at Fort Griffin, Texas, who have always been friendly to the whites and who are now suffering for want of food, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Eufaula to Hawkinsville, Barbour County, Alabama, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, a paper relating to a change of the post-route from Eufaula to White Pond, in Barbour County, Alabama, so as to include Du Bose's Store, to the same committee.

By Mr. YOUNG: Additional papers relating to the claim of William G. Ford, for compensation for cotton seized and sold by the United States authorities, to the Committee of Claims.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 1, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McCREERY presented the petition of Phebe Wilson, widow of William Wilson, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WITHERS presented a memorial of the Richmond Chamber of Commerce, in favor of the metric system of weights and measures, and of fixing some date several years in advance when it shall be the sole authorized public standard of weights and measures; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a petition of citizens of Norfolk, Nebraska, praying that Congress may take some action for the relief of Edward O'M. Condon, a citizen of the United States, formerly a Union soldier, who is held in custody by the government of Great Britain on a charge in connection with Fenian disturbances; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KEY presented the petition of Colonel R. K. Byrd, of Roane County, Tennessee, praying to be remunerated for losses incurred in recruiting the Federal Army in East Tennessee during the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MERRIMON presented the petition of A. M. Powell, of North Carolina, praying that certain taxes paid by him for cotton may be refunded; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition and papers of Michael Frederick, of Blair County, Pennsylvania, praying for arrears of pension; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of envelope-makers and printers of Pennsylvania, praying to be relieved from injurious competition of governmental action, and for the discontinuance of the manufacture and sale by the Government of stamped envelopes, newspaper-wrappers, and postal cards; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented two memorials of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, engaged in the manufacture of sal-soda and kindred articles, remonstrating against putting the same on the free list; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented six memorials of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, engaged in the manufacture and sale of sal-soda, remonstrating against placing the same on the free list; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KELLY presented additional papers in support of the bill (S. No. 454) for the relief of the sureties of J. W. P. Huntington; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STEVENSON. I present a number of memorials from several hundred citizens of Kentucky, in favor of the appointment of a commission to investigate and report the effects of the liquor traffic in the United States on the general welfare of the country, and in favor of such action by Congress as will prohibit the manufacture and sale thereof in all places where Congress has exclusive legislation. I move their reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON presented a petition of citizens of Kentucky, praying for the repeal of the act of 1875 known as the resumption act; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of T. A. Ward & Co. and 9 others, manufacturers of envelopes, praying such action by Congress as will cause the sale of stamped envelopes to be discontinued by the Government and such legislation in respect to envelopes, wrappers, and cards as will relieve them from injurious competition with their business; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. STEVENSON, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of R. B. Markle, a citizen of Oregon, praying payment of five years' full pay for services rendered by his grandfather, Charles Markle, as a captain in Armand's Legion, during the revolutionary war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the memorial of Margaret Hetzel, praying the passage of a law authorizing the transfer of a certain cause now pending in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, brought by her against the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, to the circuit court of the northern district of New York for adjudication and determination, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 413) establishing the port of Saint Paul, Minnesota, as a port of appraisal, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 453) to authorize the Vancouver Water Company to lay water-pipes through the Fort Vancouver military reservation, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 783) providing for the extension of the time for completing the survey and location of the Portland, Dalles and Salt Lake Railroad, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. RANDOLPH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of R. N. Eddy, praying to be allowed the full pay of second lieutenant from December 31, 1862, to August 28, 1863, deducting pay received by him as first sergeant for that period, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 788) for the relief of Robert N. Eddy.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McCREERY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 789) for the relief of R. P. Sorrels; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Commmittee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 790) granting a pension to Michael Frederick; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 791) for the relief of Ethan Ray Clarke and Samuel Ward Clarke; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY, (Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, in the chair,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 792) granting a pension to Peter Harder, late Company I, Seventh Regiment Michigan Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 793) providing for the restoration to the Army and to the retired list of Major John M. Goodhue; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BOUTWELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 794) to authorize the issue of fractional currency to an amount not exceeding $50,000,000; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. KEY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Lieutenant W. H. Nelson and others be taken from the files of the Senate, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MIAMI LANDS IN KANSAS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill (S. No. 729) authorizing the issue of patents to the purchasers of certain Miami lands in Kansas. It was read and explained on Friday last.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to cause patents in fee-simple to be issued to the purchasers of such Miami Indian lands in Kansas as have been, or may hereafter be, sold under the provisions of the second section of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, upon payment in full of the purchase price therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate proceed with the Calendar of unobjected cases under the rule, subject to morning business.

Mr. McMILLAN. Before that motion is acted upon I ask the Senator from West Virginia to yield to allow me to move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 709, for the relief of Hans C. Peterson.

Mr. DAVIS. There is a motion pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia has moved the consideration of the Calendar of unobjected cases. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Calendar is before the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF IMPEACHMENT RULES.

Mr. HAMLIN. I believe resolutions on the table are first in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are in order.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution which I offered on Friday in relation to amending the rules.

Mr. DAVIS. That is in the nature of morning business, I believe.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is morning business.

Mr. DAVIS. I made my motion subject to morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves the consideration of the resolution introduced by him at a prior session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution submitted by Mr. HAMLIN on April 29, to amend the nineteenth rule by striking out the words "unless the Senate shall direct the doors to be closed while deliberating upon its decisions;" so that, if amended, Rule 19 will read:

XIX. At all times while the Senate is sitting upon the trial of an impeachment the doors of the Senate shall be kept open.

Also to amend Rule 23 by striking out the words "and without debate" in line 2; and also in lines 3 and 4 the words—

Except when the doors shall be closed for deliberation.

So as to make that rule read:

XXIII. All the orders and decisions shall be made and had by yeas and nays, which shall be entered on the record, subject, however, to the operation of Rule 7, and in that case no member shall speak more than once on one question, and for not more than ten minutes on an interlocutory question, and for not more than fifteen minutes on the final question, unless by consent of the Senate, to be had without debate; but a motion to adjourn may be decided without the yeas and nays, unless they be demanded by one-fifth of the members present. The fifteen minutes herein allowed shall be for the whole deliberation on the final question, and not to the final question on each article of impeachment.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, my purpose in offering these amendments to these rules was that we should give to the public the reasons for our conclusions as well as the conclusions to which we do arrive in our private consultations. I think it wise for a variety of reasons. First, I believe there is no rule imposing secrecy upon any Senator in relation to what takes place in our private deliberations. I may wish to say to the public what I say there. I know of no rule that would prohibit my doing so. I may be inquired of as to what other Senators say. I know of no rule that would prohibit my saying what I understood to be the argument of other Senators upon questions there decided. It would be very unpleasant to do so, knowing as I do how very likely we are to mistake the propositions of other Senators. When we state them with all the clearness that we may be able to employ, we may misapprehend them. We may misapprehend the precise application of their argument. I have therefore thought it better that the reasons for our determination should be stated in open Senate.

Besides, I think the whole transaction has a very intimate connection with star-chamber deliberations, out of which many a similar proceeding in other countries has grown. I can see no necessity for deliberating in another room and subjecting ourselves to the inconvenience of leaving our seats. We must either do that or we must request the very large audience in attendance to withdraw. Either is inconvenient and neither can be useful.

It has been said to me by one Senator that this is the first effort he ever knew to make the deliberations of a jury open. Well, sir, I do not think we exercise the functions of a jury. We are a court, and I do not think courts ordinarily retire upon preliminary motions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do courts deliberate publicly, whether they retire or not?

Mr. HAMLIN. They talk among themselves, and that is what we would do here. If there were others to hear us, they might have the opportunity to hear us. I am quite sure there is no word said in the retiring-room that would not be said in this body. If there is, it is the very best reason why we should not go into that retiring-room; but I am sure there is none; and, there being none, it is simply a question of convenience; and that convenience adapts the proceedings, in my judgment, more in accordance with the spirit of the time in which we live. I hope, therefore, the rules will be amended.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I suppose the object of the Senator from Maine is one in which I should most cordially concur, and that is to shorten the time consumed upon minor questions; but I do not believe the proposed change of the rules will effect that object. For instance, when a question comes up it may be stated on the part of one Senator that he votes so and so because he believes that it will have that effect; another Senator may vote for the same thing for a different reason, and he will be compelled to get up and state the reason for his vote. I therefore am of the opinion that a change of the rules will lead to a much larger consumption of time than for the Senate to withdraw for consultation. Although I should be in favor many times, perhaps, of taking the vote without withdrawing, believing that the same result would be reached that would be had after a long consultation, yet I can see no very valid reason for changing the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the resolution of the Senator from Maine before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should regret very much Mr. President, to see that resolution adopted. I have never known or heard of any instance in civilized jurisprudence where the judges—to say nothing of the jurors—deliberate upon the judgment they are to pronounce publicly upon questions that have been argued before them by counsel. They sometimes do it without leaving the bench, just as we might here, if the body was not so large that it is impossible to consult privately as we sit here. I think the administration of justice would run wild very soon indeed if the judges were required, as the Senator proposes to require the judges in this instance, to deliberate in public with a view to come to a correct conclusion respecting every question that should be submitted to them.

One reason and a strong reason for private deliberation, perhaps a leading one, is that human nature is such that whenever a person expresses an opinion publicly it is much more difficult for him to be convinced of his error, if it be an error, than it is when he expresses it privately; and it would be very likely to happen that it would be substantially known, or the newspapers would suppose that it was substantially known, before we got half through this trial, which way it was to go from what should drop from Senators in illustrating a point that was up for consideration and which the Senator speaking himself did not intend as being binding upon him at all, but merely what was running through his mind, which in private consultations, we all know, never do have any such effect as committing a man to anything. I say in such a case the public would suppose and the newspapers would suppose that this Senator and that Senator and all the Senators who had spoken at all had made up their minds upon half or all the topics that may arise in the course of this trial.

It is exactly so in respect to judicial trials. It would be most unseemly for the judges of the Supreme Court, who sit near us, to deliberate in public respecting the points that are submitted to them by counsel. It would break down the court. I was going to say, if I could say it respectfully, that it would become the laughing-stock of this whole country, and so would the courts in our respective States, and I believe the good sense of everybody in all the States and in all civilized countries relies upon it as a matter of settled jurisprudence that the deliberations of a tribunal, after it has heard the points proposed and the arguments upon them, from the very nature of the cause, ought to be private and their judgment public. When their judgment comes to be made, if any one of the tribunal wishes to submit his views or the judgment of the court be written as the views of all, that we all understand. But, as it seems to me, it would be a grievous error in a great many respects for us to adopt the change of the rules proposed by the Senator from Maine.

I should almost feel myself—although very likely I might be alone in it—as if I ought not to be required to take part in a trial where I could not consult with my brother judges (because that is what we are under the Constitution, and nothing else) unless I did it by a public debate here, putting forward my views and reasons and having harangues upon the subject for the edification of the galleries and the amusement of the counsel.

That is the way it strikes me, and with that opinion I must vote against the proposition of my friend from Maine.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, as these rules now stand they are broadly contradictory if they be read in the light of the practice of the Senate. On the last occasion when the Senate sat to try the pending impeachment, an order being offered by a Senator, the managers on the one side and the counsel on the other proceeded to debate it; and yet here stand rules under which the Senate goes away into another chamber and there proposes and debates the most important and substantial orders. Is it consistent that if an order chances to be offered by a Senator in the Senate the counsel on either side have and exercise the right to debate and discuss that order; but that if an order, no matter how important, chances to be offered in the consultation-room the managers and the counsel are necessarily debarred from participation in the discussion or from knowing anything about it? Is that consistent? Can it be properly that a rule so operating should stand?

It may be answered that on Friday it was a mere matter of courtesy which moved the Senate to listen to Mr. Carpenter on the one side and one or two of the managers on the other debating an order offered by a member of the Senate in the Senate. I submit that does not answer my objection or relieve the predicament at all, because we could scarcely say that we would commit to mere chance, to mere accident and occasion the circumstance whether the two sides or either side should be heard upon orders or not, that we would allow it to become a mere matter of casualty whether the most important order is offered in the forum in which the managers and counsel can appear or in seclusion somewhere else where they cannot appear. I submit, therefore, as pertinent to the motion made by the Senator from Maine, either that the rule should be changed or that we should settle that the counsel and the managers have no more province to participate in the discussion of an order moved by a Senator and considered by the Senate if that motion be made here than if it be made on the other side of the wall near which the presiding officer sits. The motion of the Senator from Maine will obviate this, as it seems to me, contradiction and paradox in our rules and in our practice, if the practice should be or is to be as it has been thus far during this proceeding. For that reason among others I should favor the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. I rise to ask the honorable Senator, as we are near the time fixed for the trial, to allow me to call up for passage a joint resolution of the House, which I am informed by an officer it is important to pass this morning. It is evident that this matter cannot be disposed of in the time left to us.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend from Ohio asks me to give way just about the time I was approaching something to say, but I cannot refuse to give way to him. I did wish to make another observation about this rule, and if I do not detain him too long I will do as much as that. I see very little reason for making a mystery of the questions submitted to us, and especially these interlocutory questions so called. It seems to me that the Senate might be trusted, and that every member of the Senate might trust himself to vote on the question whether there shall be a postponement for two weeks or five days, without retiring for two or three hours into privacy; and I think I may venture to say that if the question rises to the largeness of one as to the order of business, namely, whether in discussing a particular plea the affirmative in the argument shall be held by the propounders of that plea or by the respondents to it, even upon such a question as that the Senate might vote without any proceedings save those which would naturally take place here, and that consultations of a confidential and confiding character between Senators, such as have been referred to by my honorable friend from Vermont, might take place informally in conversation as they do take place touching bills upon which we vote, everybody knowing that we learn much from each other beyond the formal debates which go down on the record. I very often turn to my friend from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN]—he is the source of a large part of the information on which I act—and ask him questions in which I do not disturb any other Senator, getting the benefit of his experience and his judgment. And it seems to me that might be done when the Senate, in place of sitting as it ordinarily does to vote upon mere legislative questions, sits in the quasi-judicial character which it assumes when an impeachment comes before it.

SPECIAL-TAX STAMPS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock and thirty-five minutes——

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Chair makes his announcement, as the court probably will not be ready to convene for a few minutes, I ask that a telegram received from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be read in regard to a joint resolution that I should like the Senate to pass at this moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegram will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., May 1, 1876.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Chairman Committee on Finance, United States Senate:

Special-tax year commences to-day, and special-tax stamps cannot be issued for sale on railroads and steamboats without the passage by the Senate of the joint resolution of the House of Representatives No. 99, which passed the House April 25. It is of great importance that the resolution be acted upon definitively to-day.

D. D. PRATT, Commissioner.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the joint resolution be read. It has been referred to the Committee on Finance, and I am authorized to ask for action upon it.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 99) concerning special-tax stamps was read.

Mr. SHERMAN. The whole case can be stated in a word. Heretofore the Department have been in the habit of issuing licenses for the sale of spirits and tobacco on steamboats and railroad trains in certain cases; but it has been held by some of the courts, and perhaps is the better construction of the statute as it stands, that a definite locality should be named where the business is to be conducted, and that a steamboat moving from place to place would not come within the language of the law. The only object of this joint resolution is to relieve the persons who hold these licenses and those who may receive them hereafter from the penalties that they might fall under if this resolution be not passed. There can certainly be no objection to it. I have shown it to the members of the Committee on Finance, who are present, and they all concur in it. I hope therefore it will pass, as from to-day the licenses take effect.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that nothing contained in chapter 3 of title 35 of the Revised Statutes shall prevent the issue, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, of special-tax stamps to persons carrying on the business of retail dealers in liquors, retail dealers in malt liquors, or dealers in tobacco upon passenger railroad trains or upon steamboats or other vessels engaged in the business of carrying passengers.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

The message further announced that the House requested the return of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) to print forty-five hundred copies of the annual report of the United States geological and geographical survey of the Territories.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 522) to define the tax on fermented or malt liquors; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

IMPEACHMENT OF W. W. BELKNAP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of twelve o'clock and thirty-five minutes having arrived, legislative and executive business will be suspended, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the articles of impeachment against William W. Belknap exhibited by the House of Representatives. The Sergeant-at-Arms will make proclamation.

The usual proclamation was made by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The Senate then proceeded to the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap, late Secretary of War.

The Senate sitting for the trial of the impeachment of William W. Belknap having adjourned then resumed its

LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes its legislative business.

MISSISSIPPI ELECTION COMMITTEE.

Mr. BOUTWELL submitted the following order; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the select committee appointed to inquire into alleged frauds in the recent election in the State of Mississippi be authorized to report in print.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate now take up the Japanese indemnity bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to set that aside and all prior orders in order to consider the resolution which I send to the Chair, which I offered on the 20th of April.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say to my friend from New Jersey that, anxious as I am that the bill to which he refers shall be taken up, I am requested by the chairman of the Naval Committee, the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CRAGIN,] to ask that it be laid over until his return.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. When will that be?

Mr. THURMAN. In a day or two. I hope it will be passed over informally, so as not to lose its place.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If it is passed over a day or two it will lose its place, and we shall then be pressed by appropriation bills. This bill has been passed over two or three times to accommodate Senators, and I think it is now entitled to the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. I have only discharged my duty.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not feel that under the circumstances I violate any rules of courtesy toward the Senator from New Hampshire by pressing the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. There will be no appropriation bills on the table of the Senate for a week, at any rate, and probably not for two weeks. The last appropriation bill reaches us in such a condition that it will take a long while to consider in committee.

I stated besides, before the Senate adjourned the last time, that the subject to which I now call the attention of the Senate is one of very great importance indeed to my coast, as I know that it will be by and by to the Senator's own State. I desire to be heard on the question, and also that the Senate take action upon it. I therefore trust the Senator will comply with the suggestion made, and allow this matter to come up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state the question. The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 626) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund; pending which the Senator from California moves to set it and all prior orders aside and to take up the resolution indicated by him.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to make a correction, as the chairman of the Committee on Finance is not here. It was understood that the silver bill should remain the unfinished business, and the Japanese bill was taken up pending that, he desiring to reserve his right at any time to call up the silver bill. I feel it due to the Senator from Ohio to make that statement.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well. I informed the Senator from Ohio that I should move as soon as the court adjourned to-day to take up this business. The Senator is not here, and I do not know that he objects.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Of course I do not make the statement in reference to the position taken by the Senator from California. The Japanese bill stands subject to the call of the silver bill, and I do hope that the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the bill I have named.

Mr. SARGENT. I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Japanese bill is before the Senate as the unfinished business, pending which the Senator from California moves the postponement of this and all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the resolution indicated by him.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. How does the Senator from California get the floor for that purpose?

Mr. SARGENT. I took the floor after the Senator had called up the unfinished business to move to set it aside.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not understand that the Senator from California has the floor for any such purpose.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Senator rise to a point of order that I had not the floor to make this motion?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do. If the Senator from California wishes to address the Senate, as a matter of courtesy I will waive and let him make that address. If he wishes to interpose another measure before the Japanese indemnity bill, I do not waive the floor for that purpose.

Mr. SARGENT. I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of Senators to this important resolution. I desire to speak upon it. I desire it very much in justice to my people and the people of the United States. I also desire that this question shall be considered. I have submitted the motion properly under the rules of order, asking that the question be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the unfinished business to be before the Senate, and then the Chair recognized the Senator from California. If the Senator from New Jersey states that he held the floor to speak upon the unfinished business, then of course the Chair would overrule the Senator from California; but the Chair understood that the Senator from New Jersey did not retain the floor, and hence recognized the Senator from California.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I certainly retained the floor. I am perfectly willing to waive it for the Senator from California if he wishes to address the Senate, and I will address the Senate after he is through; but if he seeks to introduce another measure, I will not yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey states that he still holds the floor on the unfinished business. If so, the Senator from California cannot submit a motion.

Mr. SARGENT. I state, with all deference to my friend from New Jersey, that he takes an ungenerous position in keeping the floor from me. I now say to my friend that I do not speak on this matter merely for buncombe. I want to talk to convince the Senate to do that which the House of Representatives has already done—counsel the President to take action in this matter. It is a great, an important question. If I am excluded from the floor on the ground the Senator takes, I will await my opportunity hereafter; but I cannot say to my people that on a question of this importance I wish to talk simply to be heard. I wish to speak to the question. I was observing the Senator, however, and understood him to yield the floor, and, as is usual in all such cases, I then rose to move to set aside the unfinished business and take up this measure.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I certainly did not propose to yield the floor that the Senator should make a speech for buncombe, for he never does that, but I was perfectly willing to yield that he should submit a speech on this subject; but when he seeks to interpose another measure between that and the one I have in charge, even subject to the charge of being ungenerous, I must discharge my duty.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not say that the Senator is ungenerous in insisting on his business; but I say that to insist that he had the floor and to cut me off after I had been recognized and the Chair himself called up the unfinished business, seems to me somewhat sharp.

Mr. PADDOCK. I understood at the closing moments of the last day's session that the unanimous understanding was that the Senator from California, who then had the floor, would bring up his question as the unfinished business. That was certainly the understanding had by myself.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will yield the floor to the Senator from California and let the Senate decide it, as the Senator thinks that I am sharp.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business and the Chair did it. The unfinished business was before the Senate and the Chair supposed the Senator from New Jersey had yielded the floor, and he then recognized the Senator from California. The Senator from New Jersey states that he did not yield the floor, therefore the Senator from New Jersey has the floor, and he now yields to the Senator from California for the purpose of testing the sense of the Senate. The Senator from California moves the postponement of the present and all prior orders for the purpose of considering the resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. SARGENT on the 20th of April, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate recommends to the President that he cause negotiations to be entered upon with the Chinese government to effect such change in the existing treaty between the United States and China as will lawfully permit the application of restrictions upon the great influx of Chinese subjects to this country—

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to make one inquiry before I vote. I ask the Senator from California whether it is his purpose to press the determination of this resolution to the exclusion of the pending matter, or whether it is only his wish to be heard upon it, and that then time shall be allowed for a determination of the question, but not to the exclusion of the other bill which it is desired to bring up?

Mr. SARGENT. Of course I must leave that to the Senate. I cannot control the action of the Senate in that matter. I think, however, I can present such facts to the Senate as will arrest its attention, and will induce a disposition on the part of the Senate to dispose of this question at a very early time. I do not say that it is absolutely necessary that it shall be continuously considered until it is disposed of; although I should like to have it done. I can only say that I desire to have it taken up, and would like to submit the observations I have to make to the Senate, and invite its serious attention to a very great evil, and then rely on the generosity of the Senate at a very early time to conclude the subject.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Why, Mr. President, I have offered to the Senator that he may take the floor for that purpose.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator has offered me the floor, I understand, simply that I may say what I may have to say, and then the matter be dropped. I do not wish to put myself in the attitude of consenting to dropping the matter. If after I am through the Senate is willing to go on and finish the business, I shall certainly desire it; but I cannot control the action of the Senate in that matter.

Mr. HOWE. I make this suggestion: that for the present, by unanimous consent, the regular order be laid aside and that we hear the Senator from California; that we then take the question upon postponement, if that will suit the Senator from California.

Mr. SARGENT. I am satisfied with that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That will do.

IMMIGRATION OF CHINESE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that by unanimous consent the Senator from California is permitted to submit his remarks on the resolution offered by him. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, the existence of serious discontent in a community imposes upon government the duty of inquiring into the causes which produce it. This duty is not conditional upon the soundness of the reasons for the discontent, because the disorders which may follow in any case must be injurious and may be disastrous to the welfare of the community. The prejudice of race cannot be considered when persons already among us appeal for protection. But when the question is as to the introduction of large numbers of people into the country whose admission is not a matter of right, but of policy, then we ought to consider whether they are a disturbing element, and whether exclusion is not the best and surest prevention against disorders which are difficult to cure when once fastened upon us.

Is the desire of the Chinese to select our country as a place of residence so clear a natural right that, rather than gainsay it, we are willing to submit to the disorders which must grow out of the prejudice known to exist against them? As to this prejudice, is it not based upon some reason? I intend to state some of the objections to their coming which account for the bitter opposition shown in California and elsewhere where they have already appeared in numbers. Are the people of the East quite certain that, if the Chinese were to land in their midst in the proportion of one in every eight of the population of the several States, they would be as easy as to the future as now? They should try and put themselves in our place, and deal with this question as if they, too, had among them this strange and dangerously unassimilative people, increasing in numbers from year to year.

GENERAL EXCLUSION ONLY REMEDY FOR EVILS.

The importation of coolies is now forbidden by statute. But it is found impossible to reach the cases of violation of its provisions, because neither side will disclose the existence of cooly contracts.

The importation of females for immoral purposes is also forbidden by statute. But the law is a dead-letter, because of the impossibility of obtaining proof of its violation.

And yet it is the almost universal conviction of Californians that nine-tenths of the Chinese male immigration is in violation of the former and ninety-nine hundredths of the female immigration is in violation of the latter statute. There can be no remedy but general exclusion; and the policy, justice, and necessity of that supreme measure I propose to discuss.

The resolution before the Senate looks to a modification of certain provisions of the existing treaty between the United States and China. Those provisions are as follows:

ARTICLE V.

The United States of America and the Emperor of China cordially recognize the inherent and inalienable right of man to change his home and allegiance, and also the mutual advantage of free migration and emigration of their citizens and subjects respectively from the one country to the other, for purposes of curiosity, of trade, or as permanent residents. The high contracting parties therefore join in reprobating any other than an entirely voluntary emigration for these purposes. They consequently agree to pass laws making it a penal offense for a citizen of the United States or Chinese subjects to take Chinese subjects either to the United States or to any foreign country, or for a Chinese subject or citizen of the United States to take citizens of the United States to China or to any other foreign country, without their free and voluntary consent, respectively.

ARTICLE VI.

Citizens of the United Sates visiting or residing in China shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions, in respect to travel or residence, as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation; and, reciprocally, Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions, in respect to travel or residence, as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation. But nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of the United States in China, nor upon the subjects of China in the United States.

The question of the restriction of Chinese immigration to the United States concerns at present the people of the Pacific coast more than it does eastern communities. Our people are not always wise or deliberate in their treatment of the subject, and their irritability often leads them to extravagance of speech and exhibitions of heated prejudices which produce an effect at the East the very opposite of what they intend. The unreasonableness, or even violence, of discontented people does not, however, make the cause of their discontent any the less important. The remedy for the evils, if evils they are, of Chinese immigration lies entirely in the hands of the Federal Government. The treaty-making power must first be appealed to to seek such modifications of our treaty with China as will pave the way for legislation under the power of Congress to regulate commerce. It is very desirable, therefore, that all appeals to the Federal Government should be clearly based on reason, humanity, and national interest. The Chinese are to a very limited extent the objects of hatred or prejudice east of the Rocky Mountains, and all arguments against their influx must be free from the familiar cries with which place-hunting demagogues assail the ears of mobs in California. That the presence of Chinese in this country in any considerable numbers is most undesirable is my firm conviction, as I think it is of the great body of those in California who aid in the protection of them in their treaty rights. The question of national duty in the premises comes to us at the threshold of any discussion, and we are obliged to consider it.

RIGHT OF EXPATRIATION.

The right of expatriation is asserted in the clauses of the treaty which I have read; and at the time that treaty was made the best elements of our people were profoundly moved by a strong inclination to humanitarian views. These two considerations are likely to be pressed against any restraints upon Chinese immigration. To these I first address myself; and first as to the right of expatriation. The rule of most European nations was, until within a few years, "Once a subject always a subject." It remained for the present Administration to obtain a surrender of this policy, and now, by treaties made with most of those nations since our civil war, their subjects may abjure allegiance to their native countries, become citizens of the United States, and be forever free from all obligations to their former rulers. This change has been wrought in the interest of political freedom. But let us beware how we give it too broad a meaning. Ours is a republican system governed by the people, native and adopted. But at no time has any invitation been extended to any man of foreign birth to become a citizen unless he espoused the cause of republicanism. There is not and never has been any law in this country which, if properly administered, would admit to citizenship an imperialist or a monarchist. Our laws have always provided for the naturalization of those only who are "attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States," and who are "well-disposed toward the peace and good order" of the country. Our fathers established this Republic for those already here and for those who might come among us preferring the republican over all other systems. It is a violation of law for any court to naturalize any person who is not intelligently attached to our form of government. It was to enable proper candidates for citizenship to release themselves entirely from obligations of duty toward other governments that we have insisted on the right of expatriation. The insertion of a declaration of this right was in my opinion out of place in our treaty with China for the reason that the people of that empire are not entitled to the political privileges its insertion there seemed to imply.

THE CHINESE ARE NOT INCLINED TO REPUBLICANISM.

They are the most ancient and constant of all imperialists. They are not divided on the subject. There is no liberal faction in China aspiring to a government of the people, by the people, for the people. They are not pupils at our feet. They call us "outside barbarians," and commiserate our political condition. They are saturated with the governmental training and habits of fifty centuries. We have no laws under which they can properly be made citizens. The same is true as to natives of other countries who entertain similar views as to government. True we admit to citizenship Europeans without any very rigid cross-examination of the witnesses who testify to their republicanism. But we all know that two witnesses do, in each case of naturalization, testify that the applicant is attached to our political system. It is safe to say that no Senator here could, if sitting on the bench, conscientiously decree that any subject of the Chinese Empire had, upon a fair trial, established his claim to be regarded as a convert to republicanism. So we may, I think, with the utmost fidelity to our established doctrine of the political right of expatriation, if there are adequate causes moving thereto, ask the Chinese government to allow us to recall the declaration of it as to its subjects.

THE HUMANITARIAN VIEW.

Second, as to the humanitarian view. The "enthusiasm of humanity" was a great moving power in this nation in 1868 when the Burlingame treaty was ratified. The national exaltation, growing out of the emancipation of a race and the sorrowful events of the civil war, had its climax in the opening of our gates to all mankind. We took counsel of our generosities. This was grand and noble if it conflicted with no still higher duty. But I have come to believe that we were too emotional in our action. We looked too much to the sentimental side and too little to the possible effect of our action on the future generations whose trustees we were.

When a proclamation of neutrality was issued by President Washington, hostile criticisms were made upon it as being contrary to an existing treaty with France. Alexander Hamilton, in meeting these attacks, took occasion to give some views which I will quote as to the duty of nations in treaties with other powers. In the fourth of the letters signed Pacificus he said:

Instances of conferring benefits from kind and benevolent dispositions of feelings toward the person benefited, without any other interest on the part of the person who renders the service than the pleasure of doing a good action, occur every day among individuals. But among nations they perhaps never occur. It may be affirmed as a general principle that the predominant motive of good offices from one nation to another is the interest or advantage of the nation which performs them.

Indeed, the rule of morality in this respect is not precisely the same between nations as between individuals. The duty of making its own welfare the guide of its actions is much stronger upon the former than upon the latter; in proportion to the greater magnitude and importance of national, compared with individual happiness, and to the greater permanency of the effects of national than of individual conduct. Existing millions, and for the most part future generations, are concerned in the present measures of a Government; while the consequences of the private actions of an individual ordinarily terminate with himself, or are circumscribed within a narrow compass.

Whence it follows that an individual may, on numerous occasions, meritoriously indulge the emotions of generosity and benevolence, not only without an eye to but even at the expense of his own interest. But a government can rarely, if at all, be justifiable in pursuing a similar course; and, if it does so, ought to confine itself within much stricter bounds. Good offices which are indifferent to the interest of a nation performing them, or which are compensated by the existence or expectation of some reasonable equivalent, or which produce an essential good to the nation to which they are rendered, without real detriment to the affairs of the benefactors, prescribe perhaps the limits of national generosity or benevolence.

It is not here meant to recommend a policy absolutely selfish or interested in nations; but to show that a policy regulated by their own interest, as far as justice and good faith permit, is and ought to be their prevailing one.

In a note he adds:

This conclusion derives confirmation from the reflection that under every form of government rulers are only trustees for the happiness and interest of their nation, and cannot consistently with their trust follow the suggestions of kindness or humanity toward others to the prejudice of their constituents.

If the Chinese are not fit subjects for naturalization, and do not come within our political dogma as to the right of expatriation, and if a wise self-interest may be made the basis of our dealings with all nations, it remains to be shown why the immigration of these people at present and probable rates will work harm to this country. The objections to the Chinese are plain, practical, and homely. They can be easily understood and appreciated by those who wish no harm to us, the present principal sufferers, if they will listen; and the evils, whose weight we bear, can be proved beyond dispute if there is any faith in human testimony.

CHINESE POPULATION EXPELS ALL OTHER.

The difficulties surrounding this problem of Chinese population are continually present to the people of the Pacific States and Territories. These are manifold, and some of them I propose to present for the thoughtful consideration of the Senate.

First. Experience has shown that Chinese population expels all other, as inferior currency expels all better kinds. The process has been going on for years notably in San Francisco, as well as in other Pacific communities. A landlord will rent a single house on a street to Chinamen, who at once crowd it to repletion with their compatriots. They take ordinary rooms, say of ten feet in height, put in a false floor half way to the ceiling, and crowd both floors thus made with bunks, and as many human beings as can be pressed into the space sleep therein. The atmosphere becomes fetid, and a sickly smell pervades the neighborhood, which causes the tenants of the houses to the right and left to vacate. These houses cannot be again rented to white persons, the rents fall, and finally the Chinese get possession. This process goes on in each direction until the whole street is abandoned to Chinese. The property has fallen in value, becomes dilapidated and offensive, and the street is as much dedicated to Chinese uses and lost to any other class of residents as if it were a street in Hong-Kong or Canton. Hotels and churches share the same fate as ordinary dwellings and stores. Withal there is unutterable filth and plague-breeding nuisances. In my excursions through the Chinese quarters in San Francisco, under protection and guidance of the police, I have penetrated two stories under ground, into opium and gambling dens, where the stench was almost unendurable, reached by passages where a man cannot walk erect, between walls dripping with the exhalations of neighboring sewers, and where the filthy water at the bottom was only avoided by careful stepping on narrow, broken planks laid down. Here I found swarms of Chinamen, thick as maggots in cheese, smoking opium, cooking or eating rice, or lying in their bunks or squatting, indifferent to the invasion of their horrible domain. No class of population known to the United States can endure contact with these squalid denizens. The white and the negro, the American, Frenchman, and Spaniard all seek residence and places of business elsewhere. Even the lowest classes of society flee away. Brothels and gambling dens, except Chinese, cannot endure the neighborhood. House by house the whole street is absorbed and doomed, and when the street is filled up through its entire length, and will contain no more, the process commences and goes on in another street, and then another, until it seems to be only a question of time whether the Chinese will occupy the entire city of San Francisco. The processes of the past few years clearly point to that result, unless they are arrested. The moving forces that have subjugated six large blocks can subjugate twelve and a hundred. The 30,000 Chinese in San Francisco are but the advance of a growing host, which conquers its way not by strength, or skill, or subtilty, but by unsavory, repellant characteristics, that elbow out of the way all competitors. Under this condition of things a "Chinese quarter" becomes with time a misnomer. It will be a "Chinese half" or "whole" of the city. I desire to speak without exaggeration. I describe the things I have seen—the vast numbers annually arriving in California, their modes of acquiring and occupying room in San Francisco and elsewhere, the constant dashing of a dark wave of immigration making daily more and more inroad on the white portion of the city, covering daily more and more space, and never retiring an inch under any circumstances; and I think my anticipation is warranted that the future will see San Francisco a purely Asiatic city unless some means are devised to avert this calamity.

THE MARCH OF INVASION.

A writer in the San Francisco Call of March 27, 1876, graphically describes the process to which I have alluded. He says:

In the heart of the city, not a stone's throw from the city hall, and dovetailing into the filthy and dilapidated tenements of the Barbary coast, the smoke of burning sandal-wood, punk, and opium, and the greasy smell of roast pig, declare with odoriferous emphasis that we have a Chinese quarter. From Jackson street, whose gutters are used as open-air sewers to carry off slops and swills, to Sacramento street, where the better class of merchants do business; from Kearny street on the east to Stockton on the west, covering an area of six large blocks, the Chinaman is literally master of all he surveys. Month after month, and year after year, he pushes step after step in the march of possession, and where he once puts down his slipper he holds his ground as determinedly as though he had taken root in the soil. Give him a two-years' lease of a building in good condition in the quarter, and, no matter how high a price you fix, he will pay it willingly. He will do more. He will not ask you to make any repairs; the walls will never require whitening or replastering, and the paint on the outside may crack and fall off, yet he will never trouble his landlord. With a national pride, which would be highly commendable were it not that it is so largely adulterated with bitter contempt of the outside barbarian, he will go to the expense of painting the front of the building with white, green, and vermilion, so that outside as well as inside the house will display a Chinese character. He will remodel the interior by making one hundred rooms out of twenty; and so economical of space is he that a room not larger than a small state-room will furnish ample accommodations for half a dozen men. Each squad does its own cooking, rarely with a small stove, generally with a fire in an open dish or brazier. An overdose of smoke now and then does not produce the slightest annoyance, so far as the inmates are concerned. They are smoke-proof and heat-proof. A house which has been so tenanted for six months becomes unfit for any other purpose, and as the months roll by the greasy carbon accumulates on the walls and the floors in thick layers. When the lease has expired the Chinese tenant makes his own terms, and either obtains a release at a small figure, or buys the property. Not many years ago Washington street, from Dupont to Stockton, was one of the main promenades for ladies residing in the northern part of the city who desired to go to Kearny and Montgomery streets to do their shopping. Then it was considered a good business block, and the millinery and hair stores did a flourishing trade. On Sundays the religiously inclined might be seen going to and coming from the First Baptist church, between Dupont and Stockton streets.

BUT THE UNCLEAN TIDE

ebbed and flowed nearer and nearer until it washed its very foundations, and refined ladies could no longer submit to be jostled at the church-door by the Mongolian chiffonier or highbinder, or allow the pure minds of their little children to be contaminated by the surrounding atmosphere of degradation and moral filth. The necessity for changing the site of the church became so apparent that a few months ago the property was sold to the Chinese, who made extensive alterations upon it, and it is now used as a manufactory for slippers, cigars, shirts, and clothing, besides several other purposes best known to the Chinese, among which may be mentioned tan games and worse uses. This change had not taken place very long before the walls of the edifice, which had so often echoed back the sweet sounds of prayer and the deep tones of the organ, rang with the affrighted shrieks of a Chinaman who was slashed with knives by his countrymen until his life flowed from his wounds with his blood. The

of the Mongolians are multiplying fast in this direction, and already they begin to stare in the face of the city hall, which, if the signs of the times be fulfilled, must ere long resound to the horrid screech of the Chinese fiddle. The mayor of the city from where he stands in front of his office can see not one hundred yards away the green and gold balconies of the joss-house on Clay street opposite the plaza, where two decades ago the eloquent Colonel Baker expressed in glowing language the grief of the State over the mortal remains of Senator Broderick. And it was not many weeks back that a very interesting debate in the supervisor's chamber was rendered almost inaudible by the deafening reports of fire-crackers and the beating of gongs a block away, in honor of the Chinese new year. The march of invasion, from all indications, will not stop at Kearny street on the east or at Sacramento street on the south. Should the tide of immigration continue to pour in upon us as it is doing at present, it may be predicted within a year or two how soon Merchant street, Montgomery block, Commercial street, and portions of Pine and California streets will come into the possession of our Asiatic population; for property-owners will lease or sell when they are offered good prices, and the shrewd and indefatigable Chinese speculator will not hesitate for a mere question of present value when so much profit looms up in the near future. Indeed, such a prediction would not be regarded as presumptuous when the changes that have taken place within the last six years in what were once prosperous business localities are taken into consideration. The question so often asked as to the cause of the

DECREASE IN VALUE OF PROPERTY

in a certain portion of the city might be truthfully answered by referring to the Chinese quarter, which is fast extending as a black desert, cutting off in a great measure desirable communication between North Beach and the eastern and southern business centers.

The streets mentioned by this writer are among the most important in the city. California street is our Wall street. Montgomery Block may be properly likened to the Astor House.

DANGER OF FIRE.

The danger of fire in these crowded quarters is very great, and the carelessness of the Chinese has occasioned many and destructive conflagrations in our cities. The loss of property in the State from this cause has been incalculable. I desire to fortify all the positions I take on this subject of the Chinese by evidence, for I know the Senate and country will not be satisfied with generalities. Unfortunately the material is but too abundant. I have here a report of the board of fire wardens of San Francisco, filed with the board of supervisors, April 20, 1876, and the details are shocking of the modes in which the fire-fiend is tempted in a city where conflagrations are most disastrous owing to the prevalent high winds and long periods when no rain falls and wood becomes like tinder.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 20, 1876.

GENTLEMEN: In accordance with resolution No. 8614 passed by your honorable board April 10, 1876, the undersigned, fire wardens, have made an examination of that portion of the city occupied chiefly by Chinese. We visited the old Mansion House, old California Hotel, old Saint Francis Hotel, Portsmouth House, Callaghan's, Kane's, and other buildings, and find them all alike as to carelessness in the use of fire. In each of the buildings visited we found on each floor a rude open range, built on pieces of boards a few inches from the floors, where cooking is done; also, scattered throughout the building and placed on the bare floors, and sometimes on the window sills, a number of old five-gallon oil cans, with pieces of old iron hoops laid across the top, in which fires are made and cooking is done. In many places the floors had been burned from this cause. In one building we counted eleven of these cans on the floor in the space of thirteen feet. We also found upon the roofs of many buildings frame structures used for kitchens and poultry coops, also fences and bulkheads built across the openings in the chimneys. Another very dangerous practice is the building of large platforms over the roofs of houses, some being used as wood-yards and others for the purpose of hanging out clothes.

The Chinese are in the habit of building awnings and balconies with a roof in the front and rear of their buildings, and in a short time they are inclosed and turned into kitchens or sleeping-apartments. On one narrow alley (Saint Louis) we found from the upper stories of buildings on each side those inclosed balconies which come within two feet of meeting. It is next to impossible to detect the violators of these ordinances, for these people will not inform on each other, and the work is generally done at night and on Sundays.

In Chinese wash-houses it is the universal habit to build a brick furnace on the floors, leaving the fronts open; they put in long sticks of wood, burning them off by degrees, one end being in the fire and the other lying on the floor.

We would respectfully recommend that some ordinance be passed prohibiting the erection of those platforms on the roofs of buildings all over the city, and also an ordinance compelling the owner or persons having control of any building in which fire is used to provide some safe way of building fires, both for heating and cooking, either by placing in such buildings fire-places, stoves, or secure ranges, of sufficient capacity to accommodate all the inmates.

Respectfully,

JOHN L. DURKEE,
GEORGE W. CORBELL,
JAMES RILEY,
Fire Wardens.

Hon BOARD OF SUPERVISORS.

DANGER OF PESTILENCE.

Dickens's genius described very graphically a scene of squalor in Tom All-alone's alley in London. Even his pen would fail to do justice to the Chinese alleys in San Francisco, where these people are packed into rooms and improvised hovels reeking with the slime of nastiness, breathing a tainted atmosphere, their clothing infected with unwholesome odors and the germs of disease and death. It is almost a miracle that a pestilence has not ere this raged in the city. Eastern accounts say that the "black death" has started on its travels from Asia to Europe. If it ever strikes San Francisco it will find all the conditions among the Chinese that can add to its horrors and stimulate its voracity.

A legislative commission is now sitting in San Francisco taking testimony on this general subject, and the facts it is collecting are truly terrible. I shall cite some of them before I conclude. On the question of the numbers of Chinese, Rev. Otis Gibson, for ten years a missionary in China and the past ten a preacher to the Chinese in San Francisco, stated that he had attempted enumeration, and by the best information he could get the number on the coast is 150,000, in California 60,000, in San Francisco 30,000; and among all this great number he says there are not a hundred families. His testimony seems to have been given in a friendly spirit to the Chinese; but he said, "Should the influx increase in the same ratio for the next ten years as the last ten, they would seriously injure the State." I add that in fifty years they will, in the same ratio, possess the State. There is not a town in California or Nevada that has not its street or streets of Chinese, its peculiar population, continually increasing.

THE EAST TO BE INVADED.

But the flood is not confined to the Pacific States or the Territories. The Chinese follow lines of travel everywhere, and have reached the Atlantic cities in less numbers, but yet numerous enough to excite local comment and alarm. The New York Herald recently said:

Even here in New York there is a joss-house, and Donovan's alley has long been the wonder of the curious and the grief of the Christian missionary on account of its immoralities and degrading exhibitions. Some way must be found to subject this Chinese question to control, or the leprosy which comes into the country with every ship from China will taint and corrupt not alone the body-politic, but the sanctities of society and the sacredness of religion.

Only a few trickling streams have leaked out from the Pacific, giving, however, to the East a taste of the quality of the flood. But as the reservoir there fills higher and higher these streams will swell, and Donovan's alley in New York will not be singular in its immoralities and degrading exhibitions. It is well that the people and press of the East should awake to the real merits of this Chinese question, and begin to understand the threatening evils of Chinese immigration. The Herald, in the article from which I have quoted, says:

The Chinese question in this country, and especially on the Pacific slope, is one which must soon become of absorbing interest. It is not merely the problem of cheap labor, though that in itself is one of the utmost importance, but a question affecting the highest interests of society and civilization. We might not view with great alarm the undermining of American industries by Chinese monopoly if this were all there was any occasion to fear, but the very process by which they gain their ends is destructive of our social life. Their wants are few, and they live in bunks instead of houses. They work cheap until they drive off all competition, and then they raise the prices. The first business upon which they precipitated themselves in California was the manufacture of cigars, and now they monopolize it. They are seizing upon the manufacture of shoes in the same way, and as their numbers increase they are extending their enterprises and industries in every direction. But what is worse, they are disseminating also their debasing practices and immoralities. In China there is much of the lowest as well as the highest civilization to be found in any country. It is not the intelligence and culture of the Celestial Kingdom which come to America, for these seldom emigrate, and China is no exception to the rule. The lower classes only come here, and they bring with them their base arts and debasing practices, and set them up side by side with our civilization.

INJURY TO WHITE LABOR.

Second. Another evil of Chinese emigration is its injury to white labor. The merit is claimed for the Chinese that they are industrious, and this is true of a considerable class of them, although as many are lazy, opium-stupefied drones. But their very industries are a source of injury to the community, in that they undersell other labor and work for prices on which no white man can support a family. Our growing young men and women find scant employment and in few avocations, because cheap Chinese labor is taken in preference by employers. If the community is built up by such industry, it is not as a New England or western village is built up. It is Foo Chow, and not Cedar Rapids; it is Donovan alley, and not Broadway; it is the hovel, and not the home; the joss-house, and not the church; it is not republican; it is not civilization. As I had once occasion to say elsewhere, a slower growth of a community, with the elements in it only of Christian civilization, seems to me far preferable to rapid development by an alien heathen population. Five stalwart German or Scandinavian emigrants with their families would be better for the real interests of New York than the whole Chinese population of Donovan alley. If the object of society is merely to accumulate wealth in the hands of an upper class and have the laborer a mud-sill—if American civilization and republican institutions could coexist with such a theory and practice—then it might be well to crowd every avenue of labor with Asiatics and rejoice in the cultivation of the last inch of soil, the working of the deepest mine, the guidance of every wheel of industry by the adroit Chinese to the exclusion of white labor. But while white laborers need employment, as they always will; while their families must live and their children be educated; while Europe offers to us every year hundreds of thousands of emigrants of cognate languages, religion, literature, civilization, and hopes, it may be well to husband our undeveloped resources for the profitable employment of the future rather than exhaust them beyond the needs of the present. The crowded Atlantic States have sent out their enterprising young men and women to the West in great numbers, while Europe has furnished its best populations to create new homes there. The national development during the past ten years has been enormous. A population easily resolving itself into the mass of American society, readily acquiring our language, honoring our institutions, worshiping our God, unexcelled in industry and skill, spreads like a flood over the western prairies, fertilizing like the swellings of the sacred river. Cities have sprung up all over the land, tied together in every direction by lines of busy railways. There has been haste of development, it is true. The stumps of the original forest trees are seen in the streets; the prairie mud is innocent of MacAdam. But there is life and labor and sure advancement and contentment; there is the life and beauty of our political and Christian civilization; the school-house and the church nestle among the cottages or rise in grander proportions among the cities. Is not this development, which is natural in its order and without limit of duration or capacity so long as this land is freer than Europe and has that which Europe measurably lacks, undeveloped resources open to the enterprise of the laborer and lands untilled which he is asked to accept as a home—is not such sure and essentially American development better than that which could possibly be obtained by transporting the Chinese on any terms to occupy those fields and exclude their prospective possessors? Take Iowa, built up by the means which I have indicated. Would it not be undesirable to have its population retrograde to the level of Chinese, however industrious the latter may be? For the purpose of the comparison I need not fill up the picture. Much besides industry is needed to make a desirable community in this land, and Iowa has the industry and development without the Chinese. But there is no practical difference in the result between the recession of an American community—its falling back to the level of Chinese—and the displacing or anticipation of such a community by Chinese. In a few words, the growth of American and the influx of European population is developing our resources healthily and rapidly; and it is better for us and our posterity that these causes which have made us a great nation should have unimpeded sway.

EXPERIMENT IN MASSACHUSETTS.

But these results are necessarily impeded by any cause that expels white labor or reduces it to servile competition or conditions. Capital is selfish and as a rule will employ the cheapest labor. Were it not selfish, competition compels it to do so. He who produces the most cheaply commands the market. In San Francisco the laborer cannot support his family for less than two dollars or two and a half per day. The Chinaman will work for one, and monopolizes the market. The white laborer must emigrate or starve. The Chinaman is a constant threat to the unskilled laborer, and is gradually becoming a threat even to the skilled laborer. He is very imitative, and soon acquires sufficient art to compete with the best workmen and to supplant them. The operation of these principles has been seen on a limited scale in Massachusetts. The only protest thus far devised by labor against supposed wrongs by capital—perhaps not a wise one—is the "strike," where the employés combine and refuse to work except on conditions proposed by themselves. Such a strike occurred at North Adams, upon which a large manufacturer imported enough Chinamen to carry on his establishment, refused thereafter and still refuses to employ white men, and the latter were compelled to go elsewhere for work. The effect of this movement was to overawe the labor leagues. What had been done in one case could be done in many, until there would be no employment for white men in Massachusetts. The workmen who were expelled undoubtedly had families and separate establishments; their children grew up around them, and these were of some use to society besides contributing by their labor to enrich an employer. But by the best information I can get their successors live in crowded quarters à la chinoise, without families, and without assimilation with the people of the place. They are a success so far that they have made a single employer very rich, while two hundred men have been exiled from home and means of support.

That which has been seen at North Adams on a small scale, and under the least repulsive conditions, goes on in California upon a large and increasing scale, and with surroundings of squalor and misery. But the presence of the Chinese in numbers is a menace to white labor everywhere—a continual threat of ruinous competition, of impending disaster. That it has not been tried on a larger scale by the employers of Massachusetts thus far is owing to the facts that it takes capital to bring Chinamen there, and the example has partially overawed white labor and made it more tractable. But what can be done is shown; and when Chinamen become abundant in Massachusetts, as they will in time, Massachusetts employers will use them as they do in California to the exclusion of whites, and the latter will be generally expelled.

An address adopted by a meeting of 25,000 people at San Francisco on the 5th of April of this year contains a condensed statement of the effects of Chinese labor competing with the necessarily more costly labor of white men:

The committee see in this Chinese immigration an evil of great present magnitude. It has driven thousands of our laborers from their employment, and has driven many to want and idleness and some to poverty and crime. It has taken labor from women—such work as gave them honest and virtuous independence, and has driven too many of them to resort to practices of shame and guilt.

It deprives our boys of the opportunity of employment, and contributes to close against them the avenues of trades and to manufacturing and mechanical employment.

The Chinese are an injury to our property-owners. If the 75,000 Chinese were not in our city their places would be filled by 75,000 laboring white men and women owning homesteads, renting houses, raising families, and supporting dependents.

CHINESE AND PACIFIC RAILROADS.

It has been objected that the Chinese were useful in building the Pacific Railroad. They did build the Central Pacific; but the Union Pacific, much longer, was built as quickly and well by white men, and the same labor was within reach of the builders of the Central Pacific. It was a mean policy that gave the bounty of the Government to cooly owners, when free white men would have gladly earned a share of it.

EFFECTS ON CAPITAL.

But the disastrous effects are not alone with labor. Cadmus sowed the dragon's teeth and they sprang up armed men and destroyed him. Manufacturers in California have resorted to Chinese labor to make cheaper production, and find their business ruined by the competing Chinamen whom they have taught. This is very clearly shown in an interview published in one of the San Francisco papers with a firm of shoe dealers recently held, and it tells the story so concisely, and, as every one in San Francisco knows, so truthfully, that I will read it:

S. S. Wolf & Co., on Sansome street, were then interviewed. The factory is on the ground floor, and about forty Chinamen are hammering away at the lasts.

REPORTER. Mr. Wolf, you seem to have no hesitancy in letting your Chinese shoemakers be seen.

Mr. WOLF. No, sir. Some of them in the city send their Chinamen home by the back way, while the few white men are paraded out the front door. We have to employ Chinamen, much as we dislike them. If we were to discharge them and employ white men we would have to mark up our goods, and if a man should display a pair of shoes made by white men and mark them $3.50 a pair and his next neighbor should display a pair of shoes made over on Dupont street and mark them $3, there is not one person out of a hundred but would take the Chinese shoes.

REPORTER. Do most of the shoe-factories employ Chinamen?

Mr. WOLF. Every one of them, sir; every one of them. Don't care what they advertise, all of them who make shoes employ Chinamen. Those who pretend to manufacture, and do not, buy their stock direct from the hundreds of Chinese co-operative factories, and lots of them actually have the cheek to advertise these goods as made by their own white shoemakers.

REPORTER. Have the Chinamen engaged in boot and shoe making on their own hook to any extent?

Mr. WOLF. There are over a hundred places where they manufacture; all along Clay, Commercial, Dupont, and Sansome, their little stalls can be seen. They are like monkeys, they can imitate anything. They can make shoes cheaper than I can. They have their drummers out over the country like white men, and if a man offers the cash they will sell of labor and material rather than miss a sale. If I were to discharge these forty men to-morrow they would put in ten or twelve dollars apiece and rent a cellar somewhere, and by Monday they would have established a ruinous competition. The small shoe-stores buy of them because they can make a shoe so exactly resembling mine that customers cannot tell the difference, and at 10 to 20 per cent. lower than I can possibly make them with my high rents.

REPORTER. Do you mean to say that all shoe-stores buy their goods?

Mr. WOLF. Yes, every one of them, big and little. In a certain line of goods they have to or else they cannot sell them. My business is gradually running down. Two years ago I employed one hundred and fifty Chinamen; now I only have forty.

REPORTER. Then you men who initiated Chinamen into the mysteries of shoemaking have succeeded in cutting your own throats?

Mr. WOLF. Yes, that's just what we've done, and its getting worse and worse. If one of our men gets mad and leaves we know that he can get all the leather he wants, and in a few days will commence to put his own shoes on the market, and if the stores don't buy them they are put into the auction-room. Country merchants come here and say they would like to trade with our house, but they can get the same goods direct from the Chinese factories 10 or 20 per cent. cheaper, and away go our best customers to the Chinamen. The Chinamen peddle their goods around the city in baskets and retail them lower sometimes than our wholesale rates.

THE CHINESE PROSPERING.

REPORTER. Is their business on the increase?

Mr. WOLF. I should say so. Every China shop has one or two apprentices, and as fast as one of our men gets a chance and saves up a little money, he quits and goes off for himself, and we have to take in another apprentice.

The reporter continues:

A large number of other shops and stores were visited and the same story was told. Many of them denied employing Chinamen, but at the same time all the shelves showed that if they did not employ Chinamen directly they do worse by buying their goods direct from the Chinese co-operative companies, of which there are now over a hundred in the city. It is a pitiable state of affairs, and none of the manufacturers have any clear view as to the way out of the difficulty. They seem to think that if the manufacturers would band together and negotiate with the leather-dealers, so as to prevent them from selling stock to Chinaman, and then discharge all of them from the shops, something could be done. Verily, in this case the "biter is bitten." And what is true in regard to the manufacture of boots and shoes is likewise true with reference to clothing, and especially coarse clothing, in the manufacture of which Chinamen are engaging very extensively.

This is a simple detail of part of the rooting out of American industries by Chinese immigration. Is it not obvious that if this thing goes on unchecked Americans will by and by be compelled to seek some other land to gain a subsistence. In San Francisco white workmen walk about the streets unable to get work because Chinamen have taken their places for a third of the pay which will support a white family. The retribution soon comes when the imitative Chinamen use the knowledge so gained to drive the employer out of the trade and leave him bankrupt. The whole advantage gained by any one accrues to the Chinese slave-master who utilizes his cooly labor.

NOT VOLUNTARY EMIGRATION.

Third. The emigration of Chinese is not like that of Europeans who seek our shores voluntarily to become citizens. All the evidence tends to prove that the mass of the Chinese who come here are coolies, bound for service for terms of years at exorbitant rates. They are quasi slaves. Although their contracts for service are void by our laws they are valid by the superstitions of the coolies, and the horrible Chinese hell impends with darkening fate over the forlorn wretch who dares be unfaithful. Again, the cooly has left in pledge his most loved ones in China, and they will be sold to perpetual bondage if he breaks his engagement. If Senators will turn to the correspondence of Mr. Bailey, consul at Hong-Kong, with the State Department, under date of April 25, 1871, they will find a conscientious, careful statement concerning this Chinese emigration, by an intelligent observer, from which I have extracted what I will read to the Senate:

The subject of Chinese emigration from this port to the United States has claimed my careful thought and patient investigation for the last four months, with a view to get at the facts, and to understand it in its surroundings and bearings. The whole subject is an anomaly. Rules that will do elsewhere in the world, when applied in considering questions of immigration, have no application to Chinese immigration to the United States. Immigrants to America from other parts of the world go of their own volition, free and voluntary. Emigration from China to all parts of the world is an organized business or trade, in which men of large capital and hongs of great wealth engage as a regular traffic, by which men are bought and sold for so much per head, precisely as a piece of merchandise is handled, at its market value. The poor laborer of Europe applies his own scanty means to get to the land of promise, or is assisted by his friends, charitable societies, or benevolent institutions to reach a place where he hopes to have his toil properly requited, where his labor will inure to his own benefit. The cooly of China is bought by the rich trader to serve his purchaser at low wages for a series of years in a foreign country, under contract for the faithful performance of which in many instances he gives a mortgage on his wife and children, with a stipulation that at the end of his term of service he is to be brought back to China by his purchaser. This contract is sold by the dealer through his agents in the United States and elsewhere at a large advance, and is a source of great profit to the capitalists who have the means to buy and sell large numbers of men. This contract in the United States is no doubt null and void, but nevertheless the cooly will comply strictly with all its terms, a copy of which in Chinese characters is always in his possession, and this he will do because his purchaser holds his household lares in the land to which he always hopes and expects to return in pledge for the faithful performance of his bonds. The central idea of a Chinaman's religion, if he has any religion at all, is that of the worship of the tombs of his ancestors. The superstitions of Fung-Shuay dominate him wherever he may be in the world. The subtile mysticisms of China, so strangely governing all its people in their social, political, and quasi religious life, are as a hook in his nose, by which his purchaser controls him at all times and in all places; and thus this relation of master and quasi slave, no matter how many miles apart, is welded by the mystical links of religious superstitions, family ties, and rights of ancestral tombs, which control and regulate the reciprocal duties of trader and cooly in the home-land.

The means of obtaining coolies are as various as the ingenuity of man can devise, and are as corrupt as the incentive to large gains can stimulate and invent. Men and boys are decoyed by all sorts of tricks, opiates, and illusory promises into the haunts of the traders. Once in the clutches of these men-dealers, by a system of treachery and terrorism connived at by the local Chinese authorities, whose chief business in life is to "squeeze" the people, the stupefied cooly is overawed into making a contract under such Chinese influences and surroundings as to give it a sacredness of character nowhere else known in the world. From that moment he is the mere tool of the rich dealer wherever he may go. It is difficult for persons accustomed to western civilization to understand the depth and extent of this relationship; but Chinese civilization is unique, perhaps opaque, and cannot be measured by that of any other.

HORRORS OF COOLY TRAFFIC.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, writing from Canton, China, (published June 7, 1870,) thus describes the modes by which this emigration to the United States is promoted:

The cooly (all laborers are called coolies) goes to the rulers or elders of his town or village and, with the consent of those interested, gives security on the persons of his family for such a sum as will secure his passage to the United States. The elders go to the mandarin and give him their united bond for the amount. The mandarin in turn gives his note to the ticket-brokers, who furnish the cooly with his ticket. The bond, by which all the persons are bound, given to secure the cooly's note held by the brokers, stipulates that in case the cooly fails to pay the sum charged for his ticket, including the fees of brokers, mandarin, and elders, within the specified time, then the indorsers will pay the same without question. The sum charged to the cooly for the ticket, which costs the brokers but $40, is often as high as three or four hundred dollars. In five instances out of ten he will fail to meet his obligation. If he fails to pay, the brokers here demand payment of the mandarin at once. The mandarin pays the note, charging a heavy fee for so doing. The elders pay the mandarin, charge another fee, and demand the amount from the cooly's family. They being unable to pay, are sold off one after another, beginning with the youngest girl, until enough is realized to cancel the debt. In this way whole families are often reduced to slavery to pay for a forty-dollar ticket.

Two families were sold here in Canton last week to satisfy such a debt. One of the notes was for $350. Two unmarried girls, each thirteen years old, were purchased by an Italian profligate at $75 apiece. One boy was sold for $50. Six persons in all were sold before the requisite amount was raised. Girls, however, often bring higher prices, and sometimes the sale of a handsome daughter will be sufficient. It is not unfrequent for different members of a family to urge that they may be sold instead of some loved one that is offered. The heads of families sell themselves into servitude to save their families. Chinese, besides the sacred family ties common to all mankind, have a strong religious desire that their children should be free to pay devotion to their memories after they are dead. When they sell a child they believe that it is sold body and soul, and that it can never again be a relative of theirs, either in this world or the next; and unless they leave children to pay them certain kinds of devotion after death their souls will "wander forever, naked, cold, and hungry, through an eternal waste of darkness and terror." It has sometimes happened that after sale of a family the cooly returning finds a portion of the claim still unsatisfied, and he himself is sold for it.

In Mr. Bailey's dispatch, No. 63, to the State Department, under date of September 12, 1871, he says:

SIR: Referring to my dispatches Nos. 33 and 35, I have the honor to inclose an official communication from the colonial secretary of this colony, with accompanying documents, concerning the shipment of coolies hence to the United States by Mr. George E. Payne. A large proportion of the coolies referred to in the registrar-general's letter had undoubtedly been inveigled and some kidnaped by the cooly-broker Lai-on, who is, as I learn, a notorious Macao dealer in human flesh. Fortunately the coolies all escaped from the vessel, (the Pacific Mail steamer China,) and are now at liberty.

As I have frequently stated before, I repeat now that the entire traffic is top-full of fraud, corruption, and the most brutal inhumanity.

Need I cite more proof that this Chinese immigration is peopling America with slaves, not freemen; that our tolerance of it is encouraging the darkest crimes against humanity, rather than opening our portals to the distressed of the earth? It is no more a voluntary and healthful immigration than that of the African slave trade; and the barbarities of the latter are exceeded by those of the Chinese emigrant-ship. Chief Justice Smale, of Hong-Kong, in May, 1871, in a decision in the case of Kwok-a-Sing, whose rendition was claimed by the Chinese government on the ground that he was guilty of murder for assisting in the massacre of the captain and crew of the Pénélope Nouvelle, a cooly-ship, refused the rendition on the ground that the defendant was a slave, and had a natural right to regain his liberty even by taking the lives of those who held him in custody. The decision gives a vivid and harrowing picture of the cooly traffic. The learned judge states that he had endeavored to make a list of cooly-ships burned or sunk with all on board, and he finds that in a very short time some seven ships, with about three thousand coolies, had been thus destroyed. Mr. Bailey says in his dispatch relating to the burning of the cooly-ship Dolores Ugarte on the 6th of May, 1871:

Truly Providence seems to have set this ship apart to shock the nations with a new horror that shall startle them to their duty in suppressing this infamous slave-trade. On Saturday the 6th the ship was discovered to be on fire in the hold where the coolies were kept. The captain states that, "with a view to save his own and his crews' lives, he battened down the hatches on the passengers and took to the boats." The ship was burned to the water's edge, and with it over six hundred victims of this atrocious traffic in men.

I will remark here, in passing, that the evidence in the case further shows that this frequent burning of ships is the act of the coolies themselves, a supreme act of despair, to destroy themselves and their custodians rather than to be kept in their bondage. Instances are frequent of Chinamen jumping overboard and drowning themselves at sea to escape this slavery; of their endeavoring to free themselves by mutiny and massacre; of setting fire to the ships, that all may perish, to avoid the fate of slavery. The testimony of the officer that they fired volleys over the heads of the Chinese on board the ship Crocus, that has just arrived at San Francisco, to "show them we were armed," speaks volumes and shows this immigration is just what it was in 1871, when Mr. Bailey described it. Why fire volleys over the heads of willing immigrants? It would not be done. They were despairing slaves, watching to free themselves from an intolerable yoke. All the horrors of the middle passage attend the traffic. The results of this traffic are what the people of the Pacific deprecate and deplore. We ask for relief from a condition of things degrading to our free labor while peopling the nation with slaves. Statesmen must see these things, must heed them, or the people will remove them and send men here who will.

TRAFFIC IN FEMALES FOR PROSTITUTION.

I ask your attention to the peculiarities of the traffic in Chinese females. The women are bought, young girls, of their parents or owners in China and sent thence to San Francisco under contracts for continuous prostitution, made nominally with themselves. Really they are the passive victims. These girls are not prostitutes when purchased for these purposes, and in most instances are virgins when they are shipped or landed at the end of their voyage. The merchandise is intended to be delivered to the purchasers in good condition; but once delivered over to their task-masters they are subjected to all the hopeless miseries of the meanest prostitution.

I have here a translation of a contract for prostitution, given in evidence before the legislative commission now sitting in San Francisco. It reads as follows:

An agreement to assist the woman Ah Ho, because coming from China to San Francisco she became indebted to her mistress for passage. Ah Ho herself asks Mr. Yee Kwan to advance for her $630, for which Ah Ho distinctly agrees to give her body to Mr. Yee for service as a prostitute for a term of four years. There shall be no interest on the money. Ah Ho shall receive no wages. At the expiration of four years Ah Ho shall be her own master. Mr. Yee Kwan shall not hinder or trouble her. If Ah Ho runs away before her time is out, her mistress shall find her and return her, and whatever expense is incurred in finding and returning her Ah Ho shall pay. On this day of agreement Ah Ho, with her own hands, has received from Mr. Yee Kwan $630. If Ah Ho shall be sick at any time for more than ten days, she shall make up by an extra month of service for every ten days' sickness. Now this agreement has proof—this paper received by Ah Ho is witness.

TUNG CHEE.

Twelfthyear, Ninthmonth, and fourteenth day, (about middle October, 1873.)

The Chinese women when landed by the hundred from the ships are put in barracoons, as in the old slave times, and there kept until distributed to their masters. After distribution they are kept at their degrading work by fear, ignorance, and superstition. They believe the contracts good and binding, and fear the consequences of an attempt at escape. An ordinance was passed by the city of San Francisco making it unlawful to reduce persons to servitude, and the form of contract was at once changed to this:

An agreement to assist a young girl named Loi Yau. Because she became indebted to her mistress for passage, food, &c., and has nothing to pay, she makes her body over to the woman, Sep Sam, to serve as a prostitute to make out the sum of $503. The money shall draw no interest, and Loi Yau shall serve four and one-half years. On this day of agreement Loi Yau receives the sum of $503 in her own hands. When the time is out Loi Yau may be her own master, and no man shall trouble her. If she runs away before the time is out, and any expense is incurred in catching her, then Loi Yau must pay the expense. If she is sick fifteen days or more she shall make up one month for every fifteen days. If Sep Sam shall go back to China, then Loi Yau shall serve another party till her time is out. If in such service she should be sick one hundred days or more, and cannot be cured, she may return to Sep Sam's place. For a proof of this agreement, this paper.

LOI YAU.

Dated 2d, sixth month of the present year.

The police testified before the commission referred to that it is notorious to them that women are bought and sold. They obtained several convictions under the ordinance named; but effective prosecution is prevented in most cases by the ignorance or fear of the victim and the mendacity of the witnesses. When a Chinese woman escapes from her servitude she is brought back by persuasion or force. Sometimes process of the courts is used to effect a return of the woman. These are arrested on charges of petty larceny, &c., and worried into returning to their masters. Kidnaping is frequently resorted to by the owners in case of escape or marriage. Rev. Mr. Gibson testified before the commission:

The women are slaves. They are bought or stolen and brought here as slaves. They contract ostensibly to repay alleged borrowed money to prostitute their bodies for four or five years, the proceeds to go to the master. At the end of that time no change occurs, but women are retained for another period for more debt, but in reality being owned by certain men. Where a woman is sold and found to be pregnant within a month, or has leprosy, or epilepsy, she is returned and the purchase-money is refunded.

It is with difficulty that I read this testimony. I cannot read it all, and I have endeavored to select that which was most fit for the ear of the Senate and yet give some idea of the horrors of this Chinese traffic. Rev. Mr. Gibson goes on to testify further:

This business is under the general management of certain companies, and their contracts are deemed good. Among that class of Chinese there are no morals at all. The women are in a slavery harder and more miserable than existed among the white races. As long as they are fit to earn any money they are kept; but as soon as they give out they are turned out to die. The company collects a tax of $40 for every prostitute imported, and afterward collect two bits a week.

Charles Wolcott Brooks, well known to many Senators for his connection with the Japanese mission, testified that the Chinese in this country are governed by six companies, each with its code of laws antagonistic to and superior in the estimation of Chinese to State laws; that the influx of Chinese is only limited by the amount of our marine transportation: that the lowest classes of Chinese come, "the scum of China," and that "the women are more dangerous than the men, being afflicted with syphilitic diseases, which they communicate to the boys of the land."

CORRUPTORS OF YOUTH.

Dr. N. H. Toland, an eminent physician of San Francisco, was called and testified before the commission as follows:

I have known boys eight or ten years old to contract a loathsome disease in the Chinese quarter. These cases are not uncommon. In consequence of neglect, these cases are the worst that we have to deal with. I am satisfied that the disease is hereditary and is transmitted. The effect of Chinese remaining in this country will fill our hospitals with invalids. The presence of Chinamen here does not tend to the advancement of Christian civilization. In fact it has a contrary effect. The maintenance of the population in our midst is a crime against civilization. I treat a half dozen boys every day.

David C. Woods was sworn and testified:

I have resided in California twenty-five years; am at the present time superintendent of the industrial school, and have been for two years and three months. I think the presence of a large number of Chinese in our midst has a very bad effect upon our boys. A great portion of the boys who come to the industrial school come there suffering with venereal diseases, fifty at least having come there so suffering since my term began. They range from thirteen years upward, and we have from two to four sick all the time. About two hundred and fifty or three hundred boys have been sent to the institution during the last two years, and a large portion of those old enough to cohabit with women are diseased. In answer to my inquiries they have informed me that they caught the infection in Chinatown. Many come with the disease fastened upon them, others with it fresh, and with the former a cure is difficult, sometimes impossible. Our physicians treat them and I treat them with varying success.

The boys referred to are white boys, and it shows what horrors exist when solicitation and temptation and ruin reach youths of such tender age. Is it any wonder that parents are angry and indulge in threats of violence and in disorder? These are the ebullitions of despair at an incurable evil unless the Government will hear and protect us.

Wang Ben, the Chinese interpreter of courts, testified:

The gambling houses and prostitutes are controlled by four rulers—Wong Fook Loi, Bi Chee, Ah Go or Jo, and Wang Woon; these men composed a company; they bought women in China for $90 and sold them here for $800; they were mostly "big feet" women from Tartary and were shamefully treated, even worse than the dogs are by Americans.

This is the testimony of a respectable Chinese interpreter of our courts. He says further:

Any person who dares to interfere with the owners of the women or with the gamblers is threatened with assassination. A sign was posted on the corner of Dupont and Jackson streets yesterday which set forth that $1,500 would be paid for the assassination of the witness Wang Ben—

The person who was testifying.

He saw this sign, and immediately started for the police headquarters to inform the authorities; on his way he was beset by about forty Chinamen; he jumped into the middle of the street, pulled out a shooter, and bade them "come on;" they did not come at that particular time, but they may hereafter; when Ben returned with an officer the notice was gone; proclamations were frequent in Chinatown, offering rewards for the killing of certain Chinamen, but since the present excitement commenced they are scarce, as the six companies have combined and decided to expose any persons offering the rewards.

If these pictures are painful, horrible, what must the reality be? Can it be said that these people stand on the footing of immigrants and it is our duty to afford to them asylum? They make lazar-houses of our cities; they bring pollution and spread corruption. Their highest motive is the gain to be acquired by temporary residence.

EASTERN IGNORANCE ON THE SUBJECT.

A striking illustration of the ignorance of some who undertake to teach the eastern people on this subject is found in a superficial article in the New York Times of the 25th ultimo, which declares:

The Chinese are neither criminals nor paupers. There is not an almshouse or a prison in the whole length and breadth of the Republic that shows a marked infusion of the Chinese element.

It is not surprising that there should be no Chinese in such institutions in States where the Chinese are yet unknown; but the assertion is ridiculously false of the Pacific States. By the State-prison returns of California for 1873, the last accessible to me, I find that out of nine hundred and thirty-one convicts one hundred and fifty, or nearly 17 per cent., are Chinese. Supervisor Gibbs recently testified before the legislative commission that there are thirty-eight Chinese in the county pest-house, eight of whom have leprosy and all loathsome diseases. The amount of pauperism may be judged from the fact that the assessed property of San Francisco is $300,000,000. The Chinese have at least one-sixth of the population of the city, and are assessed for only $600,000, and most of that to a comparatively few wealthy men among them. Pauperism is the normal condition of the cooly and prostitute who sell their services and bodies to hard masters to get to this country.

The Times, in the article referred to, underrates the number of arrivals of Chinese, and intimates that during the years when the Central Pacific Railroad was being built the number was much greater, and argues that there was no excitement then. There was less at that time because the Chinese were hurried through California and distributed along the railroad in Nevada. But the number now coming forward exceeds all former experience; and they settle in the towns and cities and excite more apprehension from that fact. An article in a San Francisco paper of the 19th of April, 1876, says:

The Pacific Mail steamship Great Republic arrived in this port from China yesterday morning after a smooth passage of twenty-four days. She had on board one thousand and seventy-five Chinese, having lost one through suicide. The Great Republic reports the Belgic to follow with about six hundred Chinese. She also reports leaving the Quang Se ready for a shipment of coolies. The officers of the Great Republic say that all steamers from China for the next four months will be crowded with coolies.

The trade is very profitable to the ships, and the supply of coolies is ample where 400,000,000 population can be drawn upon. The danger cannot be averted by belittling it.

The tone of some of the Eastern papers is that of the pious old man who prayed—

O Lord, bless me and my wife,
My son John and his wife;
We four and no more.

[Laughter.]

Their withers are unwrung.

BETTER JUDGMENT IN THE EAST.

But this is far from universal. The New York Herald, the Chicago Inter-Ocean, the Nation, and other influential journals evince a clearer perception of the difficulty and a fraternal feeling for the western coast. The Nation, in a leading article on the "California disturbance," treats the subject with breadth and candor. It says:

In our indignation at what seems to us the absurd prejudice of the Californians against the Chinese, we are apt to overlook one important thing: the great depth of our own ignorance on the subject. California is the only American community and, in fact, the only western community from the beginning of history which has had any experience of the actual effect of a Chinese immigration. The immigration from which we in the Eastern States are obliged to draw all our inferences as to the probable effect of such an experiment has been from countries which are allied to our own by race, language, religion, or customs; and the few Chinese whose acquaintance we have made have been chiefly objects of curiosity to us. To California they have come in numbers, and, speaking a different language, worshiping unknown gods, keeping alive imported customs and traditions, they form almost a separate caste. Now such a state of affairs is, under our system of government, very difficult to deal with. In mediæval times it would have been simple enough, because laws and customs would have arisen based on the inferiority of one race and the superiority of the other.

We are grateful for kindly appreciation of our troubles, and a knowledge of them is rapidly growing in the East.

CHINESE, WHERE NUMEROUS, DANGEROUS TO PEACE.

Fourth. The Chinese, where numerous, so as to give each other countenance, are dangerous infractors of the peace and violators of law. They are divided into clans and fight savagely among themselves on some unknown cause of hatred. I have seen a hundred or two Chinese lining each side of a narrow street violently gesticulating at each other, and apparently casting insults, as if each party sought to provoke the other to the first blow, when like a flash came the clashing of swords and knives, and half a dozen men were in the dust with mortal stabs. These feuds among the Chinese are frequent and notorious. My California and Nevada newspapers speak of deadly affairs of the kind that have just happened at San José and Virginia City. But this is only one manifestation of their national characteristic, cruelty. The killing of female infants in China has been carried so far that women are scarce. It is a custom, a fashion. I wish Senators would turn to the authorities in these matters, or read Barrows's account of nine thousand infants in a single year being exposed alive in Canton and in Pekin mutilated by hogs, and the Catholic missionaries would go around in the morning and pick up as many of them as they could who had not perished from cold, or starvation, or by these animals, and rescue them; and gave as a reason, in their French phrase, "pour sauver les âmes"—to save their souls; and he says there were thirty thousand destroyed annually in the empire; that female infanticide is common and a fashion throughout the empire. I think Senators ought to go back to these original sources and authorities and find out what kind of people they are whom we invite to our land. In California they turn out the sick and helpless to die. So far as I have been able to learn by inquiry there is no hospital or benevolent society maintained by Chinese in San Francisco. What other people, numbering thirty thousand in one city, would have no organized means for relief of their own race? Only they could be so hard, indifferent, and cruel. They are capable of great atrocities against foreigners in their own land, as witness the massacre of the foreign residents at Tien-Tsin, June 21, 1870. The French consul and the foreign merchants, their wives, daughters, and children; the Catholic priests, and the Sisters of Mercy, and about one hundred little orphan children were cruelly murdered under circumstances of revolting barbarity.

These children were collected by the means which I incidentally described a moment ago. Having set fire to the building occupied by the sisters, they entered the gates and dragged them into the streets. There they stripped them naked, exposed them to the public gaze, plucked out their eyes, cut off their breasts, ripped them open, tore out their hearts, and deliberately cut them in pieces and divided portions of their flesh among the infuriated mob. An account of this horrible affair says:

Chinese spectators of the bloody scene relate other horrors perpetrated on those innocent ladies that cannot be mentioned. The lady superioress, it is said, was cut in twain while yet alive. God alone and the sisters know all they endured of mortal agony and bodily sufferings. Their modesty outraged, their purity defiled, their poor, frail frames torn asunder, their blood scattered, and their lives destroyed by savages whose murderous rage inflicted all these and other outrages amid a scene of horror that alone would be too terrible to encounter.

A most eligible race this for American citizenship!

CRUEL SPIRIT OF CHINESE LAWS.

But if something must be conceded in this instance to the passions of a mob, I ask you to refer to the spirit of the laws in China, where justice itself shows an utter indifference to human life and unnecessary infliction of suffering. So all writers on the matter agree; and the punishments they name are ingeniously cruel and unusual. I may be excused for referring to the source of Chinese emigration to study its character. The subject is too important to neglect any tests; and the degree of enlightenment of a people, its amount of uncorrupted humanity, may best be found by an insight into its courts and prisons. Wermuth says:

It is not enough in China to suffer a cruel death for a crime. No; the sufferings going before death are so much worse than decapitation, that the final delivery into the hands of even an unmerciful god could not cause more despair. Days and days before the execution prisoners are reduced by most infamous tortures and by hunger to such a wretched state that the knife severing the head is waited for with anxiety.

L'Abbé Huc details the tortures of a prisoner that passed under his eyes, before a miscellaneous and amused audience, the details of which almost surpass belief.

Berncastle tells of women being cut into forty pieces, and of men executed by being flogged to death in public with bamboos. He says in a note that persons condemned to death can procure a substitute, who can be found on payment of a sum of money.

Barrow, after detailing his observations of modes of Chinese punishment, says:

In a government where every man is liable to be made a slave, where every man is subject to be flogged with the bamboo at the nod of one of the lowest rank of those in office, and where he is compelled to kiss the rod that beats him, or, which amounts to the same thing, to thank the tyrant on his knees for the trouble he has taken to correct his morals, high notions of honor or dignified sentiments are not to be expected. Where the maxims of the government commanding, and the sentiments of the people agreeing, that corporal punishment may be inflicted on the ground of a favor conferred upon the person punished, a principle of humiliation is admitted that is well calculated to exclude and obliterate every notion of the dignity of human nature.

I have not time to more than glance at these facts and considerations. What wonder that the Chinese when they reach our shores are such as I have described them? Beyond any other class they fill our prisons and jails; and yet conviction is difficult from the abundance and readiness of Chinese witnesses for the defendant. No form of Christian oath binds the Chinese conscience. If any oath has that effect, it is accompanied by cutting off the head of a chicken in court—a dirty expedient that American courts do not like to resort to. The clerk of the chief of police of San Francisco recently testified before the commission to which I have referred that 10 per cent. of the Chinese in that city live by gambling, prostitution, and thieving, and that nearly every one is a breaker of the ordinances of the city or laws of the State. Of course many of the offenses are malum prohibitum, as too dense crowding of lodging-houses. Mr. Gibson testified that four or five Chinamen sleep in a space of six by ten feet. The danger of pestilence has caused ordinances to be enacted regulating the minimum of space to an individual; but they cannot be enforced. The four or five Chinamen referred to are arrested and convicted, and imprisoned in a jail where they find, to them, luxurious quarters and fare exceeding any former experience. The punishment becomes a bounty for petty crime, and the law is baffled.

CHINESE CRIMINALITY—THEIR PERJURY.

David Supple, a San Francisco policeman, testified as follows:

I have resided in California twenty-seven years; all the time in this city. For seven years I have been on the police force and have had some little experience with Chinese. That part of the city is in a beastly, filthy condition, the people living like hogs. More than half of the Chinese population here are of the criminal class—that is, break the laws and ordinances of the city and State. There was a case in the police court a few days ago where a Chinaman was arrested for committing rape upon a child eighteen months old. The Chinese women are slaves held in bondage. When they become sick and unable to work they are put out on the street to die. I have had charge of the dead myself. Where Chinese women escape from houses of prostitution they are returned in various ways, principally by force. I know a case where a Chinaman married one of the women some time since. He lately called on me to tell me that she had been taken away by her former owners. I would not believe Chinese under oath, and that is the way they are regarded by most of the citizens of the State. The effect of the presence of that nation here is most terrible upon the morals and the health of the youth of the country. Boys of twelve and fourteen years of age go about our streets filled with disease, fairly crippled from their intercourse with Chinese prostitutes. They are stunted in mind and body, and are becoming worse day by day. * * * The Chinamen are displacing the white boys and girls employed in lighter trades, and the result is an abundance of hoodlums and the fitting of subjects for the State prison and the bawdy-house.

The term "hoodlum" has a terrible meaning with us in San Francisco. It means the wildest kind of boys, made such by absence of employment, as testified to by this policeman. We do not know what to do with them. We do not know what to do with our own boys, and cannot control them. They get vicious from the mere fact that they have no employment.

All the testimony taken before this commission goes to reveal the same painful facts. D. J. Murphy, district attorney, testified to his experience. He has been district attorney for four years. A large proportion of his docket was Chinese cases. The charges were principally grand larceny, burglary, and murder.

In many cases—

He says—

I have found rank perjury on all sides; sometimes witnesses will swear to one thing before the grand jury and directly opposite on the trial; felonies are compromised and compounded in many instances; where Chinese desire they can swear any one into the State prison or acquit him. I have had occasion to appeal to executive clemency on behalf of Chinamen unjustly sent to State prison. The Chinese are not to be believed under oath unless corroborated by extrinsic circumstances or white testimony. Seven-tenths or eight-tenths of the Chinese are law-breakers, a vast majority living upon the fruits of crime.

He testified that the evils of Chinese immigration are "frightful in magnitude and constantly increasing."

Some of the most significant testimony was given by Captain R. H. Joy, commander of the English steamship Crocus, which had just landed an immense cargo of Chinese, which he admitted were the worst class of Chinamen. He is an Englishman, and answered questions as follows:

Question. What would you think, as an Englishman, if the Chinese of the class that you bring here were to overflow your country?

Answer. It would behoove Englishmen to drive them out.

Q. Why?

A. Because they work for low wages and they are not the class of people we would like to have in our own country. They work for less because they live on less, a handful of rice daily and little else being sufficient to keep them. Their morals are far below those of the working-classes of other nations, and the introduction of 30,000 or 40,000 into an English city would have the result of lowering the average of labor and morals, too, but I do not think such a thing would be allowed, and I hope never to see it.

The first officer of the Crocus, also an Englishman, had the same opinions. He said:

I have been in China many times, the last time remaining there ten months. During the voyage of the Crocus to this port we had a little trouble with the Chinese at the first, but they soon became all right. We fired volleys over their heads a few times to show them we were armed, as a means of preventing mutiny. We never put into any port for more men, having enough at the beginning of the voyage. I am a native of Liverpool. If the Chinese should want to go to England they "would not find room to stay." There are enough whites there now, without having any Chinamen to run them out. The Chinese living around sea-ports are a bad lot, will steal anything they can get hold of, and are very immoral.

OUR ONLY HOPE IS IN THE GOVERNMENT.

I could multiply proofs upon this point, but is it necessary? Senators must see the dangerous and disgusting nature of this encroaching element. The country must awake to the danger before it is too late. I have not waited to this hour to warn Congress and the country of these evils. On the 25th June, 1862, nearly fourteen years ago, I called to the attention of the House of Representatives the fact that "A people of strange tongue, vile habits, impossible of assimilation, and with customs difficult to penetrate, swarm by thousands to our shores, like the frogs of Egypt." I described the system of slavery and other abominations, and asked for the relief which the giant growth of the evil has now made unendurable to us and a near calamity to the whole nation. At the last Congress I laid before the Senate a monster petition from the people of California asking for protection from the General Government, and I urged the demand upon the attention of the Senate. Since that time the Supreme Court of the United States has swept away the feeble barriers which the State sought to erect by its own legislation against the advancing tide, and has cast the entire responsibility and duty of providing curative measures on the National Government. We have obeyed the injunction of Hercules to help ourselves, and have failed. Our measures may not have been wise, but they were the best we could devise; and now we learn that the United States Constitution deprives us of all power. We cannot and will not resort to violence. The moral sense of our communities revolts against that, though the ignorant classes are stirred to it and the vile would gladly commit it. But the governing sense of San Francisco has counseled and compelled patience and punished infractions of the law designed to protect alike the alien and citizen. We are at the end of our resources. Tell me, Senators, what can we do? What will you do for us? Our Government has protested against the emptying of prisons and pauper-houses of Europe upon our shores. But here is worse. Here is not a pauper merely, but a slave. He is not merely a slave to exacting masters, but to superstitions and vices and traditional corruptions. Out of such materials American citizens cannot be made, should not be made, unless the form of American civilization is to be changed more radically than it could be by changes of laws and constitutions. To allow this inordinate immigration of corrupt humanity is to import leprosy into the body-politic. Is it said we should civilize this population? They despise our civilization, and are confidently assured that theirs is the better way. They despise even the comforts and necessities of our lives. But the attempt would be vain because they do not come here for homes, and seldom remain longer than a few years, giving way to fresh and larger hordes. To civilize them is to roll the stone of Sisyphus. Mr. Gibson has preached to them for ten years past in San Francisco; mission schools have been established among them; yet, out of the 30,000 in the city, he testifies that not over one hundred profess Christianity, and the testimony before the commission was to the effect that many of these converts used the profession as a cloak to cover woman-kidnaping and other crimes. As the committee of the monster meeting at San Francisco said, they are an indigestible element in our midst.

FREE LABOR THE BASIS OF CIVILIZATION.

For twenty-five years the Chinaman has been among us. During that time he has taken no single step toward assimilation with us. He is the same in dress, mode of life, and general exclusiveness as when he came. He looks forward to no share in our civilization. His sole purpose is to make a few hundred dollars and return to his native land. He has made arrangements whereby if he dies in our country his remains are to be removed to China. He is not of us living or dead, and does not wish to be. He seeks his own temporary end at our expense, and imperils our civilization in gaining it.

The basis of our civilization is labor fairly rewarded. By this I mean that the great body of our people are compelled to toil with their hands, and rates of wages prevail under which they can rear families. The day laborer as well as the skilled artisan can generally send his children to the common school a few years, and the elements of education there received cultivate self-respect in parents and children. These schools are the nurseries in which citizens are grown. The immigrants from European countries generally avail themselves of their privileges. The native-born children of our adopted citizens are genuine Americans. Shall we encourage the immigration, nay, the importation, of Chinese who rear no families, have not half the wants of others, and can therefore work for half the prevailing wages? Every Chinaman who comes displaces one of our own laborers. Is it a good exchange? If the sole object of civilization were to enable the wealthy to accumulate more wealth, regardless of the comfort and cultivation of the common people, I should still doubt that wealth itself could afford to destroy the character of the nation in its greed for increase. If capital could avail itself of Chinese labor exclusively at half price, the impoverishment and final extinction of the great middle class of our country would leave a nation of lords and serfs, in which property itself would be a sort of adversity.

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

The nation can only prosper through the general comfort and welfare and gradual improvement and elevation of all. Worth and not wealth is a nation's safety. The stimulation of production by means which eliminate a great body of consumers cannot be a wise political economy. Four or five Chinamen living in a room six by ten feet, eating rice and smoking opium, may be able to make shoes or clothes at half price, but they will not wear them, and the laborers they displace cannot afford them. The Chinese Empire can spare from its teeming population more millions than now inhabit this country, and hardly notice their absence. It will not be a sufficient reply to say that this will not occur for a century. It is our duty to determine whether this is desirable at the end of a century. If not, then we must act for those who are to come after us in a way to avert the calamity. From this we must not be deterred by any feeling of just anger against the baser sort of people who persecute and outrage the Chinese. Let the strong arm of the Government be stretched out to compel respect for the rights of all persons within its jurisdiction, but let us meanwhile aim at a true solution of two questions: Are the Chinese an undesirable and unhealthy addition to our population? If so, how shall their future coming be checked consistently with the dignity and good faith of the nation? These questions should be considered and settled now. Every year of postponement creates new difficulties.

CHINA WILL RESPECT OUR DEMAND.

One word more and I have done. A modification of our treaty with China in the respects I have indicated will not be distasteful to China. The established policy of its government is to prevent the immigration of its people. I have no doubt it will accede to our request and reform the treaty to effect the object desired. But if it does not, our duty is not less clear. The treaty reprobates any other than a voluntary emigration. I have shown that this emigration is in no sense voluntary. We have a right to demand of China a treaty that can be enforced. The sixth article of the treaty gives to Americans nominally the same rights in China as Chinese have in this country. To be sure, there are words of limitation in the favored-nation clause, and no foreigners in China are allowed the privileges that Chinese take here. An American cannot travel in the interior of China without a strong guard, and could not open a shop in any village outside certain boundaries without certainty of pillage and murder. The disabilities of the treaty are all on our side; and it is only by fear of punishment that the Chinese are made to pay any respect to the rights of foreigners in China.

I ask you, Senators, to listen to our appeal; to treat this matter as statesmen, as becomes your station and characters, and to at least add your voice to that of the House of Representatives in asking the attention of the Executive to this sorrowful scourge.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, in reference to this resolution of the Senator from California, I shall say but a word. I understand that a recent decision of the Supreme Court has annulled the laws which California had enacted in reference to immigrants. I would suggest to the Senator having this subject so much at heart whether it would not be advisable that he should submit to the Senate or its Committee on the Judiciary some law which the United States might adopt, which might be acceptable to all parts of the nation. I suppose that the decision of the Supreme Court, which I have not seen, was on the ground that that was a subject which belonged to the Federal rather than the State government; and, if I am correct in that supposition, it seems to me that that is one step which might well be taken toward bringing this subject to the attention of the councils of the nation.

I have read the resolution which has been submitted, and which is to authorize the President to take measures for the reformation of the treaty with China. I have been told—I do not know how correctly—that most of the immigrants that come in from China come from Hong-Kong, the immigration from which I suppose would be regulated rather by a treaty with England than with China. All Chinese who can reach that colony, when there, have no difficulty in being shipped to this country. It seems to me that if that is so it requires the further consideration of the Senator, or, at all events, that the resolution had better be referred to some committee to be considered in that regard.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the resolution read, that we may see exactly what it is.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate recommends to the President that he cause negotiations to be entered upon with the Chinese government to effect such change in the existing treaty between the United States and China as will lawfully permit the application of restrictions upon the great influx of Chinese subjects to this country.

Mr. SARGENT. The difficulty in this matter is not in devising a form of words or framing language which, when inserted into a treaty, would obviate the objections which we make. That can be devised by the Secretary of State or by the President or by a Senate committee. The trouble is that these persons who come from Hong-Kong or wherever else they may start from in China, from any port that is open to our vessels, will come in great numbers unless we pass laws by the General Government which will reach this immigration. Several propositions have been made by which it could be reached. I noticed that Horatio Seymour not long ago suggested that if the United States would pass a law that not more than ten Chinese should be allowed to land from one vessel anywhere in the United States it would reach the difficulty. I do not know that that is best. I do not know but that it may be absolutely essential that there be an entire cessation of the immigration. This matter I had referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations in the last Congress. At the same time I had referred a petition which was signed by 25,000 of our people, wherein they set out in most moving language, certainly as eloquent as any I have been able to use to-day although without so much detail, these difficulties, and in the form of heads they succinctly stated all those troubles. I then asked the attention of the Senate and especially of the Committee on Foreign Relations to it. I fear that if this resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations the result would be, on account of the avocations of that committee, its great business, or on account of there being no member from the Pacific coast upon it who understands this subject to bore you with it and continually to call your attention to it, and where objections arise to answer those objections, that the subject will be overlooked again, and this session will go by and another year's horrors be added to those which already exist. Our people consider that, if the attention of the Executive can be called to this matter and negotiations be opened, our commissioners with China appointed by the Executive will have the wisdom to devise such measures as will be required. That is the only practical proposition there is.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know that it is necessary that this resolution should be referred to a committee; but I do not understand that the Senator has answered the question which I put, whether the difficulty that arises from the immigration from Hong-Kong could be regulated under that resolution?

Mr. SARGENT. I think so, because suppose the treaty, instead of the fifth and sixth articles, should contain a provision that the United States reserved to itself the right to pass measures to restrict the immigration of Chinese to our shores, then it could pass a law which would control the number that should come in any one ship; limit it to one, two, or one hundred as we pleased. By the treaty we are now shut out from the right to legislate on this matter in a restrictive form, as I conceive. I do not think that such a law would stand the test of the Supreme Court, even if passed by Congress under the clause of the Constitution authorizing the regulation of commerce, because it would interfere with a treaty which is the supreme law of the land.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That has been settled the other way.

Mr. SARGENT. It certainly raises a question. I myself would be very glad to vote for a law which Senators so eminent as the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New Jersey would say would stand the test of the Supreme Court, which would remedy these evils; but my own impression is that this treaty stands in the way. It certainly can do no harm to have negotiations opened with the government of China upon it; it will direct the attention of the government of China to the trouble under which we are laboring, and they may themselves voluntarily offer to assist in remedying it; but at any rate the trouble is so great, so terrible, as Senators who have not listened to the whole of my remarks will find if they will only read the testimony I have brought forward, that the impatience which is felt on the Pacific coast and which I fear seems to influence myself for speedy action has a sound basis.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the question involved in this resolution is somewhat broader than the resolution itself. The evils of the immigration of vicious persons, paupers, and so on, are not confined to the Pacific coast; and the Supreme Court of the United States has now finally decided, after many previous decisions which had been steps in that direction, that there is no law that a State can pass which shall affect the introduction of persons as passengers into the United States. That is about the short of it; so that every State law on both the immense coasts of our country which has been intended to provide against pauperism and against the introduction of criminals and for the safety and security of society in the States, and in which all the States, interior as well as coast States, are just as interested in the long run—all such legislation is invalid. Therefore it seems to me that the steps we ought to take are those which go to a regulation of the whole subject. The Supreme Court is of opinion, and I am bound to say that I think correctly, that that is a matter which the Constitution of the United States has left to Congress to regulate; and now, it having been finally determined that none of the State laws are of any avail, it is the duty of Congress to be diligent in making some regulation upon the subject, either a universal regulation that shall be the same in every State, or if it be constitutionally possible and the best way practically, a regulation which shall adapt itself to the wants of each State, considering the class of persons that are most likely to approach the shores of that State. In some way we ought to act; and that we have the power to act, and the exclusive power, seems now to be finally determined.

On this precise question I should have some difficulty, not in endeavoring to do something to alleviate the evil that the Senator has portrayed, but in respect of the effect of the adoption of a resolution of this kind by the Senate of the United States alone. The Constitution says that the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, may make treaties. Whether it is fit that the Senate of the United States should in advance undertake to point out to the President what sort of a treaty he ought to make with a particular power, may be open to some question. I do not know but that it has been sometimes done. I do not remember distinctly that it has been, although I have the impression that it has been; but on the Constitution itself it might be open to some question. It is possible that the President might be misled. We pass a resolution of this character by a small majority. The President makes a treaty accordingly. When it comes to us it requires two-thirds to ratify it. Two-thirds do not ratify it. The foreign power, not being perfectly cognizant with our institutions, might say, "You have entrapped us into a humiliating condition by inviting us under authority of your Government to enter into a treaty which you then yourselves under your laws reject and throw out." That would be a difficulty which ought to be considered, and therefore it seems to me that the wise thing to do would be to refer this resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, who undoubtedly after what has been said, (even if they would not otherwise, which I cannot doubt that they would do otherwise,) will give it speedy consideration and will recommend some measure to the Senate.

At the same time I think we ought to direct the Committee on Commerce, which is the appropriate committee for that purpose, it being a matter of commercial regulation, to inquire and report what legislation ought to be adopted to cure the difficulty that now exists on every shore of this great Republic in respect of the introduction of persons that no nation would be willing, if it could help it, to have introduced at all.

Mr. OGLESBY. I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Vermont, as I do not know, myself, whether any conflict exists or not on the point concerning which I am about to inquire. Suppose under the treaty-making power a treaty should be made with China which should contain certain specific regulations upon this very question, and it should be duly ratified by the Senate, and a law of Congress under the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations should be passed upon the same subject, general but internal in its application and yet in conflict with the terms of the treaty, I should be obliged to the Senator from Vermont to state if he knows whether there has been any determination by the Supreme Court as to how that conflict would be regarded under the Constitution of the United States? Would the law passed by Congress regulating commerce in conflict with a treaty upon that subject prevail or would the treaty prevail?

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I understand it, the Supreme Court of the United States has two or three times (but once is enough, it being a unanimous opinion,) determined that under the Constitution, just as it reads, the laws passed by Congress and treaties are both of them equally the supreme law of the land, any law or regulation of a State to the contrary notwithstanding. I do not quote the words, but that is the substance. Now, that being the state of the Constitution, the Supreme Court has decided unanimously more than once, and I think upon perfectly impregnable grounds, that, if a law is in conflict with a treaty that existed when the law was made, the treaty, to the extent that the law does conflict with it, is abrogated by the general sovereign power of the nation. Whether that abrogation would be an act of injustice or of war, or whatever it might be called, toward the foreign nation with whom we had the treaty, is a question with which, of course, the courts have nothing to do. On the other hand, if a law as a commercial regulation, to say nothing about the rights of the House of Representatives to originate revenue bills and tariff bills—waiving all that—if a law about the introduction of persons should be passed, and afterward the President and the Senate should conclude a treaty with a foreign power which conflicted with the law, then in the same way the treaty would override the law and abrogate the law to that extent. In other words, the last act of the sovereign power exercised in either way under the Constitution, being a complete exercise of sovereign power, would prevail.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest that before the doors are closed there are some bills from the House which ought to be referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) If there be no objection, the House bills on the table will be referred.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and after two minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-eight minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 1, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1251) to exclude the States of Missouri and Kansas from the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872; and

An act (H. R. No. 1592) for the relief of John T. Burchell, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for services rendered the Government in a small-pox hospital.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at twenty minutes past twelve o'clock; and this being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing.

If there be no objection, the call will be continued without reference to the morning hour until all the States and Territories have been called. The Chair hears no objection.

JOHN H. GLIDDEN.

Mr. BURLEIGH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3284) granting a pension to John H. Glidden; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

OKLAHOMA.

Mr. PIERCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3285) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma and for the better protection of the Indian tribes therein; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PIERCE. I move the bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FORT. I suggest it ought to be referred to the Committee on the Territories, and I will make that motion unless the gentleman can assign some good reason why it should not take that reference.

Mr. PIERCE. The bill specially concerns the Indians proposed to be organized into a territorial government, and as the subject heretofore has been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, I insist on my motion to refer it to that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the same bill was referred at the last Congress to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FORT. That may be; but it is a bill to organize a territorial government, and it seems to me it clearly ought to go to the Committee on the Territories.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move its reference to the Committee on the Territories?

Mr. FORT. I do.

The motion was disagreed to.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT, LAWRENCE, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. TARBOX introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3286) donating condemned cannon and cannon-balls for monumental purposes to the Grand Army of the Republic post organization at Lawrence, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BANKS rose.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.) The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HALE. My point of order is this: that the call of the States for bills and joint resolutions for reference in the morning hour having been completed and the morning hour not having expired, the House must proceed to the second call of States for bills to be put upon their passage.

Mr. BANKS. Let me introduce a bill first.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We have not yet completed the call for bills and joint resolutions for reference.

Mr. HALE. I understand the call of States has been gone through with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be in order when that time is reached.

Mr. HALE. As I understand it the States have been called through in order, and I now ask the second call be proceeded with, as the morning hour has not expired, for bills to be put upon their passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are acting under the agreement by unanimous consent that at the expiration of the call those who were not in when their States were called should have the privilege of introducing bills for reference.

Mr. HALE. That is in order by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the call for bills for reference has been completed the Chair will then entertain the request of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I demand it now.

Mr. BANKS. I do not think the point of order is well taken. I have not referred to the rule, but I should like to hear it read if the gentleman from Maine has it.

Mr. HALE. The chair will find the rule on page 150 of the Digest. In reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] I would say that I think the gentleman's own experience should satisfy him that when the States and Territories have been called through, and the regular order is insisted on, the second call must then proceed.

The SPEAKER, (having resumed the chair.) The Chair distinctly understands that the House has consented expressly that all these references may be made before the termination of this order. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] is therefore in order in presenting a bill for reference. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Does the Chair rule that without an express consent given on each Monday morning the first call may be prolonged beyond the termination of the regular call of the States and Territories in sequence? On certain Monday mornings, before the call is begun, the Chair has asked, as is very proper, that the call may be continued to occupy the whole hour. But where no arrangement of that kind has been made does the Chair rule that the regular order cannot be called when the last Territory is reached?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not need now to answer further than to say that this morning the House gave express consent for the completion of this call without reference to the termination of the morning hour.

Mr. HALE. That was a matter of which I had no knowledge. I was not in the House when that consent was given.

The SPEAKER. The record will show that that has been done.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 99) concerning special-tax stamps.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 729) authorizing the issue of patents to the purchasers of certain Miami lands in Kansas; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

PRODUCT OF GOLD AND SILVER MINING.

Mr. BANKS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3352) to utilize the product of gold and silver mining in the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. BANKS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3353) donating condemned cannon to the town of Winchester, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. BANKS also (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3354) to improve the harbor of Washington City and the navigation of the Potomac River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I ask unanimous consent for the printing in the RECORD of a petition of four lines against the passage of the tariff bill now before the House.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order under this call.

RELIEF OF MAIL CONTRACTORS.

Mr. SINGLETON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 3355) to relieve mail contractors whose pay was suspended during the war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to call up the contested-election case of Le Moyne vs. Farwell as the unfinished business of last Saturday.

Mr. HALE. Pending that I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose?

INVESTIGATIONS BY COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I move that the rules be suspended and that the following resolution be adopted:

Resolved, That the several committees of this House charged with investigations be, and are hereby, directed to conduct such investigations with open doors while any testimony is being taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be no opposition to that resolution.

The question being taken on suspending the rules and agreeing to the resolution, the Speaker stated that in the judgment of the Chair on the division by sound two-thirds had not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. HALE. I call for the yeas and nays, there being so much objection on the other side.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 123, nays 108, not voting 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Anderson, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, Banks, Banning, Barnum, Bell, Blaine, Blair, Bland, Bliss, Bradley, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Cochrane, Conger, Cook, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Darrall, Davy, De Bolt, Denison, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Ely, Evans, Farwell, Faulkner, Fort, Foster, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Hale, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hendee, Henderson, Hoge, Holman, Hopkins, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurlbut, Joyce, Ketchum, Kimball, Lamar, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Lynch, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, McFarland, Miller, Milliken, Monroe, Morgan, New, Norton, O'Brien, O'Neill, Packer, Page, William A. Phillips, Pierce, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Randall, John Reilly, Robinson, Rusk, Sampson, Savage, Seelye, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Strait, Stevenson, Stone, Stowell, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Charles G. Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Woodburn, and Woodworth—123.

NAYS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Blackburn, Blount, Bradford, John Young Brown, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, Candler, Caulfield, Chapin, Clymer, Cowan, Cox, Culberson, Davis, Dibrell, Douglas, Eden, Ellis, Felton, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Andrew H. Hamilton, Robert Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Haymond, Henkle, Hereford, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hooker, House, Hunton, Kehr, Franklin Landers, George M. Landers, Lane, Levy, Luttrell, Maish, McMahon, Metcalfe, Mills, Money, Morrison, Neal, Parsons, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Poppleton, Powell, Rea, Reagan, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sayler, Scales, Schleicher, Schumaker, Sheakley, Singleton, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Tarbox, Terry, Thompson, Throckmorton, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Gilbert C. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Warren, Erastus Wells, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Wigginton, James Williams, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, Fernando Wood, Yeates, and Young—108.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Beebe, Boone, Bright, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Caswell, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Collins, Dobbins, Durand, Egbert, Freeman, Ganse, Gunter, Hancock, Benjamin W. Harris, Hays, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoar, Hubbell, Hurd, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, Kelley, King, Knott, Lapham, Lewis, Lord, Lynde, Edmund W. M. Mackey, L. A. Mackey, Magoon, Meade, Morey, Mutchler, Nash, Odell, Oliver, Sobieski Ross, Swann, Teese, Thomas, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Ward, Wike, Alpheus S. Williams, Willis, and Benjamin Wilson—59.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call,

Mr. MILLIKEN said: My colleague, Mr. BOONE, is absent by permission of the House; and I desire to state further that Mr. WILLIS is absent on a subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. YOUNG. My colleague, Mr. CALDWELL, is absent from the House on account of committee duty.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the rules be suspended and that the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk be adopted.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the several committees of this House charged with investigations be, and are hereby, directed to conduct such investigations with open doors, unless, in the opinion of such committees, the public interests will be prejudiced thereby; but any person accused before any committee shall have a right to be heard in his own defense in person or by counsel, or both.

Mr. HALE. That does not change the existing rule.

Mr. RANDALL. The other side of the House was not so particular in the Alabama case or in the Mississippi case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COX in the chair.) Debate is out of order.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask for a vote on my motion.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., one of his secretaries.

POSTAGE.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move that the rules be suspended and that the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk be adopted.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That when the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, is pending in the Committee of the Whole House it shall be in order to offer an amendment to repeal so much of the act of March 3, 1875, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, as amends section 8 of the act approved June 23, 1874, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I hope there will be no objection to the gentleman from Missouri explaining what that refers to.

Mr. HALE. None of us understand it.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. It is in relation to third-class matter.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman explain its scope?

Mr. RANDALL. In the appropriation bill of last year there was a clause inserted changing third-class matter and also the law in relation to the passage of newspapers through the mails. This proposition, as I understand it, makes it in order to test the sense of the House on the repeal of that provision.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Does that restore the law as it was?

Mr. RANDALL. It takes out of that appropriation bill legislation that ought not to have been put there.

Mr. LAWRENCE. That was inserted without the knowledge of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAWRENCE. The whole thing was wrong and ought to be repealed.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

SPECIE PAYMENT—CURRENCY.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk be passed.

The bill was read.

It repeals so much of the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, as authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem and cancel United States notes and to issue and sell United States bonds for the accomplishment of that purpose.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ATKINS. I would ask the gentleman if this bill does not refer to the first and second sections of the resumption law?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nothing is in order now but the call of the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 111, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Anderson, Atkins, John H. Baker, Banning, Blackburn, Bland, Blount, Bradford, John Young Brown, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cannon, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cook, Cowan, Culberson, Davis, De Bolt, Dibrell, Douglas, Durham, Eden, Ellis, Evans, Faulkner, Felton, Finley, Forney, Fort, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Andrew H. Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hartridge, Hartzell, Hatcher, Haymond, Hereford, Hill, Holman, Hopkins, House, Hunter, Hunton, Kelley, Franklin Landers, Lawrence, McFarland, McMahon, Milliken, Morgan, Neal, New, Packer, Parsons, Payne, Phelps, John F. Philips, William A. Phillips, Poppleton, Randall, Rea, Reagan, John Reilly, James B. Reilly, Rice, Riddle, John Robbins, William M. Robbins, Roberts, Robinson, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Sheakley, Slemons, William E. Smith, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stenger, Stevenson, Stone, Terry, Tucker, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Gilbert C. Walker, John W. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, James D. Williams, Jeremiah N. Williams, Wilshire, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., Banks, Barnum, Beebe, Bell, Blaine, Blair, Bradley, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Candler, Chapin, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Cutler, Danford, Davy, Denison, Dunnell, Eames, Ely, Farwell, Foster, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Gibson, Hale, Robert Hamilton, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Hendee, Henderson, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoge, Hoskins, Hubbell, Joyce, Kehr, Ketchum, Kimball, Lamar, George M. Landers, Lane, Leavenworth, Levy, Luttrell, Lynch, Maish, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Metcalfe, Miller, Monroe, Morrison, Mutchler, Norton, O'Brien, O'Neill, Page, Pierce, Piper, Plaisted, Platt, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Rainey, Rusk, Sampson, Schleicher, Schumaker, Seelye, Singleton, Sinnickson, Smalls, A. Herr Smith, Stowell, Tarbox, Thompson, Thornburgh, Throckmorton, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Wait, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wigginton, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, and Woodburn—111.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Ashe, Bagby, William H. Baker, Ballou, Bass, Bliss, Boone, Bright, William R. Brown, Campbell, Caswell, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Cox, Darrall, Dobbins, Durand, Egbert, Freeman, Ganse, Gunter, Hancock, Benjamin W. Harris, Hathorn, Hays, Abram S. Hewitt, Hoar, Hooker, Hurd, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, King, Knott, Lapham, Lewis, Lord, Lynde, Edmund W. M. Mackey, L. A. Mackey, Magoon, Meade, Mills, Money, Morey, Nash, Odell, Oliver, Purman, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Strait, Swann, Teese, Thomas, Van Vorhes, Waddell, Charles C. B. Walker, Ward, Wike, Willis, and Benjamin Wilson—64.

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina, said: I desire to state that my colleagues, Mr. ASHE and Mr. WADDELL, are absent by leave of the House; if present they would vote in the affirmative.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. VAN VORHES, is sick, and absent by leave of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. My colleague, Mr. BRIGHT, is detained from the House by illness.

Mr. MILLIKEN. My colleague, Mr. BOONE, is absent by leave of the House. Mr. WILLIS, of New York, is absent on a subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. McDILL. My colleagues, Mr. KASSON and Mr. OLIVER, are absent by leave of the House.

Mr. STEVENSON. My colleague, Mr. CAMPBELL, is absent by leave of the House. If present, I think he would vote "ay."

Mr. SLEMONS. My colleague, Mr. GUNTER, is absent on account of sickness.

INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOSKINS. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House now adopt the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the committees of this House charged with investigations of alleged fraud and misconduct be, and they are, instructed severally to complete the same as early as possible, and to make report thereon to this House on or before the 10th day of June next, except when expressly provided otherwise by this House.

Mr. HOSKINS. On the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution just read, I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think the resolution will pass without calling the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOSKINS. I will withdraw my call for the yeas and nays until the vote has been taken by division or viva voce.

The question was then taken by a viva voce vote, and

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOSKINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 127, not voting 79; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, Blaine, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Cannon, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, Davy, Denison, Dunnell, Eames, Evans, Farwell, Foster, Frost, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Haralson, Hathorn, Hendee, Henderson, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Hunter, Hurlbut, Joyce, Kelley, Ketchum, Kimball, Leavenworth, Lynch, MacDougall, McCrary, McDill, Monroe, Morey, Norton, O'Neill, Page, William A. B. Walker, Ward, Wheeler, Wike, William B. Williams, Willis, and Benjamin Wilson—79.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to move a suspension of the rules and the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BLAINE. I ask the gentleman to allow me a moment at this time upon a matter entirely personal to myself.

Mr. GLOVER. Certainly, I will do so.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLAINE. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read, from the New York Herald of yesterday, an article which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

ANOTHER SCANDAL ABOUT MR. BLAINE—HIS CONNECTION WITH THE KANSAS PACIFIC RAILROAD AND POSSESSION OF BONDS.

WASHINGTON, April 29, 1876.

It is generally and indeed universally conceded here by impartial people that Mr. BLAINE'S statement of Monday last in the House of Representatives was a complete and satisfactory answer to all the charges which he discussed; but one criticism which has been made is that this statement omitted all reference to a story that has been for some time circulated here, and doubtless in other parts of the country, and of which it is hardly conceivable that Mr. BLAINE is ignorant. His omission to refer to it has, therefore, attracted attention and has been thought by some people to mean that Mr. BLAINE found it too embarrassing to answer, and therefore took refuge in silence. This story, which has been hinted at in some western journals, takes as a whole this form: It is said that Mr. BLAINE has long held an interest in the Kansas Pacific Railroad, acquired many years ago when that road was known as the eastern division of the Union Pacific. The precise amount or extent of this interest is not definitely stated, but it is said to be known to several persons, chief of whom is named Joseph B. Stewart, a well-known attorney, for many years living here in Washington. Mr. Stewart is said to have had confidential charge of BLAINE'S interest in that road and to know all the "bottom facts" about the case. It is further said that a suit in the courts of Kansas, conducted by Stewart as attorney, shows that Blaine was a party in interest and specifies the amount of bonds he got. General Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, who was for some years a resident of Kansas, is also said to be in full possession of all the facts of the case. Ewing is a relative of BLAINE, but he is a democrat, and it is said here that he is not unwilling in this matter to see BLAINE pushed to the wall, though he does not care to take an active part in the matter and prefers to remain silent.

It is further said that BLAINE received several years ago certain bonds of the Kansas Pacific Railroad from Stewart, which were delivered to him in the law office of Stewart & Riddle, on Pennsylvania avenue, in this city. A. G. Riddle, of this firm, still lives here, and is said to know a good deal about this transaction; more than he cares to tell. Another principal witness of this affair is said to be James W. Knowlton, now dead. He was a student in the law office of Stewart & Riddle, and was afterward a newspaper correspondent here. He is said to have witnessed in some form the delivery of the bonds to BLAINE, and to have spoken of it to several persons. Finally, in some not very definite way, the name of Mr. BLAINE'S brother appears at different points in the narrative, though in what precise relation or connection does not clearly appear. The name of this brother is John E. Blaine, and he is now a paymaster in the regular Army.

Different parts and versions of this story have been in circulation in Washington not only this winter, but last. Occasionally fragments have appeared in the papers, and it was reasonably expected by those who had heard of this scandal that Mr. BLAINE would have made some allusion to it last Monday. As he did not, it has been thought proper and not unjust to Mr. BLAINE, who ought to explain these things, to put these fragments together. It will be observed that the names of supposed witnesses are mentioned, and means are thus at hand to substantiate the story or to meet and refute it. Of course it is to be hoped that Mr. BLAINE may be able to refute it, but in any case he must meet it. It cannot be overlooked.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. Speaker, I desire the indulgence of the House for a few minutes, though it is not my intention to ask a favor of this kind every week.

This story is an old one, and though I was perfectly aware of its industrious circulation in many quarters, I did not refer to it when I spoke last week of the $64,000 slander, because I did not wish to confuse the two in the mind of the public. Being in possession of all the facts needful for the complete refutation of this second slander, I desired to wait until I could see it fully and connectedly stated in print. The story consists of two parts, one as to my having a certain interest in the Kansas Pacific road, the other as to my receiving certain bonds of that road from J. B. Stewart, in the law office of Stewart & Riddle in this city, several years since. When the circulation of this story was attempted some three years ago, Hon. A. G. Riddle, who was then as now relied upon as a witness by those who concocted the slander, made the following statement in writing, which has never before been published:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 1, 1873.

I have not the slightest knowledge of the transaction referred to in any shape, way, or form, and I never saw Mr. BLAINE in the office of Stewart & Riddle. From July or August, 1864, Colonel Stewart and myself were law partners, and had our office in the Colonization building, at the corner of Four-and-a-half street and Pennsylvania avenue. The company was never formally dissolved and was an active concern for several years. I have no knowledge whatever of any bonds having been delivered by Colonel Stewart to Mr. BLAINE, or anything else of value being paid to him by Mr. Stewart.

A. G. RIDDLE.

Joseph B. Stewart also wrote me a square denial of it at the same time, and within a few weeks has written me the following more complete and detailed contradiction of the falsehood in all its phases:

NEW YORK CITY, April 2, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I have once before corrected the absurd and false report in regard to your being interested in the Kansas Pacific Railway Company and of your having received from me certain bonds of that company said to have been delivered to you by myself in the law office of Stewart & Riddle, in the city of Washington.

Let me repeat, then, that, so far as I have any knowledge, you never had at any time any interest whatever in the company referred to, and my means of information as to those who were so interested were very extensive and complete.

As to the story of my having delivered to you in my law office certain bonds of the company, let me say again that it is without the slightest foundation in fact; false in whole and in detail. I never saw you in my law office in my life, and have no knowledge or belief that you ever were there. I never delivered to you there or elsewhere any bonds of the Kansas Pacific Railway Company or any other railroad company. I never had a business transaction of any name or nature with you in my whole life. The young man, Mr. Knowlton, a former law student in my office, who seems to have innocently or carelessly been the author of a story in regard to the delivery of bonds to you which found its way into the press, was swift to retract it, and expressed great sorrow to me for the publication of that which he had only uttered as a jest, and was used without his knowledge or approbation, and should be instantly revoked, which was done.

Your brother, John Ewing Blaine, of Leavenworth, Kansas, held an original interest in the corporation known as the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, chartered by the territorial Legislature of Kansas about the year 1856, and which the evidence that came into my hands showed he acquired very early in the history of the enterprise. This road by successive mergers became the Kansas Pacific, and his interest was preserved through all these changes of organization. As early as 1863, and before I had ever seen you, I became his attorney, as I was also for several others who held like interest, and through tedious proceedings and negotiations finally secured a settlement by compromise, and if I remember correctly, writing without the papers before me, your brother became entitled to fifteen construction bonds, afterward changed and reduced to a smaller number of bonds of another issue. This whole transaction was open, honorable, above-board, and free from all grounds of imputation as to any party connected with it.

If without my knowledge you ever had an interest in the Kansas Pacific Railroad it must have prejudiced you very strongly against that corporation, for in 1866, when the bill was passed by Congress giving the company additional lands with enlarged powers to swing its line southward and build to Denver, I remember you were one of its most stubborn opponents. You voted against the bill in all its stages, and you did so against the earnest request of myself and others who were representing the interest of the company in Washington at that time.

Yours, very truly,

JOSEPH B. STEWART,
Late of Stewart & Riddle, of Washington, D. C.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE,
Washington, D. C.

General Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, who is always quoted in this matter as a witness having a knowledge of some fearful facts, wrote me quite recently the following letter:

LANCASTER, OHIO, March 20, 1876.

DEAR SIR: I am surprised to learn that some persons are reviving the long-since exploded story of your having acquired an interest in the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, afterward the Union Pacific, Eastern Division, and now the Kansas Pacific. Four years ago this charge was set afloat, and I published a card denying it. I was a director of the company at the time when you are accused of having acquired an interest and until some time in 1863, and I know that you had no interest whatsoever in the company. The report referred to seems to have originated in the fact that your brother, John E. Blaine, one of the early settlers of Kansas, and clerk of our courts at Leavenworth, held stock in the company, legitimately and properly acquired, long before you were even a candidate for Congress, and with which you had nothing whatever to do. Beyond this there was no interest in the company held, directly or indirectly, by any one of your name.

The similarity between the names of J. E. Blaine and J. G. Blaine must have led to the confusion on which the allegation is based. In that possible mistake I can see some excuse for the origin of this misstatement, but I see none for the persistency which urges it after frank and full denial.

Very truly, yours,

THOMAS EWING.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Washington, D. C.

Three years ago the Knowlton story was told in the New York Sun. Mr. A. M. Gibson, then as now the well known Washington correspondent of that paper, wrote me a few weeks since the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 17, 1876.

DEAR SIR: In February, 1873, a telegraphic dispatch from Washington was published in the New York Sun charging that you had received in some secret manner some bonds of the Union Pacific Railroad, Eastern Division, from Joseph B. Stewart at his law office in the Colonization building, Pennsylvania avenue. The man who was understood to be responsible for the charge was James W. Knowlton, then correspondent of the Chicago Tribune and who had been a law student in the office of Stewart & Riddle. On the evening of the same day that the dispatch appeared in the Sun, Mr. Knowlton called upon me to disclaim all responsibility for it, and said there was no ground for making the charge against you, and that he was satisfied that he had been entirely mistaken in saying that he had even so much as seen you in Stewart & Riddle's office, and if called upon would have to testify to that effect. I was so well satisfied that there was no foundation for the statement made that I at once sent a contradiction of the same. I also advised Mr. Knowlton to go and see you, which he afterward told me he had done.

Very truly, &c.,

A. M. GIBSON.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE.

Mr. Joseph Macfarland, a correspondent well known in newspaper circles, and of whose serious illness at this time I greatly regret to hear, furnishes the following statement:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 16, 1876.

In the winter of 1873, when the statement was made in the New York Sun about Joseph B. Stewart delivering some bonds to Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE, I was the Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Press. Mr. James W. Knowlton, then correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, since deceased, occupied the same office with me. The day after the article appeared in the Sun with Mr. Knowlton as its presumed authority, he came to me and asked me if I would accompany him to Speaker BLAINE'S residence and introduce him, as he had an important communication to make to the Speaker. I accordingly went with him, and in my presence he assured Mr. BLAINE of his great regret that such a report should have got into circulation on his apparent responsibility, and he had come to repudiate it and to assure Mr. BLAINE of how much he regretted that any annoyance should come to him in this way. He unequivocally withdrew the charge in my presence, declaring there was no foundation for it, and assuring Mr. BLAINE that he had taken the promptest measures to prevent, as far as he could, any other papers publishing it or even referring to it.

Mr. Knowlton spoke to me about the matter very frequently afterward, as we were in daily and intimate association. He always expressed the keenest regret that he should have in any way been quoted for a damaging rumor that had no foundation. The attempt to revive this old, and as I am convinced baseless, scandal, is my reason for making this statement, which I do in justice to the living and the dead.

J. MACFARLAND.

I do not think any further contradiction is needed of a story that never had the slightest foundation in truth, but which has been most eagerly and industriously circulated as a twin scandal to the sixty-four-thousand-dollar falsehood. My excuse for trespassing even thus briefly on the kindness of the House is the fact that I desire to give the widest possible publicity to my disproof of a story that has been circulated far and near, and yet mostly in secret, and never with a responsible author. I now dismiss it with the possibly groundless hope that those who have sought to injure me by repeating it will make the proper and the honorable amende.

One word more, Mr. Speaker. I believe the country will understand and appreciate the motives that suggest these untruthful accusations. Having now noticed the two that have been so extensively circulated, I shall refrain from calling the attention of the House to any others that may be invented. To quote the language of another, I do not propose to make my public life a perpetual and uncomfortable flea-hunt, in the vain effort to run down stories which have no basis in truth, which are usually anonymous, and whose total refutation brings no punishment to those who have been guilty of originating them.

HALLET KILBOURN.

The SPEAKER. Before further business is proceeded with, the Chair desires to lay before the House a communication received by him this morning from Mr. Hallet Kilbourn, which communication the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to respectfully inform you, and through you the honorable House of Representatives, that I am now willing to appear before the House or the committee and answer fully all interrogatories in regard to the so-called "real estate pool," in which Kilbourn & Latta, or myself, are, or have been, in any way connected, with the view that, after a full investigation, the fact will appear, as I made oath to, that the Government was in no way interested therein.

I beg to assure you that I had no other motive in refusing to comply with the demand of the House of Representatives heretofore than the vindication of the private and personal rights of the citizen.

As there seems to be a real or affected suspicion that there is something of wrong that I have refused to reveal, and which our books and papers will show, therefore, waiving all questions of the assumed right of the House and its committee to inquire and examine into our private and personal affairs in which I know there is no wrong and no public interest involved, I am willing the honorable committee shall, and hereby invite them to, visit our office, when all the books and papers relating to our business shall be as open as the day to their inspection, and every facility afforded them for a thorough investigation of their contents.

I make but one request in connection with such an examination of our private books, &c., and that is, if the committee shall find, as I have testified to be the fact, that there is nothing wrong or affecting public interests, they will so report to the House of Representatives, and not publish or allow to be published our business transactions, in which no one but ourselves and our patrons are interested.

Again assuring you of my highest regard for yourself, and respect for the honorable House of Representatives, I remain, very respectfully,

HALLET KILBOURN.

Hon. MICHAEL C. KERR,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GLOVER. I move to lay that letter upon the table.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Let it be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. PAGE. I demand a division on the motion to lay upon the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 61.

So the letter was laid upon the table.

INVESTIGATION OF FEDERAL OFFICES IN LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce the following committee to investigate the Federal offices in Louisiana:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GIBSON, Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. NEW, Mr. VANCE of Ohio, Mr. STEVENSON, Mr. JAMES B. REILLY, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. DARRALL.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO THE SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in his own behalf, desires now to make a request of the House, which is that he have leave of absence on account of personal illness for a period not exceeding ten days, commencing to-morrow morning.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

APPOINTMENT OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, under the authority of the amendment to Rule 5, adopted the other day, now appoints, subject to the approval of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to preside as Speaker pro tempore during the leave of absence just granted to the Chair. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was approved accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires before taking his seat to express his sincerely grateful thanks to the House for its long-continued kindnesses and indulgences toward him. They are most gratefully appreciated.

The Speaker then resigned the chair to Mr. COX as Speaker pro tempore for this day, the appointment above to commence to-morrow.

SOUTHERN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. GLOVER. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the board of commissioners of claims, known as the southern claims commissioners, be, and they are hereby, directed to furnish to this House all complaints and affidavits made to said commission against the clerk thereof, or any special agent or commissioner appointed by said board to take testimony in or report on claims filed before said board, and all correspondence, by letter or telegraph, addressed to said board complaining of the conduct of the clerk of said board of commissioners, or any agent, commissioner, or special agent or commissioner appointed by said board to take testimony in or report on any claim filed before said board of commissioners.

The rules were suspended and the resolution adopted, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

AMENDMENT TO THE POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That when the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department, &c., (H. R. No. 3263) for the year ending June 30, 1877, is under consideration in Committee of the Whole, it shall be in order to offer an amendment so as to modify section 3480 of the Revised Statutes as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the amounts found to be due to mail contractors and to postmasters on or before the 31st of May, 1861.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that resolution will be reported again. I did not perceive its full effect.

The resolution was again read.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 87.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I demand tellers. I understand many gentlemen did not understand the motion.

Mr. HURLBUT. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I do not propose to take up the time of the House by demanding the yeas and nays, but I do ask for tellers, as some gentlemen tell me they did not understand the motion.

Mr. HURLBUT. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this resolution shall be adopted, will it be in order to move an amendment in Committee of the Whole to provide that no person who was actively engaged in the rebellion shall be paid for any such mail service?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question will be answered by the Chair in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union when the time arrives.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I withdraw the resolution.

Mr. WHITE. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

Mr. CLYMER. I move the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BAKER, of Indiana: The petition of Alexander M. Vinnedge, late a private in Company B, One hundred and fifty-fifth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, to be relieved from the charge of desertion and to be restored to all rights as though regularly mustered out of military service, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COX: The petition of Edwin F. Hatfield, stated clerk of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, that the postal law be so changed as to allow the annual publications issued by the direction of said assembly and other annual publications issued by direction of various religious and charitable societies, none of which are issued for gain, to be sent through the mails at a lower rate of postage than is now charged for the same, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of Charles J. Bartram and 72 others, envelope dealers, stationers, and manufacturers, that such legislation may be adopted as may relieve them from injurious competition by the Government in the manufacture, transportation, and sale of envelopes, postal cards, &c., to the same committee.

By Mr. FAULKNER: The petition of the faculty of the West Virginia University, for the passage of the bill introduced in the Senate April 12, 1876, entitled "A bill to limit and fix the Signal Service," to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia: Papers relating to the claim of Henry S. Castellon, for compensation for stock and provisions taken for use of the United States Army, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HENDEE: The petition of John G. Stafford, that the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to ascertain and pay him the amount due him for work done and material furnished under a contract with the board of public works in the city of Washington, to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JOYCE: The petition of Dudley Taft, that the charge of desertion may be removed from the record of his deceased son, George D. Taft, killed at the battle of the Wilderness, and that he be paid the bounty and back pay that would otherwise have been due him, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Tuttle & Co. and others, for such legislation as will relieve them from injurious competition by the Government in the manufacture and sale of envelopes, postal cards, &c., to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LANE: The petition of Virgil M. Jones, late an assistant quartermaster United States Army, to be released from his indebtedness to the United States, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: A paper relating to the claim of James M. Watson, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McMAHON: The petition of Robert Quinn, for a pension, to the same committee.

By Mr. MONROE: The petition of Lieutenant M. C. Roach, for additional compensation as a United States officer, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York: The petition of citizens of Washington County, New York, that negotiations may be had with the Dominion of Canada relative to the Caughnawaga Ship-Canal, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. YOUNG: The petition of Abner D. Lewis, for the reconsideration of his claim disallowed by the southern claims commission, to the Committee on War Claims.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 2, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE HOUSE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 34) to print forty-five hundred copies of the annual report of the United States geological and geographical survey of the Territories; and, on motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, the request was granted.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KEY presented the petition of J. P. McMillin, trustee of the Methodist Episcopal church South, of Chattanooga, Tennessee, praying compensation for the use of their church building for military purposes by the Army of the United States during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented a memorial of the Society of Friends on behalf of the Indians, remonstrating against the transfer of the management of Indian affairs to the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MERRIMON presented the petition of Malissa E. Banks, of Yancey County, North Carolina, praying to have her name restored to the pension-rolls as the widow of Ezekiel Banks, a Federal officer in the war of 1861; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Thompson & Carmichael, and others, citizens of Davenport, Iowa, envelope-manufacturers, printers, stationers, lithographers, representing over 50,000 other dealers throughout the United States, praying for such action by Congress as will discontinue the manufacture and sale by the Government of stamped envelopes, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DENNIS presented the petition of Samuel J. Lamden, of Worcester County, Maryland, late a private in Company B, First Mounted Missouri Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of Carl Jussen, late adjutant Twenty-third Wisconsin Volunteers, praying for the difference of pay between that of sergeant-major and adjutant from August 2 to December 13, 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING presented a memorial of citizens of the State of New York, remonstrating against the passage of any law granting an American register to foreign-built vessels; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE STEAMBOAT BILL.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, having the floor I wish to make a statement for myself and for the Committee on Commerce. There is before the Committee on Commerce of the Senate a bill, passed some little while ago by the House of Representatives, popularly known as the steamboat bill. Various inquiries from time to time are addressed to me and various comments are made touching the period when the bill is likely to be reported and the fact that, although it has been here for some time, it has not been reported. To answer these inquiries, for the reason that it is easier to answer generally than particularly, and for some other reasons, I make this statement.

After the bill came from the House of Representatives it turned out that there was some error about it, and the bill was returned to the House, at its request, for the correction of the error. Afterward a second and corrected bill came, which bill has been received by the Senate only quite recently. In the meantime applications have been made, and I refer especially to one known to a Senator who hears me, made by a citizen representing a large part of the steamboat interest in one direction, having one set of views about legislation. An application was made by him to me, and made in writing, to defer and postpone action upon the bill in the committee until he and others should have opportunity to prepare and present to the committee some matters bearing upon it. Although it is quite doubtful whether any diligence would have enabled the committee to report the bill by this time, this request has been made, and it has not existed so long that anybody can charge the parties with being wanting in diligence and good faith. Had the committee been ready to report the bill, no doubt it would have waited at least as long as it has waited, and probably longer, to enable those interested in it to give information to the committee. But I sufficiently answer the purpose when I say that, upon the request of those interested, and affirmatively interested, in the bill, the committee has been waiting, and as yet only a short time, to enable them to present such facts as they may choose to submit.

I hope this will be a sufficient answer to all those curious to know why the bill has not been reported, and that it will avoid the necessity of answering in detail and separately so many persons as are making inquiries.

POLITICAL ASSESSMENTS ON OFFICERS.

Mr. MERRIMON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 876) to prevent the solicitation, contribution, or acceptance, by any officer or employé of the Government, of money, property, or other thing of value, for political purposes, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2441) authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom were referred the petition and accompanying papers of Lena Bensinger, praying to have restored to her certain money alleged to have been wrongfully taken from her late husband, Nathan Bensinger, as surety on the bond of Dohn & Marks, brewers, of Louisville, Kentucky, charged with violating the internal-revenue laws, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 530) to re-imburse purchasers at direct-tax sales in Arkansas declared illegal by United States courts in consequence of a defective board of commissioners, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of Martinette Hardin McKee, widow of Alexander R. McKee, deceased, praying an appropriation by Congress sufficient to convey the remains of her late husband from Panama to Frankfort, Kentucky, to be interred in the cemetery at that place, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Moses Marshall, praying for an extension of his patent for an improvement in knitting-machines, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 795) to enable Moses Marshall to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improvement in knitting-machines.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of S. L. Hartshorn, praying for an extension of his letters-patent for improvements in buckles, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 796) for the relief of the heirs of Sheldon S. Hartshorn.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DENNIS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1400) authorizing the residents and property-owners of Neville Township, county of Allegheny, and State of Pennsylvania, to close the channel of the Ohio River on the south side of Neville Island by the construction of an embankment or causeway from the head of said island to the southern shore of said river, reported it without amendment.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 15) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, has had the same under consideration, and I may say, going beyond the technical formality of expression, has given very considerable attention to the subject. The committee finds itself confronted with what it understands to be a purely legal question, one that may be regarded as a legal question aside from almost any connection with the policy of the disposition of the public lands. The question involved in the bill is one of paying out of the National Treasury some three or four million dollars to various States, in which States public lands were taken up by warrants or certificates issued to soldiers for the location of lands for their services as soldiers. That very fact becomes a material question in considering this bill, as to what is a bounty-land warrant; whether it is in the nature of compensation, representing a part of the service of the soldier paid for by the Government, or whether it is purely and exclusively a bounty. That is one of the legal questions.

Another one of the legal questions is the construction of the ordinances for the admission of the various States into the Union affected by this bill, as to what were the terms of those ordinances or compacts. The Committee on Public Lands, although willing enough to take the labor and time to investigate this subject, felt that it was peculiarly a question involving the construction of an ordinance or contract, and also involving what is the legal status of bounty-land warrants; and hence, though the matter in the bill pertains largely to the Western States, and though the members of that committee are very largely from the West, they felt it due to that committee, and due to the gravity of the subject, that it should go to the Judiciary Committee, where we doubt not it will receive a fair and just interpretation. I am therefore instructed to ask that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The report was agreed to.

SUPPLIES FOR APACHE INDIANS.

Mr. ALLISON. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3269) appropriating $50,000 for subsistence supplies for Apache Indians in Arizona Territory, and for the removal of the Indians on the Chericahua agency to San Carlos agency, to report it without amendment; and as it is a matter of pressing importance I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to provide for subsistence supplies for the Apache Indians in Arizona Territory, from the 1st of May to the 30th of June, 1876. If any surplus remain after the purchase of supplies, the same shall be used to defray the expenses incident to the removal of the Indians of the Chericahua agency to the San Carlos reservation, in said Territory, whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior such removal may be deemed necessary.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A BRIG.

Mr. BURNSIDE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register and change the name of the brig A. S. Pennell to the City of Moule, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAMLIN. The bill just reported by the Senator from Rhode Island is simply to change the name of a vessel, and I ask that the Senate proceed to its consideration at this time.

By unanimous consent, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask leave to introduce a bill, because I have been requested to do so, and not because I know the merits of the bill myself.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 797) to incorporate the Washington and Bladensburgh Pike Railroad Company, and to prohibit the use of steam or other dangerous power on the same or adjacent to it; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 798) for the relief of Carl Jussen, late adjutant Twenty-third Wisconsin Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 799) for the relief of J. B. Cornell and others; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 800) for the relief of Sarah P. Chisholm and Samuel P. Chisholm, of Beaufort, South Carolina; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 801) to improve the harbor of Washington City and the navigation of the Potomac River; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MERRIMON (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 802) for the relief of Thomas H. Mallison, executor of the estate of Noah Gaskill, deceased; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 803) to repeal an act granting a pension to Mary H. Bartlett, approved January 28, 1873; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 804) to establish a post-route in the State of Oregon and Idaho Territory; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOOTH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 805) relating to indemnity school selections in the State of California; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 806) for an act granting a pension to John B. Dearing; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 807) for the relief of John E. Catlett, of Hannibal, Missouri; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

IMMIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and it hereby is, instructed to inquire what legislation, if any, is necessary and expedient to provide regulations concerning the immigration or other arrival of persons in the United States from other countries with a view to securing the people against the evils of pauperism, crime, and other injuries to the morals and good order of society, and with a view to lending all lawful aid to the States in the exercise of their sanitary and police jurisdiction, and that said committee report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. CONKLING. Let the resolution lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

DISTRICT PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to inform the Senate whether the standard of qualification of teachers, text-books, mode of punishment of pupils, rules, regulations, and general supervision of white and colored schools are the same in this District; and, if any discrimination exist in the management of said schools or in the respects aforesaid, that they inform the Senate in what such differences consist and the reasons therefor.

AMENDMENT OF IMPEACHMENT RULES.

Mr. INGALLS. If there is no further morning business, I will move that the remainder of the morning hour be devoted to the consideration of the Calendar.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think we had better take up the resolution in relation to the rules. It is legitimate morning business.

Mr. INGALLS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves the present consideration of the resolution introduced by him which was partly considered on a prior day.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator if he will permit me to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill upon the Calendar which has been there for some time?

Mr. HAMLIN. This resolution is in the nature of morning business and it is in regular order. I should like to have the Senate vote upon this matter, and then I will assist the Senator from Minnesota in getting up his bill with great pleasure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution submitted by Mr. HAMLIN, April 29:

Resolved, That Rules 19 and 23 of procedure and practice in the Senate, when sitting on the trial of impeachments, be amended to read as follows:

XIX. At all times while the Senate is sitting upon the trial of an impeachment the doors of the Senate shall be kept open.

XXIII. All the orders and decisions shall be made and had by yeas and nays, which shall be entered on the record, subject, however, to the operation of Rule 7, and in that case no member shall speak more than once on one question, and for not more than ten minutes on an interlocutory question, and for not more than fifteen minutes on the final question, unless by consent of the Senate, to be had without debate; but a motion to adjourn may be decided without the yeas and nays, unless they be demanded by one-fifth of the members present. The fifteen minutes herein allowed shall be for the whole deliberation on the final question, and not to the final question on each article of impeachment.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, most of our constitutions provide that courts of justice shall be open; that is, they shall conduct their proceedings openly; but I never heard of a court in any country in the world that conducted its deliberations in the formation of its judgment, in public. I never heard of a court in which a jury was required to discuss the case in public. If the universal experience of mankind has been that judges and jurors should consult in private as to the verdict or judgment they shall render, I cannot very well see that there is anything peculiar in the constitution of the Senate sitting for the trial of impeachments that should exempt it from this general rule of convenience and propriety. On the other hand, it seems to me, with great respect for my friend who offers this amendment and for any one who supports it, that nothing in practice could prove more detrimental, nothing would be more likely to be injurious to the character of the Senate or to the cool deliberation that is necessary to prevail in arriving at our judgment; and I think, too, that instead of being a saving of time it would have directly the opposite effect.

As was well said yesterday by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] men are so constituted that if one expresses an opinion, although it be hastily expressed, he does not willingly forego that opinion, he does not willingly admit that he was in error, and that is especially the case if that opinion be expressed in public; and if he sees that to give up his opinion or to modify it may subject him to a charge of inconsistency, it becomes far more difficult for him to yield to reason and surrender an erroneous conception, and if he do it still the changing of opinions from time to time upon further reflection is calculated to injure the standing and dignity and reputation of the court. Hence, both for the preservation of that respect which is due to the court, as well as for arriving at a sound conclusion, the universal practice has been that the consultations of the court shall be in private.

There is still another reason, I may say, for I have had some experience about that. Courts after all are constituted of men and men only, with the infirmities that belong to other individuals; and the debates, even in a court of limited numbers and composed of men of age and of experience, are sometimes conducted with very considerable heat; their deliberations in private consultation, I mean. It is not advisable that any such scenes should be enacted. It is not advisable certainly that this court, consisting of seventy-three members, should exhibit anything like heat in debate upon this case. But if we are to discuss in this large Chamber all the questions that arise in this trial, it will be impossible to avoid that heated debate which ought not to prevail in a court.

I hope, for all these reasons, as well as those that have been given by others, that this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, in order to test the sense of the Senate, I move to postpone the resolution indefinitely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, it may be well to look into the history of this practice before we take the vote upon the question now before the Senate. I have felt enough interest in the question to go back beyond our own times to ascertain how this practice of secrecy originated. I find in the records of the Senate as early as 1798 that the order which the Senator from Maine now desires to revoke was adopted; this order under which we retire every day when a question is presented here for our decision to deliberate upon it. I say I have had the curiosity to go back and find how it came to be adopted and where it originated; and I discover that its origin is to be found in that great trial in England which was in progress at the time the Blount trial began—the first impeachment trial in this country.

The practice of retiring from Parliament and taking the sense of the judges is nothing new in parliamentary history, and out of that practice this order originated. It is not new; it originated in the trial of Warren Hastings, and let me say to the Senate that it originated against the protest of the best constitutional lawyers in England at that day and against the precedents of a century and a half previous. All of our rules of proceedings in cases like this are derived, as we know, from parliamentary law, not from the civil law, not from the common law, but from the parliamentary law; and when we come to inquire what that law provides in cases of impeachment, we find that it never did authorize this secrecy which is now sought to be abolished by the honorable Senator from Maine.

The power of impeachment is given by the Constitution to the House of Representatives, and the power to try all impeachments is given to the Senate; but we have no rules to guide us except what we derive from the English practice or such as we may originate ourselves. In the English House of Lords there is an element that does not exist here. They have their law lords, to whom all cases of law are referred; and it was the practice in the Hastings trial, whenever a legal question was presented, either of evidence or pleading, to retire from the halls of Parliament to take privately the opinion of the judges behind the back of the prisoner in regard to the particular question in dispute.

I have said that that practice called forth one of the ablest protests that is to be found in the English language to-day as being utterly inconsistent with the principles of the British constitution and rights of the prisoner in that case. But, sir, strange to say, notwithstanding the rights of the prisoner were seriously involved, his learned counsel did not think it proper or necessary to interpose any objections to the adoption of that despotic rule. What reason was assigned for it? He was at the time a favorite of the Crown; that was a trial which emanated from the Commons, representing the voice of the British people, and it was sought to shelter him by the mantle of the Crown. It was not a proceeding that emanated from the aristocracy, from the lords, but it emanated from the people, headed by Mr. Burke and his able associates. The distinguished counsel of the accused, who made no opposition to the adoption of that rule in that case, failed to do it because they thought it would benefit their client, which it did. That trial lasted for seven years, and it was sufficient to break down any ordinary man, however innocent he might have been; but it was the wish and purpose of the prisoner's counsel to continue it, and when the House of Commons, after it was over, or about the time it was on the eve of its termination, appointed a committee, headed by Mr. Burke, to inquire into the causes of that great delay, they made a report, which is here before me, which goes to show that one of the reasons which contributed to that delay was this practice of retiring and deliberating in secret upon the great questions that from time to time came before the court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Would it be convenient for the Senator to read us the extract from the journal to which he refers of 1798, when this proposition was brought forward?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have not that before me now; but I have the dissent of the Lords here at hand, with Mr. Burke's report explaining the causes of the great delay, which will answer the same purpose. The Lords who dissented from the adoption of that rule used this language:

First. Because, by consulting the judges out of court in the absence of the parties, and with shut doors, we have deviated from the most approved, and almost uninterrupted, practice of above a century and a half, and established a precedent not only destructive of the justice due to the parties at our bar, but materially injurious to the rights of the community at large, who in cases of impeachments are more peculiarly interested that all proceedings of this high court of Parliament should be open and exposed, like all other courts of justice, to public observation and comment, in order that no covert and private practices should defeat the great ends of public justice.

Secondly. Because, from private opinions of the judges, upon private statements which the parties have neither heard nor seen, grounds of a decision will be obtained which must inevitably affect the cause at issue at our bar; this mode of proceeding seems to be a violation of the first principle of justice, inasmuch as we thereby force and confine the opinions of the judges to our private statement, and through the medium of our subsequent decision we transfer the effect of those opinions to the parties who have been deprived of the right and advantage of being heard by such private though unintended transmutations of the point at issue.

Mr. Burke, in his report to the House of Commons on this subject, says:

Your committee is of opinion that nothing better could be devised by human wisdom than argued judgments publicly delivered for preserving unbroken the great traditionary body of the law, and for marking, while that great body remained unaltered, every variation in the application and the construction of particular parts; for pointing out the ground of each variation, and for enabling the learned of the bar and all intelligent laymen to distinguish those changes made for the advancement of a more solid, equitable, and substantial justice, according to the variable nature of human affairs, a progressive experience, and the improvement of moral philosophy from those hazardous changes in any of the ancient opinions and decisions, which may arise from ignorance, from levity, from false refinement, from a spirit of innovation, or from other motives of a nature not more justifiable.

Your committee, finding this course of proceeding to be concordant with the character and spirit of our judicial proceeding, continued from time immemorial, supported by arguments of sound theory, and confirmed by effects highly beneficial, could not see without uneasiness, in this great trial for Indian offenses, a marked innovation. Against their reiterated requests, remonstrances, and protestations the opinions of the judges were always taken secretly. Not only the constitutional publicity for which we contend was refused to the request and entreaty of your committee, but when a noble peer, on the 24th of June, 1789, did in open court declare that he would then propose some questions to the judges in that place, and hoped to receive their answer openly according to the approved good customs of that and of other courts, the lords instantly put a stop to the further proceeding by an immediate adjournment to the chamber of Parliament. Upon this adjournment we find by the Lords' journals that the house, on being resumed, ordered that "it should resolve itself into a committee of the whole house on Monday next, to take into consideration what is the proper manner of putting questions by the Lords to the judges and of their answering the same in judicial proceedings." The house did thereon resolve itself into a committee, from which the Earl of Galloway, on the 29th of the same month, reported as follows: "That the house has, in the trial of Warren Hastings, esquire, proceeded in a regular course in the manner of propounding their questions to the judges in the chamber of Parliament and in receiving their answers to them in the same place." The resolution was agreed to by the Lords.

But the protest which I have just read was interposed against it. The committee of the Commons further say in this report:

It appears to your committee that from the thirtieth year of King Charles II until the trial of Warren Hastings, esq., in all trials in Parliament, as well upon impeachments of the Commons as on indictments brought up by certiorari, when any matter of law hath been agitated at the bar or in the course of trial hath been stated by any lord in the court, it hath been the prevalent custom to state the same in open court. Your committee has been able to find since that period no more than one precedent (and that a precedent rather in form than in substance) of the opinions of the judges being taken privately, except when the case on both sides has been closed and the lords have retired to consider of their verdict or of their judgment thereon. Upon the soundest and best precedents the lords have improved on the principles of publicity and equality, and have called upon the parties severally to argue the matter of law previously to a reference to the judges; who, on their parts, have afterward in open court delivered their opinions, often by the mouth of one of the judges speaking for himself and the rest, and in their presence; and sometimes all the judges have delivered their opinion seriatim (even when they have been unanimous in it) together with their reasons upon which their opinion had been founded. This from the most early times has been the course in all judgments in the House of Peers, formerly even the record containing the reasons of the decision. "The reason wherefore (said Lord Coke) the records of Parliaments have been so highly extolled is that therein is set down in cases of difficulty not only the judgment and resolution but the reasons and causes of the same by so great advice."

In the thirtieth of Charles II, during the trial of Lord Cornwallis, on the suggestion of a question in law to the judges, Lord Danby demanded of the lord high steward, the Earl of Nottingham, "whether it would be proper here [in open court] to ask the question of your grace, or to propose it to the judges?" The lord high steward answered, "If your lordships doubt of anything whereon a question in law ariseth, the latter opinion, and the better for the prisoner is—that it must be stated in the presence of the prisoner, that he may know whether the question be truly put. It hath sometimes been practiced otherwise; and the peers have sent for the judges, and have asked their opinion in private, and have come back and have given their verdict according to that opinion, and there is scarcely a precedent of its being otherwise done. There is a later authority in print that doth settle the point so as I tell you—and I do conceive it ought to be followed; and if being safe for the prisoner, my humble opinion to your lordship is, that he ought to be present at the stating of the question."

And he said—

Call the prisoner.

* * * * * * *

Very soon after the trial of Lord Cornwallis the impeachment against Lord Stafford was brought to a hearing, that is, in the thirty-second of Charles II. In that case, the lord at the bar having stated a point of law, "touching the necessity of two witnesses to an overt act in case of treason," the Lord high steward told Lord Stafford that "all the judges that assist them, and are here in your lordship's presence and hearing, should deliver their opinions, whether it be doubtful and disputable or not." Accordingly the judges delivered their opinion, and each argued it (though they were all agreed) seriatim and in open court.

Each judge argued his opinion upon that important point of law in open court.

Another abstract point of law was also proposed from the bar on the same trial, concerning the legal sentence in high treason; and in the same manner the judges on reference delivered their opinion in open court; and no objection was taken to it, as anything new or irregular.

In the first of James II came on a remarkable trial of a peer, the trial of Lord Delemere. On that occasion a question of law was stated. There also, in conformity to the precedents and principles given on the trial of Lord Cornwallis, and the precedent in the impeachment of Lord Stafford, the then lord high steward took care that the opinion of the judges should be given in open court.

Mr. THURMAN. May I ask the Senator from Florida if that was not after the judges had formed their opinion; simply the delivery of their opinion?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No, it was not so in the case that preceded it, because the report says they argued their opinions in open court, so that the very point was made which is suggested by the Senator.

Precedents grounded on principles so favorable to the fairness and equity of judicial proceedings given in the reigns of Charles II and James II, were not likely to be abandoned after the revolution. The first trial of a peer which we find after the revolution was that of the Earl of Warwick.

In the case of the Earl of Warwick, 2 William III, a question in law upon evidence was put to the judges; the statement of the question was made in open court by the lord high steward, Lord Somers—

Than whom a greater lawyer never lived—

if there be six in company and one of them is killed, the other five are afterward indicted and three are tried and found guilty of manslaughter, and upon their prayers have their clergy allowed and the burning in the hand is respited, but not pardoned, whether any of the three can be a witness on the trial of the other two?

Lord HALIFAX. I suppose your lordships will have the opinion of the judges upon this point, and that must be in the presence of the prisoner.

Lord High Steward, (Lord SOMERS.) It must certainly be in the presence of the prisoner, if you ask the judges' opinions.

In the same year, Lord Mohun was brought to trial upon an indictment for murder. In this single trial a greater number of questions was put the judges in matter of law than probably was ever referred to the judges in all the collective body of trials, before or since that period. That trial, therefore, furnishes the largest body of authentic precedents in this point to be found in the records of Parliament. The number of questions put to the judges in this trial was twenty-three. They all originated from the peers themselves; yet the court called upon the party's counsel as often as questions were proposed to be referred to the judges, as well as on the counsel for the Crown, to argue every one of them before they went to those learned persons. Many of the questions accordingly were argued at the bar at great length. The opinions were given and argued in open court. Peers frequently insisted that the judges should give their opinions seriatim, which they did always publicly in the court, with great gravity and dignity, and greatly to the illustration of the law, as they held and acted upon it in their own court.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator tell us whether or not that language, that the opinions were argued in open court, means anything more than that the answers to the questions were given and the reasons for them stated openly after the judges had arrived at their conclusion? Is there anything to show that the judges did not confer before they stated their opinions and argued them, as it is said there, or gave the reasons for them?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Well, sir, the word "argued" here will pass for what it is worth. I have a right to put my interpretation upon it. I am free to say that I am of opinion, from reading this report carefully, that it means that the whole proceeding was in the presence of the prisoner, in accordance with the spirit of the British law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether the habit was not for the peers to refer certain questions to what are called the law lords, to resolve that the law lords be inquired whether such propositions are the law, stating the propositions seriatim? Were not those propositions considered by the law lords in their chamber quietly in consultation among themselves, after being argued by counsel on both sides and being discussed? After argument they are taken up to their chamber and considered, and then they announce their opinions to the Peers on a subsequent day. Is not that the course of proceeding?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The authority goes further than that. It not only requires that they should deliver their opinions in the presence of the prisoner—I will come to that after a little—but it requires that the questions should be stated in his presence in order that he may determine whether they were stated properly or not. That would seem to imply, if it was necessary that he should be present at the stating of the questions, that he should also be present when the questions were decided and when they were argued as well.

Now what has been our practice in this case? I say that no authority can be found for the secret practice, as I shall call it, except the precedent in the Hastings case; and it is opposed to the whole body of precedents, commencing with the trial of Lord Cornwallis in the reign of Charles II and coming down to the reign of George III. It is true that in the case of the Duchess of Kingston there was an exception, and there was some considerable controversy in that case in consequence of the practice adopted by the court; but in order to satisfy the public opinion of Great Britain it was found necessary that the reasons for the judgment in that case should be spread upon the records of Parliament.

Now what have we been doing under this rule here? Have we not endeavored to avoid giving reasons for our conclusions, and have we done anything more than come into court and give our conclusions, leaving the reasons for them behind us, at least away from the respondent and his counsel? Mr. Burke further says, in speaking of the court of star chamber, that they did not dare to conceal their judgments or the reasons for them:

Your committee is very sensible, that antecedent to the great period to which they refer, there are instances of questions having been put to the judges privately. But we find the principle of publicity (whatever variations from it there might be in practice) to have been so clearly established at a more early period, that all the judges of England resolved, in Lord Morley's trial, in the year 1666, (about twelve years before the observation of Lord Nottingham,) on a supposition that the trial should be actually concluded, and the lords retired to the chamber of Parliament to consult on their verdict, that even in that case (much stronger than the observation of your committee requires for its support) if their opinions should then be demanded by the peers, for the information of their private conscience, yet they determined that they should be given in public. This resolution is in itself so solemn, and is so bottomed on constitutional principle and legal policy, that your committee have thought fit to insert it verbatim in their report, as they relied upon it at the bar of the court when they contended for the same publicity.

And so it was in the great contest about ship-money—a controversy that involved more serious consequences than any cause that ever was tried in England. That cause was argued in open court, and the opinions of the judges were argued in open court; and we are told by Mr. Burke that the great historian, Lord Clarendon, said in his day that it was a fortunate thing for the people of England that the judges in that case gave the reasons for their judgment, because they showed to the whole world and to the people of Great Britain that that which they stated as law from the bench was not law; and it led afterward to a change, and a change in favor of the people who finally vindicated their rights by revolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the Senate will conclude to dispose of this matter at this time. I do not think it will take long. I ask that its consideration may be continued at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to continuing the consideration of this resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that the Senator from Florida have leave to conclude his remarks. That is the usual courtesy, certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Florida concluding his remarks? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Florida will continue to occupy the floor on the resolution before the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Now, sir, I do not deny that I had in view the practice in cases of impeachment that had passed before my own eye; and speaking by the record in the case which is now before us as a high court I will draw the attention of the Senate to what has passed in the secret chamber, to show that the principle involved here is one of grave importance.

On one occasion we retired from this body for the purpose of considering an order introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] and an amendment by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] That was the question stated here in the presence of the accused and of his counsel; and I suppose that the accused and his counsel thought that when we retired to our conference chamber behind us we should be confined to that resolution and that amendment; but, sir, the record shows that after we were in there, after we had retired to that conference chamber, the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] introduced an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, that never was moved in this body at all.

Mr. THURMAN moved further to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved"—

After first moving—

And whether the matters in support of the jurisdiction alleged by the House of Representatives in the pleadings subsequent to the articles of impeachment can be thus alleged if the same are not averred in said articles.

That amendment came up as a distinct proposition after we had left this Chamber, after we had left the presence of the accused and his counsel and the managers of the House. I ask in all seriousness if it is competent to do that why may you not introduce any new proposition after you retire from here in the absence of the parties, and is that, I ask, in accordance with the practice of the criminal law in this the highest criminal court in the land? Is it competent in a case affecting the rights of the accused that you may go behind his back and propose new propositions and new amendments, and debate them and discuss them there, without giving either him or his counsel an opportunity to be heard? I say that it is not in keeping either with the spirit or the practice of our laws; and if this rule is warranted in impeachment cases I say it is time that the hand of reform was set at work to remodel our system of jurisprudence.

I can see no harm which can come from this body debating in the face of the accused and in the face of the people. I believe that the contrary practice originated in the rule to which I referred in the Hastings trial, and that it was in opposition to the voice of the best lawyers in that kingdom and to the principles established by the precedents of one hundred and fifty years. I shall therefore support the honorable Senator from Maine in his efforts to change this rule and re-establish what I believe to be the true principles of the Constitution.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is before the Senate, being the bill (S. No. 626) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, which the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] moved to postpone.

Mr. SARGENT. I understood that when the Senate adjourned last night the unfinished business was, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate, the resolution which I offered on the 20th of April.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that by general consent this bill should be considered the unfinished business, and that the motion of the Senator from California to postpone should be entertained in order to allow the Senator to submit his remarks.

Mr. SARGENT. Not merely for that purpose. The bill was taken up, and the Senate, it was stated, would afterward decide whether the discussion should continue to final action or whether it should be laid aside. I think I am correct in my recollection of it from referring to the RECORD of this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California moved to postpone this bill and all prior orders.

Mr. SARGENT. I did. I am willing that that motion should be considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the way the Chair states it.

Mr. SARGENT. That motion has not been decided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been decided. The Chair is correct that the unfinished business is called up, which is Senate bill No. 626, and the Senator from California moved a postponement of the unfinished business and all prior orders for the purpose of considering the resolution which he introduced, upon which he submitted remarks. The question now is upon the motion to postpone the unfinished business and all prior orders.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is manifest that if we adopt the proposition of the Senator from California, we shall get ourselves into confusion. There are now two matters pending before the Senate which have been partly discussed. The silver bill I suppose is really the unfinished business, but by arrangement the Japanese indemnity bill was taken up simply because it had been previously partially considered and discussed before the silver bill came up. I felt therefore that there was a kind of equity in allowing that business to be disposed of after having been partially considered before the silver bill was pressed. It seems to me when that is done we should dispose of that question, the silver bill, and then take up the proposition of the Senator from California. But if we take up questions of this kind in an irregular way, discuss them a while, and then put them away for another proposition, and another, and still another, the time will soon come when the appropriation bills will be reported, and then all these matters will be all alike unconsidered or put aside. I hope, therefore, that the Senator from New Jersey will be allowed to finish his Japanese bill and get it out of the way; I think it will not take long; and then let us proceed with the consideration of the silver bill. I am in hopes that the Senate will be able before we proceed with the impeachment trial to dispose of that bill. Although I shall probably aid the Senator from California at any time that it is convenient to go on with the consideration of the subject he discussed yesterday, I do not feel at liberty to do so now.

Mr. SARGENT. I appreciate the indulgence of the Senate yesterday and I do not know that I ought to interfere with the business, but I do feel, I must confess, very much like fighting hard on this proposition. I trust Senators will not think me unduly impatient or that I was unduly impatient yesterday, but I tried to portray, I must confess in feeble colors, the evils with which we are afflicted upon the Pacific coast. I propose, however, this morning, on reflection and on hearing the remarks of the Senator from Ohio, to withdraw my motion to have this resolution take precedence of the business which was pending at the time it was injected, and I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate, and shall insist upon it strenuously as soon as the two matters referred to are disposed of, that this resolution be taken up and pressed to a conclusion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from California is withdrawn and the unfinished business is before the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. C. C. SNIFFEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 29th of April approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 608) to enable Harvey Lull, of Hoboken, New Jersey, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a self-locking shutter-hinge; and

An act (S. No. 760) to protect the public property, turf, and grass of the Capitol grounds from injury.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. G. M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3356) authorizing the transfer of a certain appropriation; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1251) to exclude the States of Missouri and Kansas from the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872;

A bill (H. R. No. 1595) for the relief of John T. Burchell, of Knoxville, Tennessee, for services rendered the Government in a small-pox hospital; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 99) concerning special-tax stamps.

THE CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, for the information of Congress, a report of the president of the Centennial Commission upon the ceremonies to be observed at the opening of the exhibition, on the 10th instant. It will be observed that an invitation is therein extended to Senators and Representatives to be present on that occasion.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, May 1, 1876.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the message lie on the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

JAPANESE INDEMNITY FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 626) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] which was to strike out in section 1, lines 6, 7, and 8, the words:

If not incompatible with the relations of the United States to other powers.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I had not intended to trouble the Senate with any remarks on this subject. Having made a report in favor of the bill, I proposed there to leave the measure; but finding that there are some Senators, distinguished alike for their regard to the national honor and for their care of the public Treasury, who have doubts in reference to it, and as this is the voluntary payment of a large sum of money, I think it right that I should briefly and plainly state the reasons why the United States should not retain the Japanese indemnity fund.

We all know, sir, that for centuries the Japanese looked upon intercourse with other nations as destructive of their prosperity. They feared that if the Anglo-Saxons gained a foot-hold in their country they would subjugate them, or that they would at all events make their wealth tributary to them; and it seems to me that for that fear there is some apology in the history of Great Britain in the oriental world. Intercourse with foreigners is repulsive to their traditions, their tastes, and their pride. Such, without multiplying words, was the state of public sentiment. Now let us look for a minute at the governmental and political condition of that country.

The universally acknowledged sovereign of Japan was the Mikado. He claimed by hereditary succession, commencing prior to the Christian era and continuing for twenty-five centuries. The commander-in-chief of Japan was the Tycoon, who had held his position by succession for about two centuries. He was the executive of the government. Thus there seemed to be a dual government, the Mikado having his court at Kioto, in the northwestern part of Japan, and the Tycoon having his court at Yedo. The Tycoon, partly because he came more in contact with foreigners and partly because he saw personal commercial advantage, entered into treaties with the members of the allied powers—England, France, the Netherlands, and the United States. It seems as if the Tycoon had no right to make these treaties, and as if the treaty which was made with us, and this is worthy of observation, was defective.

Commodore Perry went to Japan in 1853. He used no coercion to effect these treaties. All he did was to take his big ship up in waters where a foreign man-of-war had never before floated, within a mile of Yedo, and there may have exercised a persuasive constraint upon the opinions of that people. In 1854 he made a treaty. It was only a treaty of amity. In 1858 a treaty of commerce was effected. These defective treaties were ratified by the Mikado in 1866, after the contest to which our attention will be called had occurred. This you will see by referring to the diplomatic correspondence of 1866-'67, pages 191, 192, and 193. There Mr. Portman, who was our consul and the successor of Mr. Pruyn, in 1865 made this report to Mr. Seward:

The treaties, as well as all the acts of the Tycoon's government in pursuance thereof, have now become legalized, and the Tycoon is said to be again the supreme executive authority in this empire. It is deemed quite probable that the Choshu rebellion will now be satisfactorily disposed of without resort to coercive measures.

Again he says:

I believe I am not too sanguine when venturing to submit it as my opinion that the formal sanction of the treaties by the Mikado, recognized by all Japanese as the real sovereign of their country, will prove an important result of the recent negotiations, due in a great measure, no doubt, to the perfect unanimity of views and action of the foreign representatives.

And Mr. Portman, in a letter to the Tycoon, November 21, 1865, says:

By approving the obligations entered into by your majesty with foreign powers, the Mikado and the daimios will make an end to existing difficulties and avert future dangers.

And on the 6th of December, 1865, Mr. Portman writes to Mr. Seward.

I have the honor to transmit herewith (No. 1) translation of a letter from the minister for foreign affairs, announcing that the Mikado's ratification of the treaties was promulgated in all parts of this empire on the 1st instant.

Thus we see, Mr. President, that at the time this controversy took place between Japan and this country there was at best a defective treaty, one which we were very happy subsequently to have ratified by the Mikado, the true sovereign of Japan.

In 1862 and 1863 the daimios, who were influential princes, one of them at least, Choshu, the daimio of Sagato, perhaps as powerful as the Mikado himself, determined to oppose this intercourse with foreigners. They did this because of their traditional antipathy to foreigners; their motto being that "that country is wisely governed which never changes its organic law." They were also opposed to the treaties, because they thought, and probably correctly, that the Tycoon had usurped authority in inaugurating these great fundamental changes in their country by means of treaties which he had no lawful authority to make.

The opposition of the daimios compelled the Tycoon to temporize. He was obliged to appear at times to them, and probably to the Mikado, to be in favor of the expulsion of foreigners, and he was obliged to act as their executive, while at the same time it is true that he faithfully fulfilled all the provisions of the treaties, as subsequent events have proven. That this was the position of the Tycoon appears by the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1864-'65, pages 468, 529, and 530, which is as follows:

Mr. Pruyn to Gorogio, minister of the Tycoon, December, 1863.

It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the government of His Majesty the Tycoon urged my withdrawal from Yedo because it was aware of the existence of a party hostile to my residing there, and because it was apprehensive for my safety. It is also evident that the government, instead of insisting that the subjects of His Majesty the Tycoon should submit to the treaties, desired to conciliate the hostile daimios by rendering the treaties practically void so far as they guarantee a safe residence in that city. It was for this reason the suggestion was made that Yedo would be less safe during the absence of His Majesty the Tycoon, while, to my mind, directly the reverse was the fact. The assemblage of many daimios at Kioto and the withdrawal of so many of their retainers from Yedo appeared to me to constitute a great element of safety.

Memorandum of conversation between the representatives of allies in 1864.

The Tycoon, by treating with foreigners on a footing of equality, has hurt the national pride of the daimios, while he damaged their interests by reserving to himself the monopoly of our new commercial relations.

To these causes of the discontent of the daimios have soon been added the increase of taxes and other exactions imposed on them under the pretext of providing for the defense of the country.

This hostile attitude has been the more clearly defined from the Tycoonship having just passed into weak hands, and the best guarantee of its power was given up when the daimios, whom it was the custom to keep in Yedo as hostages, were allowed to retire to their territories. These elements of opposition have naturally been concentrated round the Mikado, who can at his pleasure resume the exercise of power which his ancestors and himself had simply delegated.

The members of the high aristocracy could not allow this occasion to pass without taking revenge for the long domination of a dynasty, the founder of which had not even been their equal in rank; and they have put aside their respective rivalries in order to combine and more effectually to attack the reigning Tycoon on the foreign question as his weak point.

And the dispatch of Sir Rutherford Alcock to Earl Russell, of August 25, 1864, (page 86 of the British State Papers of 1865.) That dispatch is as follows:

A fixed resolve to effect the expulsion of foreigners from Yokohama, and a stoppage of their trade, by the old system pursued with the Dutch, prevails at the court of the Mikado. A powerful confederation of daimios exists for the declared purpose of supporting and carrying out this policy with all the means at their command, and the Tycoon with his tributary daimios and adherents are menaced in their existence if they do not adopt it. The Tycoon's life and his power as virtual sovereign are both plotted against. And latterly pressed between two irreconcilable parties, each wielding superior forces to his own, the faction of daimios, acting in the name of the Mikado, the titular and only acknowledged sovereign of the empire, and foreign powers claiming the execution of treaties, the Tycoon and his councilors alike seem to have been distracted by contending fears, and bewildered with divergencies of opinion as to the course to be followed. The expulsion of foreigners or the maintenance of treaties, presented as the sole alternatives, each bringing their own danger, has been a cause of violent dissensions in the palace at Yedo, and ended with the sudden dissolution of the cabinet. The concentration of ships and troops here having latterly left no doubt that there were foreign powers determined to maintain their treaty rights, and one, at least, both able and willing to resist by force of arms if necessary any overt attempt to drive them and their trade from this port, has no doubt had much to do with this political crisis.

The Tycoon and his council, pressed by reiterated commands from Kioto to expel the foreigners, and convinced as they are now that the resolute attitude taken by myself and colleagues, and the material means collected for resistance, meant war if any act of hostility were committed either by the Japanese government or daimios, have no doubt been sore perplexed as to what course might best be steered under such perilous conditions with a Scylla and Charybdis visible on either hand.

The letter of the daimio of Nagato, Choshu, to the allied representatives is thus accounted for. He speaks of the Tycoon as being opposed to the treaty powers, as follows, (Diplomatic Correspondence, 1864 and 1865, page 578:)

Having fired upon foreign ships in the Straits of Simonoseki last year, in obedience to the order of the Mikado and Tycoon, I cannot understand why I was censured by the Tycoon's government as having done wrong in firing. This made it appear as if I had disobeyed the orders of the Mikado; and my two retainers having returned a short time ago with communications, (from the foreign ministers,) I became desirous to refer again to the Mikado in order to obtain his decision. Nagato-no-kami, (son and heir to the Prince of Choshu,) set out for Kioto, but before he had arrived disturbances arose in the capital which, I regret very much to say, obliged him to return without having accomplished the end in view. I have sent Matsu Shimakoso and Ito Shunske to explain to you, and I hope you will understand that henceforth I will offer no opposition to the free passage of the Straits of Simonoseki.

SOVEREIGN PRINCE OF SUWO AND NAGATO IN JAPAN.
Eighthmonth, third day, of the first year of Genji, (3d September, 1864.)

It is clear that that was only the apology of a defeated rebel, for he knew that the Tycoon acted by compulsion as the executive, as appears also from Adams's History of Japan, pages 305, 306, and 353; as follows:

In words the Tycoon's envoys have assured my colleagues of France and myself that the Mikado's edict of expulsion, conveyed to the representatives of the treaty powers as a matter of obligation by the Tycoon, was a dead letter with respect to all action in regard to it.

It was no doubt at that period, especially owing to the isolation in which foreigners lived, most difficult to ascertain the true state of affairs, and to reconcile seeming contradictions, but I think it is quite clear now that the Shogun's ministers were sincere when they said that the Mikado's edict of expulsion, though conveyed to the representatives as a matter of obligation, would in fact be nothing but a dead letter.

* * * * * * *

The memorial failed in its object, and the advisers of the Emperor were successful in causing His Majesty to turn a deaf ear to all supplications in favor of what must now be called the rebellious clan of Choshin.

Thus ended 1863, and it seemed that wiser counsels were prevailing at Kioto in regard to the policy toward foreigners, and that from this time, as the native writer complains, "the scheme of expelling the barbarians fell to pieces like ice during a thaw."

Thus we have this condition of things: a defective treaty; the daimios opposed to the government, opposed to the alleged usurpation of the Tycoon, and the Tycoon obliged to temporize.

Such being the political situation, let us look at the question more directly before us.

The hostility to the foreigners led to outrages which were committed by the daimios as appears by the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1864-'65, volume 3, page 559.

The governments with which your majesty has made treaties regard those treaties as clothed with every sanction necessary to their validity and force. Nor can your majesty, without a sacrifice of honor and sovereignty, allow any of your subjects to deny your perfect right to make such treaties. Your majesty will therefore understand what I say as neither intimating nor admitting that any public act is necessary to confer rights on the treaty powers not already acquired.

Their representatives cannot, however, shut their eyes to the fact that several turbulent and hostile daimios, in order to promote their own selfish purposes, have endeavored to bring into collision the authority of your majesty and the Mikado to interrupt your cordial relations, and to render antagonistic powers which, for more than two centuries, have been exercised in entire harmony.

They have, unfortunately, been successful in making the Mikado believe that the treaties were injurious to Japan and that they could be annulled. This he has called on your majesty to do, leaving no option between opposition to his wishes and a violation of the treaties, which would eventuate in war.

Not, therefore, for the purpose of acquiring any rights or privileges for themselves, but for the preservation of the ancient polity and laws of Japan and the continuance of the exercise of powers by your majesty and the Mikado which have been so long in harmonious action, the treaty powers, through their representatives, would urge the immediate necessity of inducing the Mikado to give those treaties his high sanction, and thus remove every cause of opposition and existing inducements for hostile combinations.

Your majesty has endeavored to reconcile the obligations thus imposed by the Mikado with those assumed with the treaty powers. Their representatives, appreciating the difficulties of your position, have been disposed to exercise great moderation and forbearance. But your majesty must now be satisfied that the time has arrived when it is necessary for you to declare that the treaties must and shall be faithfully observed and to abandon all half-way measures.

Among these outrages, they burned down the British legation; they burned the American legation at Yedo. On the 16th of June, 1863, the American steamer Pembroke, a merchantman, passing through the Straits of Simonoseki, was fired upon from the rebel batteries. This was done by the rebels in defiance of the government of Japan. The topmast of that ship was carried away, and she was otherwise injured. This insult to our flag the Wyoming properly punished. It is worthy of remark that the Wyoming contended against a vastly superior force. The daimios had erected their batteries seventy feet above the level of the sea; they had purchased war vessels and had them there, to wit: the brig Alert, clipper-built, twelve guns, a fast sailer, costing some $45,000; the iron British steamer Lancefield, which cost $160,000; the American bark Webster, which cost $22,000; and the American bark Lanrick. It is important to observe the character of the force with which the Wyoming contended, because the amount of prize-money, if any, that she would under certain circumstances have been entitled to under our law depends in a degree on that fact.

The Wyoming on the 26th of June, 1863, ran close along the batteries and shelled them. Men were seen to jump from the heights into the sea. She made her course between the two vessels which were there, the Lanrick and the Lancefield. She sent a ball through the stern of the Lanrick and sank her. She sent another ball through the boiler of the Lancefield, and produced an explosion by which, according to the report, some forty men were killed. Mr. George S. Fisher, our consul at Yokohama, says the vessels and property destroyed, besides the loss of life, were worth $350,000. All this appears by the following dispatch of Mr. Pruyn to Mr. Seward, in the second volume of the correspondence of 1863 and 1864, pages 1132 and 1133:

My anxiety was relieved by the return of the Wyoming early in the morning of the 20th instant.

From a copy of the report to the Secretary of the Navy, with which I have been furnished by Commander McDougal, it appears he entered the straits on the 16th instant, from the eastward, passing up the Bungo channel. When the Wyoming was seen approaching, a signal gun was fired from the first battery. As she rounded the point the steamer Lancefield, of four guns, the brig Lanrick of ten guns, and a bark of four guns, were seen anchored opposite the village of Simonoseki. All six of the batteries fired on the Wyoming as she steamed past them, carrying the national flag after the first battery had fired—the Wyoming reserving fire till she reached the ships.

By skillfully avoiding the main channel on which the guns of the batteries were trained, and keeping close to the batteries, the shot and shell mostly passed over the vessels, only damaging the rigging. Approaching the vessels, against the remonstrances of the Japanese pilot, who declared he would run aground, Captain McDougal carried the Wyoming between the bark and brig on the one side and the steamer on the other, receiving from and delivering broadsides into each of the ships. It was at this point the Wyoming was most under fire. Putting the ship about, he sent three eleven-inch shells into the Lancefield, the last of which exploded her boilers, and she was then run aground. The brig Lanrick was sinking as the Wyoming left, and the bark badly injured. The Wyoming then returned through the straits, pouring shot and shell into the batteries. The steamer Lancefield had the Japanese flag at the peak, but quickly lowered it. The other vessels carried both the flag of Japan and that of the prince.

I regret to have to say that this success was attended with the loss of four seamen killed and seven wounded, one of whom has since died.

The loss would have been much more severe had it not been for the skill and judgment shown by Captain McDougal in avoiding the usual route by the main channel. The guns on the batteries were depressed so as to strike the hull of passing ships at that point, and stakes were set up near the guns giving the range, so that each gun could be fired as the foremast of the ship came in range with the stake at the gun.

The Lancefield was a fine iron steamer of nearly six hundred tons, purchased of the English firm of Jardine, Mattheson & Co. for the sum of $115,000; and the brig Lanrick, formerly in the opium trade, pierced for eighteen guns, though carrying only sixteen, was purchased of the same firm for $20,000. The bark was built by the Prince of Thizen and sold by him to the Prince of Nagato.

The officers of the custom-house were overheard (as I am informed by the consul-general of the Netherlands) by one of his employés to say that when the boiler of the Lancefield exploded forty men were killed, being scalded or suffocated.

This was a gallant achievement of the Wyoming. The resident minister writes to Mr. Seward that the naval officers looked on and feared the result, and pronounced it a bold and daring deed. It is here worthy of remark as to the passage of the Straits of Simonoseki that by usage merchantmen had the right to the passage of those waters, but no man-of-war had the right, as I shall show, to pass those straits. The Pembroke being a merchantman and being fired upon, the Wyoming was justified in punishing the wrong.

Was not that act of firing on the Pembroke sufficiently punished? Two vessels were destroyed, with the property on board, worth, as Consul Fisher tells us, $350,000, and forty men were killed. Was not our flag vindicated? Was not the account squared? There is a point when the infliction of punishment becomes tyranny and the exaction of compensation robbery. Not only did we thus vindicate that wrong, but, independent of and prior to the treaty of 1864, Japan paid us full pecuniary compensation for all the damage that was done the Pembroke, for the destruction of the American legation at Yedo, and for all demands whatever. They paid all that the United States demanded. We had no possible claim against Japan at that time. To prove this I will read from the diplomatic correspondence of 1864-'65, page 536. It is a communication from our minister resident, Robert H. Pruyn, to Mr. Seward.

The indemnity demanded for the legation—

That is, the burning of the legation at Yedo—

has been paid; and, notwithstanding former declarations that it would be a disgrace to admit it, it was declared to be a just claim, and conceded at once without hesitation or delay.

The government placed in my hand a letter drawn by myself, in which they said that they had directed the governor of Kanagawa, on the 5th of September, to pay me the sum of $1,200—

It ought to be $12,000—

principal and interest of the Pembroke claim, and in which they stated that if not paid on that day on the production of my letter it would be receivable for all public dues to said amount.

And on page 541, in a letter of Mr. Pruyn to Captain Cicero Price of the Jamestown, he says:

The Japanese government having arranged to my satisfaction the claims which I had been instructed by the President of the United States to make upon it, it is my pleasant duty to acknowledge the great assistance which you so promptly rendered me in bringing the negotiations to a successful termination.

That letter is dated in August, 1863. This attack by the foreign ships of the allied powers on Japan was in September, 1864, and at that time we had destroyed vessels and property to the amount of $350,000, killed forty men, had been paid every farthing we demanded for the damage to the Pembroke, for the burning of the legation, and every other possible claim the United States made. Was not the flag vindicated? Was not the account squared? Did they owe us one farthing? In September, 1864, the United States, having no demand, joined with the allied powers in the attack on the batteries in a sea where a ship of war had no right to float. The rebel batteries were still on the heights of the Straits of Simonoseki. On the 15th of August, 1864, the representatives of the allied powers instructed the naval officers to attack those batteries, and, if the batteries did not fire upon them, notwithstanding to make the attack and to destroy them. This is seen in the British dispatch, page 80, signed by our minister:

The undersigned, representatives of treaty powers, having met and taken into consideration the copy of a minute showing the result of the deliberations of the commanding officers of the respective naval forces assembled at Yokohama, and signed on the 12th instant, have agreed as follows:

1. To inform the commanding officers aforesaid that they are entirely relieved from all responsibility with regard to the defense and security of the settlement.

2. To request them, in conformity with the programme of the policy set forth in the memorandum of the undersigned, dated the 22d of July last, to proceed with all convenient speed to open the Straits of Simonoseki, destroying and disarming the batteries of the Prince of Choshu, and otherwise crippling him in all his means of attack; to inform them that the political situation renders it desirable that there should be no considerable delay in the commencement of operations.

3. In the possibility of the Prince of Choshu being intimidated by the imposing nature of the force brought against him, and not firing, to request the naval officers notwithstanding to destroy the batteries and take such means as may be deemed practicable to secure a material guarantee against any future hostilities from the same quarter.

4. To request them to avoid entering into any negotiations with the prince, reserving the solution of all ulterior questions to the action of the Tycoon's government in connection with the foreign representatives.

5. To suggest that any demonstration of force in the vicinity of Osaka be avoided, as possibly giving rise to some new complications and in order not to change the character of this expedition, which ought to be regarded no otherwise than as a chastisement to be inflicted on an outlaw or a pirate.

6. To request the commanding officers to secure the return to Yokohama of such part of the squadron as may not be required for the maintenance of a free passage as soon as the operations here contemplated shall have been completed.

Signed this 15th day of August, 1864, at Yokohama.

RUTHERFORD ALCOCK,
Her Britannic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary in Japan.
LÉON ROCHER,
Ministre Plénipotentiaire de sa Majesté Impériale au Japon.
ROBERT H. PRUYN,
Minister Resident of the United States in Japan.
D. DE GRAEFF VAN POLSBROCK,
Consul-General and Political Agent of His Netherlands Majesty in Japan.

The Japanese government, struggling with a rebellion almost too powerful for them, struggling because they had made a treaty with us, begged for a little time. They gave as a reason why they wanted a few days' delay before that attack was made in their waters by these ships of war, that a rebellion had broken out north of Yedo. This is found in the British Diplomatic Correspondence, page 81, and is as follows:

Taebibana Idzumi no Kami replied that the Gorogio, while acknowledging the necessity of proceedings being taken against the Prince of Choshu and the just cause the treaty powers had for action, were yet most anxious that no steps should be taken at present by any foreign powers. Various causes had tended to interfere with and delay the adoption of measures to that end by the Tycoon; among others, the breaking out of disturbances in the provinces north of Yedo, rendering necessary the dispatch of large bodies of troops in that direction; but it was still the intention of the Tycoon's government to take measures for the removal of the existing obstructions to the navigation of the straits.—British State Papers, page 81.

It should have been granted then. Earl Russell was of the same opinion, for his dispatch dated July 26, 1864, was on its way when this attack was made. I will read that dispatch. It is found in the British Diplomatic Correspondence, page 45. It is to the minister of Great Britain, Sir Rutherford Alcock:

FOREIGN OFFICE, July 26, 1864.

SIR: I have to state to you, with reference to the dispatches which I have lately received from you, that Her Majesty's government positively enjoin you not to undertake any military operations whatever in the interior of Japan; and they would indeed regret the adoption of any measures of hostility against the Japanese government or princes, even though limited to naval operations, unless absolutely required by self-defense. The action of the naval and military forces of Her Majesty in Japan should be limited to the defense and protection of Her Majesty's subjects resident in Japan and of their property and to the maintenance of our treaty rights.

It may be hoped that the power vested in you by Her Majesty's order in council of the 7th of January last, to prohibit, or regulate, or restrict the entrance or passage of British ships into straits or waters of Japan, when such entrance or passage may lead to acts of disturbance or acts of violence or may otherwise endanger the maintenance of peaceful relations or intercourse between Her Majesty's subjects and the subjects of the Tycoon of Japan, will enable you to prevent the occurrence of the necessity for any such measures of hostility to obtain redress for injuries done to British vessels.

And on page 56, on the 18th of August, he, deprecating any such act, says—

That the Tycoon still professes an intention to chastise the Prince of Nagato for his hostile acts, and that he is promoting, by the most expeditious means in his power, the construction of barracks for the regiment of British troops which you have summoned to Yokohama.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the date of that dispatch?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is on the 18th of August, 1864. The other was on the 26th of July, 1864.

The United States had no possible grievance and they only joined the expedition to show their approval of it, as will be seen by our Diplomatic Correspondence of 1864-'65, page 545, where Mr. Pruyn, September 3, 1864, the day before the attack was made, thus writes:

I have also been informed by a vice-minister, attended by Takemeto Kai-no-kami and other governors, that the Tycoon had taken possession of the Yasikis or palaces of Choshu in Yedo, and would proceed with great vigor to execute the orders of the Mikado. At the same time he said he had come down to ask that the fleet should not be sent against him.

The fleet had, as he was aware, already left. The expedition is composed of nine British, four Dutch, three French, and one United States steamer, (chartered,) the Takiang. The British admiral said he would be willing to order the Jamestown to be towed to Simonoseki, if desired; but, as she would be entirely useless when there, it would only mortify the officers and might embarrass his movements. At the same time both he, Admiral James, and the captain commanding the Netherlands squandron, as well as my colleagues, gave it as their opinion that it was exceedingly desirable that our flag should be represented, and that, though the government of Japan fully understood the position of the United States, the daimios not in the confidence of the government might misapprehend it, and that, although the Jamestown would be necessarily retained at this place, it was possible the impression might be created thereby that the United States was not in harmony with the other treaty powers. Under these circumstances Captain Price and myself felt it to be our duty to charter the Takiang, an American steamer, nearly new, of over six hundred tons, and which it is supposed will prove quite serviceable.

So we did not enter into this alliance and join in the attack because we had any reclamations to make or any injury to avenge.

If vessels of war had the right to pass through the Straits of Simonoseki and if rebels in defiance of the government of Japan planted batteries there, I do not know on what principle it is that the government of Japan could be called upon for pecuniary satisfaction. In our recent war we had batteries on the Mississippi, on the Gulf, at Charleston, and elsewhere. Did that fact create any liability on the part of the United States to give remuneration to any one? It certainly did not. But these batteries were on the territory of Japan and commanded waters that were exclusively her territory. No treaty had ever been made opening the straits or inland seas of Japan to any nation. No port had been opened which could naturally be reached through that strait or by those seas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Pembroke was going to Nagasaki from Yokohama through Simonoseki, and Nagasaki was an open port.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The treaty of 1854 opened a port in the northern part of Japan called Hakodadi, which can be seen in the upper part of Japan, and one other, Simoda, which was ingulfed by an earthquake before this transaction and does not appear upon the map.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was dropped out of the map.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The treaty of 1858 opened the port of Kanagawa, which is in the eastern part of Japan, and which you cannot by any possibility reach through the inland seas or through the Straits of Simonoseki. They also opened the port of Nagasaki, which is in the southwestern part of Japan, away below the straits, and in no way connected, or by possibility to be reached through those straits. They also opened the port of Nee-egata, which is in the western part of Japan, three hundred miles away from these seas; so that no one of those ports could by possibility be reached through those straits or through those seas. They opened one other port, which could be reached through those seas, which is the port of Hiogo, at the northerly end of those seas, at the extreme limit of them. But although that port was to be opened by these treaties, by an arrangement it was not actually to be opened until 1868, after this whole transaction. This arrangement appears by the following stipulation by our minister, found in Diplomatic Correspondence of 1864-'65, page 484:

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES IN JAPAN,
Kanagawa, January 28, 1864.

By virtue of the power vested in me by the President of the United States of America, I, Robert H. Pruyn, minister resident of the United States in Japan, do hereby consent that the time for the opening of the cities and ports of Yedo, Osacca, Hiogo, and Nee-egata shall be and is hereby extended for the period of five years, dating from the 1st of January, 1863.

ROBERT H. PRUYN,
Minister Resident of the United States in Japan.

So that there was no port opened by treaty which could be reached through the Straits of Simonoseki or the inland seas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator give me a reference to the volume that contains the treaty he refers to?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is in the second volume of the Revised Statutes, page 449. The treaties are all there.

Mr. HOWE. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to ask him whether he does or does not understand that there is a public right secured to all nations of passing through those straits?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I insist that there is no public right for ships of war to enter or to pass through those straits. There is a right of passage for merchantmen, which is a right established by usage. The Pembroke was lawfully going through those straits when she was fired upon. She was a merchantman, and usage gave her that right. Therefore the Wyoming is commendable in vindicating the rights of the United States; but after those rights were fully vindicated by the destruction of $350,000 worth of property and forty men's lives, after they paid just that bill our Government presented, I say that the claim of this country upon Japan was terminated. In support of the answer I have given to the question put to me by my friend from Wisconsin, I refer to 1 Phillimore on International Law, page 210:

Though the open sea be thus incapable of being subject to the rights of property or jurisdiction, yet reason, practice, and authority have firmly settled that a different rule is applicable to certain portions of the sea.

And first with respect to that portion of the sea which washes the coast of an independent state. Various claims have been made and various opinions pronounced, at different epochs of history, as to the extent to which territorial property and jurisdiction may be extended. But the rule of law may be now considered as fairly established, namely, that this absolute property and jurisdiction do not extend, unless by the specific provisions of a treaty or an unquestioned usage, beyond a marine league (being three miles) or the distance of a cannon-shot from the shore at low tide.

And again, on page 212:

Besides the rights of property and jurisdiction within the limit of cannon-shot from the shore, there are certain portions of the sea which, though they exceed this verge, may, under special circumstances, be prescribed for. Maritime territorial rights extend, as a general rule, over arms of the sea, bays, gulfs, estuaries which are inclosed but not entirely surrounded by lands belonging to one and the same state.

Kent, in the first volume of his Commentaries, pages 29 and 30, says:

Considering the great extent of the line of the American coasts, we have a right to claim, for fiscal and defensive regulations, a liberal extension of maritime jurisdiction; and it would not be unreasonable, as I apprehend, to assume, for domestic purposes connected with our safety and welfare, the control of the waters on our coasts, though included within lines stretching from quite distant headlands, as, for instance, from Cape Ann to Cape Cod, and from Nantucket to Montauk Point, and from that point to the capes of the Delaware, and from the south cape of Florida to the Mississippi.

I also read——

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator before he goes on—for I think by this treaty he has fallen into a mistake—about the time when the port of Hakodadi was to be opened?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The port of Hiogo.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the treaty of 1854 does not mention Hiogo, as far as I can see.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will come to that in a moment. I call attention to another authority. I read from Travers Twiss on Peace, page 250:

If a sea is entirely inclosed by the territory of a nation, and has no other communication with the ocean than by a channel of which that nation may take possession, it appears that such a sea is no less capable of being occupied and becoming property than the land, and it ought to follow the fate of the country that surrounds it. The Black Sea, while its shores were in the exclusive possession of the Ottoman Porte, was an instance of a territorial sea of this character. So likewise straits, which serve as a communication between two seas, and of which the shores on both sides are the territory of one and the same nation, are capable of being reduced into the possession of that nation. In the same manner a bay of the sea, the shores of which are the territory of one and the same nation, and of which the entrance may be effectively defended against all other nations, is capable of being reduced into the possession of a nation. "By this instance," writes Grotius, "it seems to appear that the property and dominion of the sea might belong to him who is in possession of the lands on both sides, though it be open above as a gulf, or above and below as a strait, provided it be not so great a part of the sea as, when compared with the lands on both sides, it cannot be supposed to be a portion of them."

I suppose there is no question that that is the law. The fact is that the Straits of Simonoseki are at one point only half a mile wide, and there is not one of the straits running into those seas anywhere that is six miles wide.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is not the eastern entrance of Simonoseki more than six miles wide?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. No; no one of the entrances to the inland seas is six miles wide, as can be verified by referring to the British admiralty chart, which I presume is in the Library; but that question as to any other strait than the Strait of Simonoseki is not material to the case before us.

Mr. HOWE. But, if I remember the geography, the Straits of Simonoseki do not end with what is called the inland sea of Japan. It is a continuous strait reaching from the ocean outside of Japan to the great sea, the Yellow Sea I think, which separates the island of Japan from the continent. I understand the straits extend clear through.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The strait connects these inland seas with the Sea of Japan.

Mr. HOWE, [pointing to a map.] That is the Sea of Japan. It extends clear through.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The straits are not six miles wide, and on both sides of the straits and the inland sea is the territory of Japan. That being the case Japan has always had the right to control the seas and the straits and had the right to exclude ships of war.

When you come to the case of the Pembroke it is entirely different. There usage had established the right of the merchantman to pass through those waters, and consequently the Wyoming is to be commended in vindicating that right.

The expedition on the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th of September, 1864, made their attack upon the batteries. The United States had no insult to avenge, no indemnity to claim. Against the entreaty of a friendly power this attack was made. When this expedition was over, immediately before the treaty of October, 1864, under which we received in gold $785,000, Japan was under obligation to pay us for nothing unless she was under obligation to pay us for the expense of the unlawful attack of September, 1864. The expense of that attack to the United States was about $12,000, not $785,000 in gold, as appears by the Diplomatic Correspondence of 1864 and 1865, pages 540 and 579. Mr. Pruyn in writing to Mr. Seward, page 580, states the charter-party for the Takiang. The sixth provision reads thus:

The said parties of the second part do engage to pay to the said party of the first part, for the charter or freight of said Takiang during the voyage aforesaid, which shall not exceed the term of one month from the date hereof, the sum of $9,500, lawful gold coin of the United States, in their draft at thirty days' sight on the Secretary of the Navy of the United States, or on the Secretary of State of the United States.

And on page 581 our consul makes the bill of items of the additional expense, English coal, for fuel, $630; Japan coal, &c., making the whole sum $1,848. So the whole amount would be $11,348, for which we received $785,000.

Now we come to the treaty which was thus exacted. The treaty is found in volume 14 of the Statutes at Large, page 665, and provides thus:

The representatives of the United States of America, Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands, in view of the hostile acts of Mori Daizen, prince of Nagato and Suwo, which were assuming such formidable proportions as to make it difficult for the Tycoon faithfully to observe the treaties, having been obliged to send their combined forces to the Straits of Simonoseki in order to destroy the batteries erected by that daimio for the destruction of foreign vessels and the stoppage of trade; and the government of the Tycoon, on whom devolved the duty of chastising this rebellious prince, being held responsible for any damage resulting to the interests of treaty powers, as well as the expenses occasioned by the expedition, agree, &c.

I should like to know on what principle of natural justice or of international law it is that a government contending with a rebellion is bound to pay damages because it did not put down the rebellion. What principle of law is it that places a nation under greater obligations to another nation for damages than it is to its own citizens for not preserving the peace? There is no principle to base such a claim upon. The very basis of the treaty is such that we would not for one instant recognize. Then the treaty further provides that they are to pay $3,000,000.

This sum to include all claims, of whatever nature, for past aggressions on the part of Nagato, whether indemnities, ransom for Simonoseki, or expenses entailed by the operations of the allied squadrons.

All these claims had been paid, with the exception of the $11,348 for the charter-party of the Takiang, for the fuel and the ammunition. Just what our Government asked Japan paid. We had destroyed $350,000 of their property and killed forty of their men. We had no earthly claim against that government. We ought not to exact of a friendly nation a pretended indemnity which we would refuse to any nation under the sun.

Mr. MERRIMON. I desire to ask the Senator a question. If we are not entitled to anything from Japan, as the Senator now declares, I ask is there any reason in point of justice and common honesty why we should not return every dollar of the money if we have obtained it through inadvertence? I cannot suppose that we got it dishonestly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will answer the question, which is a pertinent one. I suppose my friend means whether we should deduct from this sum the prize-money which is provided for in the second section of this act.

Mr. MERRIMON. Yes, sir. I understood the Senator to say a while ago that we were not damaged at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And were not entitled to anything.

Mr. MERRIMON. And that we were not entitled to anything. If we are not entitled to anything, then we must have obtained the money through inadvertence. If so, are we not bound in honor and common honesty to return every dollar of the money?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is the conclusion to which I hope to bring my friends.

Mr. MERRIMON. I think the Senator has a bill in charge which proposes that we should return about $125,000 of the money.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will repeat very briefly the true position. By usage merchant-vessels had a right to pass through the Straits of Simonoseki. The Pembroke was a merchant-vessel passing through those straits. Batteries that had been erected by the rebels and in defiance of the government of Japan fired upon the Pembroke, carried away her mainmast and otherwise injured her, whereupon the Wyoming undertook to punish the wrong.

Mr. MERRIMON. They paid for that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That was a wrong, and the Wyoming did right in trying to avenge it. She did so most gallantly. She destroyed their vessels; she silenced their batteries; she destroyed three hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth of their property and killed forty men. It is right that those men who performed that deed should be rewarded; whether they should be paid out of this indemnity fund is a question for the consideration of the Senate.

So I say that when this expedition took place in September, 1864, Japan did not owe us a farthing; she had paid everything. And she owed us nothing after the expedition of 1864 was over, unless the expense of chartering the Takiang and her expenses are a proper subject-matter for charge, and I think they are not.

Mr. President, our resident minister at Japan, Mr. Pruyn, writes to Mr. Seward on the 29th of October, 1864, that he is not satisfied with this convention. He says in his letter that he would have preferred two million to three million; strange preference if our claim is just. He says that that $3,000,000 was claimed by this treaty, which by its very terms is for indemnity in order that the sum might be an inducement to the Japanese to open to our country other ports, there being a provision in the treaty that if Japan would open other ports they need not pay the $3,000,000. Here is a treaty of indemnity made exorbitant, made more than our minister says it ought to have been made for $785,000 when they did not owe us in any view but $11,348, so that in order to get rid of the exaction Japan would open the ports which they had a perfect right to keep closed. Then he says that the United States is to be paid rather for the moral support than for the material aid that the Takiang afforded.

Mr. President, what is the pecuniary price that the United States ask for the moral support which is put forth against the remonstrances of a friendly power for the promotion of our own interests? We should not charge too highly for moral support, when the expedition which is to render it gives it in the very face of the entreaties for a few days' delay from a friendly power.

The following is from Mr. Pruyn's letter to Mr. Seward, Diplomatic Correspondence 1864-'65, pages 581, 582:

The British minister and myself, prior to meeting the Japanese commissioners, had agreed on $2,000 000 as the sum to be paid, and would have had no difficulty in its division among the powers interested. But some difference was suggested as likely to arise from the considerations whether the moral support afforded was not entitled to weight in such adjustment, and I did not feel that it was incumbent on me to interpose any objection to this view, as the moral support afforded by the United States was considerably in excess of the material support I was enabled to give. I therefore readily agreed to the reference of this delicate question to the home governments, with the understanding that a memorandum which I prepared should be signed and accompany the convention, so as to provide an equitable basis if any should become desirable or necessary by reason of payment of the indemnity being demanded by them. I assented the more readily to the proposition of the envoy of His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of the French to fix the amount at $3,000,000 because I thought it more likely to lead to the substitution of a port as a material compensation for the expenses of the expedition.

Should the Tycoon be averse to the opening of another port and fail to make such offer in lieu of the payment of indemnities and expenses, the amount agreed on will not be regarded as unreasonable. But should he make the offer, it will be at the option of the four powers to accept it in full or in part payment, and in that event a moderate pecuniary fine may be imposed.

In either case provision will be made for a reasonable indemnity for injuries sustained by the Wyoming and Monitor and for the insult to our flag offered by the attack on those vessels, as well as on the Pembroke, the owners of which have received from the Japanese government a sum which covers their loss as estimated by themselves.

There is no possible justification for our retaining this money.

It has been suggested that to return this money would be establishing a bad precedent. Sir, if considering that the insult to our flag had been fully punished, if considering the fact that neither our nation nor our citizens had sustained any damage; if considering the fact that we were dealing with a feeble friendly people, it is right that we should pay back this money; it is establishing a precedent to do right, and the sooner we establish such a precedent and the better and more faithfully we follow it, the more it will be for the glory of our country.

But it has been urged that if we pay back this indemnity money and it shall turn out that the claims brought against the Alabama award do not consume it, then we shall be obliged to pay back to Great Britain the residue of that award. If that result should follow, it ought not to deter us from doing right. But, sir, the claims against that award will consume it, and I fear that for many years after it is gone we shall be pressed to pay claims to be made under that award. The treaty of Washington was this: it fixed certain rules and principles, and then left it to the Geneva tribunal either to refer to arbitration specific claims or to pay the United States an amount in gross. They saw proper to pay us an amount in gross, which was indemnity for the loss of national wealth, that loss being measured by the losses of a certain class of our citizens included within the principles of the treaty. If they added two or three ciphers to the fifteen million that they paid us, they would not have indemnified this country.

But why talk about that? What considerations are there that apply to this case would apply to Great Britain? Here is a feeble, friendly power just emerging from the darkness of ages. The British lion would roar with laughter at the idea of this country being conscience-stricken for fear we had got the advantage of Great Britain. She is out of her tutelage; her teeth are cut. Has she not gathered to herself the manufacturing interests of the world? Has she not swept our commerce from the seas? Is she not the great moneyed center, the vortex that swallows up the wealth of the world and makes every nation pay her tribute?

I hope that the United States will always have a national conscience; but I hope it will be a robust and healthy, and not a morbid, sickly, conscience. When we come to that state of mind, we shall indeed be substituting imbecility for integrity.

Mr. President, by the favor of this people we had opened to us their ports. The inland seas and the approaches to them were their territory. No foreign ship of war had a right to enter those waters. Four powerful nations with seventeen ships of war enter their waters and destroy the batteries. In doing that they did, perhaps, no great injury. It was only an infraction of right. They were rebel batteries. The government of Japan did not want them there. But they did not stop with the destruction of rebel batteries. That being done these four powerful nations with their seventeen ships exact a treaty by which Japan has been obliged to pay $3,000,000 in gold for nothing. It is an exaction that can only be justified on the plea that might makes right. Would we have dealt so with England, with France, or with Germany? Would we have submitted to such an exaction from any nation on the earth? Would we have made such a claim of a nation even inferior to us in power, which was cultured and Christianized? We certainly would not.

It may be true, sir, that the leading nations may modify or reject the just and equitable principles of international law when they are dealing with nations of inferior culture and advancement. It may be true, possibly, though I deny it, that in dealing with Japan as she was in 1863 we need not have been so strict as we would be in dealing with a more enlightened nation; but that consideration fails when we come to consider in 1876 whether we shall cover this money into the Treasury or pay it back. Sir, Japan in these last fourteen years has taken position among the nations of the earth. There never has been a nation which in the same period has made such progress. The office of Tycoon has been swept away. The Mikado has asserted his ancient sway, and now rules over his entire empire with an effective central government. Feudalism and the rule of the daimios have been abolished. The Mikado has ratified the treaties, and the prejudice against foreigners disappears. Japan has ceased to be isolated and secluded and has become a part of the community of the world. A nation of fragments is consolidated. A nation of 33,000,000, inhabiting a country little more than twice the size of New England, extends her hand to us across the Pacific and asks us to be her friend. She has introduced our machinery and our manufactures, our literature, our science, and our arts. She sends her young men to our colleges, where they are the equal in native ability of our own sons. Her representatives are here with us, and nothing deficient in diplomatic propriety or in social culture or courtesy; and the last tidings that come from Japan are that, instead of every sixth successive day being their day of rest, they have adopted the Christian Sabbath, not as a religious day but as a day of rest, and thus by that act adding another proof that that day was made, and was made for man.

Sir, if it were true that enlightened nations were not bound strictly to carry out the principles of international law toward the cannibals of the South Sea Islands, and might even modify them when in 1863 dealing with Japan, still it is not true that in 1876 we can cover that money into the Treasury, for since 1863 Japan has taken her place in the family of nations and can plead her equality as her title to equity.

I do not suppose that there has ever been a subject before Congress which has had so intelligent a support as the measure of paying back this indemnity. We have had petition after petition. In 1873 we had a petition sent to Congress that we should return this money, from many colleges. I will mention a few of them: Williams, Harvard, Vermont College, Yale, California, Bowdoin, Union, Wesleyan University, Burlington (New Jersey) College, University of Michigan, Oberlin (Ohio) College; Northwestern, Illinois; Hartsville University, Beloit College, Wisconsin; Hamilton College, New York; Ripon, Wisconsin; Carroll, Wisconsin; Lafayette; Howard, Alabama; Roanoke, Virginia; Saint Joseph, Missouri, and many others.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator tell us on what ground the petitioners prayed what the petitioners asked?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will read it:

> The undersigned would respectfully represent that there is a large sum of money subject to your disposition, and not yet appropriated, derived from Japan under such circumstances that it would be unbecoming the character of the United States, as a just and generous people, to make use of it for the ordinary purposes of the Government.
>
> For these and other obvious reasons the undersigned would urge upon the attention of Congress the justice as well as the manifest propriety of making provision by which this money should be wisely and efficiently applied for the purposes of education among the people of Japan, under such rules and limitations as Congress may think proper to prescribe, or by which it should be returned, without conditions, to the Japanese government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was there not some talk of establishing an American college with it in connection with this petition?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think not. There is nothing of that kind in the petition that I have observed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not interrupt the Senator, but will take the paper if the Senator please.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There are two petitions. There is another petition which may have some reference to establishing a college there. I do not know how that is.

Mr. President, the cities and counties and States of the Union are all proposing properly to commemorate the centennial of our freedom. Let the Legislature of the nation now, with the approval of the people, perform this act of magnanimity. It will be the commencement of a new era in the intercourse of nations; and better than arch or pyramid, exposition or pageantry, will such a deed at such a time signalize that day and be memorable in history.

Now I come to the question how much shall we pay back? We received $750,000 in gold which, when it reached the Secretary of State, amounted to considerably more by reason of exchange. That sum now amounts, under the care of the Secretary of State, who generally makes everything thrive that he has to do with, to $1,200,000 in gold. A part of the increase is by reason of the appreciation of securities in which the fund has been placed as from time to time transferred. I call the attention of my friend from North Carolina [Mr. MERRIMON] to the fact that the difference between the sum we received from Japan with interest at 6 per cent. and the sum actually now in the fund is $351,681. If we paid them back what we received with 6 per cent. simple interest we should still have $351,681. If we paid them 7 per cent. we should have $300,000. If we paid 10 per cent. we should have $160,000. I understand, and I presume correctly, that the money which was paid us was borrowed from England, a part of it at 7 per cent and the loan sold at 93, and a part of it at 10 per cent.

My own opinion is that, after making just deductions, if there are any just, we should pay them back the whole sum. I can see that there may be a difference of opinion in reference to this. A very considerable part of this money is, as I have stated, from the appreciation of the securities from time to time in which the fund was invested. Much of it is made up by compounding interest, which Mr. Fish has been very careful to do. But I do not think we want any of this money. It did not come to us in the right way.

A word now as to retaining the $125,000 for the officers and crews of the Wyoming and Takiang. The claim of the Wyoming is for punishing the unlawful attack which was made upon the Pembroke, and has no connection with the unlawful expedition of September, 1864. The treaty of 1864 speaks of that transaction as an item of the indemnification. The officers of the Takiang are not responsible for the character of the attack made in September, 1864, because they obeyed the orders of the representative of the country. These vessels, the Lancefield and Lanrick, were piratical vessels. They were making war and cruising against our Government in defiance of and contrary to the will of their government with whom we had a treaty, and that is just what makes a pirate as we have defined in our statutes. On page 1047 of the Revised Statutes, section 5374, it is enacted that any subject of a nation making war at sea or cruising against a vessel of the United States, contrary to a treaty of the United States with such nation, is a pirate and is to be punished as such. It appears by the Revised Statutes, page 834, section 4296, that if these vessels which were sunk had been brought into port and condemned the crew would have been entitled to prize-money. It appears that the value of the property destroyed was $350,000.

Then again, by the Revised Statutes, page 909, section 4635, it is provided that for each person on board a ship of war belonging to an enemy on the destruction of the vessel $100 shall be paid if the enemy is of inferior force, and $200 if it is of equal or superior force to the officers and crew of the ship effecting the destruction. The only technical objection to their receiving this bounty is that they do not come within the provision of the statute because these were not ships belonging to an enemy; they belonged to the pirates, to the daimios; the war was made in direct defiance of the government of Japan.

There are abundant precedents for an allowance of this kind. Captain Oliver Perry and the officers and crew of his squadron for capturing the British vessels on Lake Erie received $255,000, as appears by the Statutes at Large, volume 3, page 130. In a recent case the officers and crew of the United States ship Kearsarge, for the destruction of the Alabama, received $190,000. (17 Statutes at Large, page 53.) Captain Bainbridge, his officers and crew, for the destruction of the British frigate Java, received as prize-money $50,000. (2 Statutes at Large, page 818.)

Mr. President, I think that the officers and crews of these vessels should be paid; but I am much more interested that this money should be returned to Japan for the honor of this country and as a matter of justice than that the officers and crews should be paid. Our nation is financially not absolutely poor, but it is and must be characteristically honest. Our people seek economy, but at the same time they seek fair dealing in all our foreign as well as our private relations, and most of all do they demand that this enlightened Republic shall not take advantage of a feeble friendly power just emerging, in many respects, from the darkness of ages.

I do not believe that we shall lose anything by availing ourselves of this opportunity to perform an act of distinguished justice and magnanimity. I do not think that we can make a better moral, and I doubt whether we can make a better material, investment. It seems to me that the political economy of the whole subject is summed up in the proverb of the wisest of men when he said, "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." We shall never be poorer by performing this act of American justice.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I believe the pending motion is to strike out the second section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WEST in the chair.) The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out of the first section the words "if not incompatible with the relations of the United States to other powers."

Mr. THURMAN. I thought that had been adopted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe not. I should like to make a motion that will bring up the whole bill for consideration.

Mr. THURMAN. Before that is done, I wish to move an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was going to move an indefinite postponement.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no objection to the Senator making that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to postpone the bill indefinitely, and we can test the opinion of the Senate on the general merits of it in that way.

Mr. THURMAN. That leaves the merits of the bill open to debate as much as before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And if the bill should not be postponed, then it can be amended if amendment be deemed necessary.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know, Mr. President, how many reports of committees who carefully examine a subject and report in favor of a measure are necessary in order to secure the approbation of the Senate. In this case I hold in my hand five reports, the expression of the unanimous judgment of five committees, three of the Senate and two of the House of Representatives—opinions formed, as the reports show, after careful investigation of this subject, and opinions which are all in favor of a measure like that which is now before the Senate—all in favor of allowing to the officers and crews of the Wyoming and the Takiang an allowance in analogy to an allowance for prize-money where the piratical vessel is captured, brought into port, and condemned. There has never been an adverse report upon this subject. There has never been a committee that has examined it that was not struck with the justice of the proposition, and consequently it has always been reported favorably from the committees that examined it, and I believe without exception unanimously.

Why is it that it has thus been reported? Because, first, the thing is plainly just on its face, and, in the second place, it is in accordance with the usage of this Government for more than half a century. What is it that makes this bill necessary at all for the benefit of the officers and crews of the Wyoming and Takiang? Simply this, that under our statute as it stands, absurdly as it seems to me, the officers and crew of a vessel of war which sinks a piratical vessel are not entitled to any prize-money at all. It must capture the piratical vessel and bring it into port and have it condemned in a prize-court before they are entitled to prize-money; and hence, if they sink the piratical vessel and cannot bring it into port and have it condemned, they get no prize-money at all. That was precisely this case. We are compelled to treat the Japanese vessels that were sunk by the Wyoming and Takiang as piratical vessels because the Japanese government disavowed the acts of their daimios who ordered those vessels to fire on the Pembroke and to stop all intercourse of the European and American nations with Japan. We are obliged to treat them as piratical vessels because by a sort of convention between Japan and the United States they were treated as pirates. That really was an artificial thing, for, although we were not at war with Japan, flagrant, open war, yet the daimio who undertook to oppose the navigation of the Straits of Simonoseki was acting in accordance with the orders of the Mikado. That is the truth about it, and though the Mikado afterward saw fit to disavow any responsibility for his acts and to insist that they should be treated as piratical or, at least, as unauthorized acts, yet in truth they were acts for which the Japanese government itself was responsible. But we treat them as piratical acts and the vessels as piratical vessels because they were so treated in the convention between the three powers and Japan.

Then comes the application of the rule that where the piratical vessel is not captured and brought into port and condemned there is no prize-money. Very well, let us see how that will work. Where the piratical vessel is sunk, manifestly she cannot be brought into port. What then is done? All that Congress requires is that Congress shall be satisfied that, if she had not been sunk but had been captured and brought into port, she would have been condemned. The fact that our vessels have sunk her and made it impossible to bring her into port and have her condemned in a prize-court shall not defeat the right to prize-money of the officers and crew who have behaved so gallantly in sinking her in the engagement with her, just as gallantly as if she had surrendered, and perhaps more so—that shall not deprive them if you are satisfied that she was a vessel of the description which, if condemned in a prize-court, would have entitled them to prize-money. That is the principle of it. Then how stands this case? We by our treaty with Japan have settled the very question which would have been settled in a prize-court. We have received from Japan six hundred and odd thousand dollars upon the very ground on which a prize-court, if the vessel had surrendered and had been brought into port, would have condemned her as a lawful prize to the Wyoming; and it does not lie in our mouths now to say that she was not a piratical vessel.

What is the object, pray, of having a condemnation in a prize-court? Simply that it may be ascertained that she was a piratical vessel. We have, by our convention with Japan and by receiving from her, in conjunction with two other powers, $3,000,000, of which our share was over $600,000, settled that question; and I say it does not lie in our mouths now to assert that she was not a vessel which would have been condemned if she had been captured—instead of having been sunk—and brought before a prize court. What did we do in the case of the Alabama? Some people called her a pirate; a good many called her a pirate; some people called her a belligerent; but, whether pirate or belligerent, we voted to the officers and crew of the Kearsarge the full value of the ship; whereas in the case of a pirate our prize-laws provide only for giving one-half of the value to the officers and crew of the vessel that captures her, and the other half of the value the United States keeps. And this bill goes on that principle. It does not do even that justice, for the vessels destroyed by the Wyoming were valued, according to the estimates, as is shown by these reports, at $350,000; and instead of giving $175,000, or one-half, to the officers and crews of the Wyoming and Takiang, you propose only to give them $125,000; but in the case of the Kearsarge we gave the whole value of the Alabama and her armament to the officers and crew of the Kearsarge.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. Does he understand that these vessels, which were sunk in 1863, constituted any part of the consideration for which this money was paid?

Mr. THURMAN. I do say that, but for the gallant act of McDougal and Pearson in the Wyoming and the Takiang, you would not have had your $600,000, a part of the $3,000,000.

Mr. HOWE. I do not understand that the Wyoming took part in the attack in the Straits of Simonoseki at all.

Mr. THURMAN. Then my friend has not read any one of these reports.

Mr. HOWE. I am not sure that I have; but I have read several other things, and I think the Senator will find that the Wyoming was not there at all.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Wyoming made her attack on the 26th of June; she shelled the batteries; she destroyed the Lancefield; she destroyed the Lanrick, which our consul, Mr. Fisher, with the property on board of them, says were worth $350,000. In the attack which was made in September, from the 5th to the 7th, the Wyoming was not present, but there the Takiang, having the crew of the Jamestown on board, represented this country.

Mr. THURMAN. So I understood the fact; and I undertake to say that if it had not been for that attack of the Wyoming in July the allied powers would not have had the $3,000,000. It was that action, than which there is no more gallant action in the naval history of this country, which led the way, and showed the power of the United States in those seas, and brought the rulers of Japan to a sense of justice and reason.

Now, sir, I say once more that the fact that the Japanese vessels were destroyed by the Wyoming is no reason why her officers and crew should not have prize-money, any more than it was a reason why the officers and crew of the Kearsarge should not have had prize-money. We voted prize-money to the officers and crew of the Kearsarge, and I believe without a single vote in opposition to it. I may be mistaken about that, but I think I am not mistaken about it; and the very principle upon which we did that authorizes me to say that in this case, too, there should be voted this money to the officers and crews of the Wyoming and the Takiang.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. My understanding is that the attack of the Wyoming was in 1863, and the allied assault was in the following year, so that the immediate cause of the treaty was the attack by the allied powers; and if that be so, I should like to understand what relation the honorable Senator thinks the Wyoming affair had to the treaty securing the indemnity?

Mr. THURMAN. I say it had nearly everything to do with it. The Wyoming alone steamed into that bay; and let me give the Senator some idea of what she did:

In obedience to the orders of the properly constituted authorities of the United States Government, the Wyoming weighed anchor at Kanagawa on the 13th of July, 1863, and set out on her voyage to the Straits of Simonoseki. She entered the bay of Simonoseki on the morning of the 16th of July. When she approached the entrance of the bay the fort next to her fired a signal gun, which was answered by all the forts and by the ships in harbor. At this time the Wyoming had no flag up, but upon the signals being fired she hoisted her flag and proceeded into the bay, keeping as close as she could to the northern shore, contrary to the expectations of the Japanese. The first fort immediately opened a heavy fire upon her, and so did all the others, as she moved slowly on shelling the forts with such an effect as to silence such of them as received her fire. The men in the forts which received shells from the Wyoming were observed to rush off and to jump from the heights in such a precipitate manner as to lead to the belief that the shells must have told with greater effect and done more damage than the Japanese anticipated.

The bark and the brig Lanrick—the two vessels which fired on the Pembroke—were still there, and another vessel also, the steamer Lancefield. Those vessels lay close under the town, the bark being inside, the Lanrick next to her, and the Lancefield outside with steam up, and a great number of men on board apparently making preparations to approach and board the Wyoming. Captain McDougal ordered the Wyoming to be taken in between the Lancefield and the Lanrick, and prepared to give each of them a broadside in passing. The Lanrick fired first, but immediately after the Wyoming delivered her broadside on the two Japanese and sent a ball through the stern of the Lanrick in such a way as to leave her apparently sinking. The Wyoming moved on slowly, firing into the forts and the town as she went, and making a curve to enable her to return to fire on the ships again; but as she was turning the Lancefield moved on across the track of the Wyoming farther into the bay to escape at the western outlet, but the Wyoming while curving brought her great pivot-gun to bear on the Lancefield in her new position and sent a ball right through her boiler, causing her to blow up, and scattering destruction through every part of the vessel; steam, cinders, &c., were blown out in all directions, and such of the crew as were not immediately overwhelmed jumped overboard. The Wyoming returned under a slack fire from the forts, and having done all that she deemed necessary for that time, she returned to Kanagawa to report what had taken place. She arrived here about two a. m. on the 20th of July. The engagement lasted an hour and ten minutes. The Wyoming received eleven shots, and had four men killed in action and seven wounded, one of whom died on the passage back.

That is from the report of one of your committees. I see from another statement that Captain McDougal had six guns and one hundred and sixty men and the Japanese had one hundred and thirty-four guns and about thirteen hundred men. If Senators will look at these reports they will see that no more striking and gallant action perhaps ever was performed by an American ship than was performed by the Wyoming on that occasion. Its effect cannot be doubted.

But what in the world does it matter (although I mentioned it) whether or not we got money out of the Japanese on that account? If the Senator will look back to the treaty he will find that we did, and that the treaty covers the cost of sending the Wyoming there and the injury to the Wyoming. Who can doubt it then? Does anybody doubt it?

Let us see what has been said in answer to the question whether the Wyoming had anything to do with it. Let us see what your committees have thought on that subject, who have examined it, as to whether the action of the Wyoming had anything to do with it. I read from the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, made by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY,] February 27, 1872:

The Japanese vessels having been destroyed were not prizes. Moreover, it may be doubted if they came under the head of "enemy's ships," being piratical and their hostile character not recognized by the Japanese government. Yet it seems to the committee that in equity the officers and crew of the Wyoming are entitled to no less credit for their gallant and meritorious service because they sunk the Japanese ships than they would have been entitled to had they captured them and brought them into port.

Now I ask the attention of my friend from Maine [Mr. MORRILL]—

The indemnity paid by the Japanese government was the result of their good conduct—

That is what your committee said in speaking of the Wyoming—

The indemnity paid by the Japanese government was the result of their good conduct, and their own valor has supplied the Government with the means of rewarding it.

The committee believe that justice and public policy demand that they should be compensated.

That is what your committee said on the 27th of February, 1872. What said your committee on July 9, 1870? I read from the report, made by Senator Scott, of Pennsylvania, a very careful report indeed:

It is also manifest that the officers and crew of the Wyoming did their duty gallantly, and that the fund now invested in bonds is really the product of their service.

I read this in answer to the question of the Senator from Wisconsin and the question of the Senator from Maine. Let us see further what is said about this matter. I will not take up the time of the Senate by reading at length from these reports, but I will read an extract from the report submitted by Mr. Archer, from the House Committee on Naval Affairs, February 2, 1870:

The firing into the Pembroke and the attack upon the Wyoming were piratical acts, and have been so treated, both by the United States and Japan. Prize is allowed in piratical cases only when the craft is captured and condemned, in which case the proceeds of the capture are equally divided between the Government and the captors. In this case there was no capture, although the benefits which accrued to our Government—were infinitely greater than if an actual capture had been made, and it does not come within the letter of the law. Can the claim then rest upon the equity that the "officers and crew, constrained by a discreet and patriotic sense of duty," fought "three piratical or hostile Japanese vessels," and sunk and destroyed two, and that the United States subsequently justified their conduct, by concluding a convention with Japan, whereby she received a full indemnity? The conduct was gallant; it aided to suppress formidable hostilities to our commerce, and contributed to securing the convention of October, 1864, whereby an indemnity was received far beyond the injuries done to the Pembroke and Wyoming.

That is, from the acts of the Wyoming—

I have read from the reports of three committees, two of the Senate and one of the House, and all of them attribute in a large part to the effect produced by the gallant conduct of McDougal and his officers and crew in the Wyoming the convention which resulted in the payment of this indemnity.

I do not rest this claim, however, upon that ground alone. I am not going into a question of dollars and cents and a balancing of accounts between the United States and Commodore McDougal and his officers and crew in order to find whether he has poured more money into our Treasury than it is now proposed to pay to him, his officers and crew, for their gallant services. I will not undertake to compute such an account as that, or strike any such balance. I say that the uniform policy of this country has been to recognize the gallant acts of its naval officers, its sailors and seamen, and to reward them whether the United States ever received one dollar of benefit in a pecuniary point of view from that gallantry or not. I will refer to a few cases, and they are only a part. Others could be cited. What has Congress considered to be good public policy? What has Congress considered to be a proper thing to reward the valor of her naval officers and seamen? What has she considered to be a good thing to do to build up and sustain her Navy, which, small as it has ever been, has yet been great in glory and renown? In order to show what Congress has done let me refer you to a few of the acts of Congress on this subject.

1. To the officers and crew of the United States frigate Constitution, Congress awarded the sum of $50,000 to be distributed as prize-money because of her destruction of the British frigate Guerriere. (2 Statutes at Large, page 818.) That was not prize-money under the general law. That was $50,000 voted as prize-money by a special act of Congress on account of the merits of those officers and seamen and the glory they had shed upon the country.

2. To Captain William Bainbridge, his officers and crew, for the destruction of the British frigate Java, $50,000 was voted to be distributed as prize-money. There is another instance.

3. To the officers and crew of the sloop of war Wasp, for the capture of the British sloop of war Frolic, Congress voted $25,000.

4. To Captain Oliver H. Perry and the officers and crew of his squadron, for the capture of British vessels on Lake Erie, September 10, 1813, $255,000 was voted, and $5,000 to Captain Perry in addition to his share of the aforesaid sum.

These are not instances of money received under the general law in relation to prizes or anything of the kind, but they were acknowledgments by Congress of the obligation due to these gallant men for services so beneficial to the country which contributed so much to its glory and renown. I will pass over the special acts giving medals, swords, &c., for meritorious service in the Navy; but to the officers and crew of the sloop-of-war Wasp, for the capture and destruction of the British vessels Reindeer and Avon, $50,000 were given and one year's pay in addition; to Commodore Decatur, his officers and crew, for the capture of Algerine vessels, which were afterward released and restored to the Dey of Algiers, $100,000; to the officers and crew of the United States steamer Kearsarge, for the destruction of the Alabama, $190,000, the full estimated value of the Alabama.

All these are instances of what Congress with the full approbation of the country has always thought that justice to our sailors and seamen, the interests of the Republic, and the maintenance of a Navy require at the hands of Congress. The bill before the Senate presents another one of this class of cases. Here is a case which more strongly than any I have mentioned appeals to the sense of justice of Congress. In the cases which I have mentioned our officers put no money into the Treasury of the United States, but here the gallant conduct of the officers and crew of the Wyoming did put money into your Treasury, far more money, five times as much money nearly, as it is now proposed to vote them.

I do say, Mr. President, in view of the history of legislation on this subject, in view of the facts of this case, that this is a case of justice delayed. This is a case in which long ago, in my humble judgment, such a bill ought to have been passed, and I for one cannot but hope that a sense of justice will induce the Senate to pass this bill without further delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] to indefinitely postpone the bill now under consideration.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. My impression is that the Senator from Vermont wishes to be heard on the bill. I have sent a page for him, and while he is out of the Chamber, if no one else wishes to say anything on the subject, I will call the attention of the Senate to the treaty. The point was made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] that inasmuch as the Wyoming performed her exploit in July, 1863, and the attack by the allied forces was not made until September, 1864, therefore the Wyoming did not contribute toward obtaining this fund. The parties to the treaty seem to have treated the two encounters as one transaction. In the treaty it is expressly provided that the $3,000,000 is paid as full indemnity for all acts of aggression commencing with the first one in June, 1863. Therefore, in its indemnification the treaty by express terms covers the attack which was made upon the Pembroke, which the Wyoming so gallantly punished.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Mr. President, I only wish to say a very few words on this subject. I examined this question last December somewhat thoroughly, and came to the conclusion that this fund ought to be repaid; that as this money was unjustly extorted from a weak nation it ought to be returned. I shall therefore vote against the postponement of this bill. I shall support the bill with or without the second section. I see no special objection, however, to putting the case, so far as that question is concerned, on the principle of prize-money, and allowing whatever may be found justly due on that ground.

I think this example of national justice and impartiality would redound to the honor of this nation and that it would be an example to other nations. It would show that we are willing to place ourselves upon the ground of strict and impartial justice in dealing with all nations and that when we have received more than was our due we are willing to return it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have been forced to look into this matter a little, and my only doubt about the correctness of my conclusion arises from the circumstance that the honorable Senator from New Jersey seems to have been led to an exactly opposite one; but I still think that, if the Senate will take the trouble to look at exactly what this case is in all its aspects, it cannot fail to come to the conclusion that we obtained this money justly, upon just principles of public indemnity, and that we did not exact any exorbitant sum.

The effort to open Japan, to say nothing now of China, to the influences of civilization and of trade has been a long one. A great many years have been occupied by what are called the treaty powers, the Dutch, the French, the English, and ourselves, and others, in endeavoring to persuade that people to enter into relations with us and to allow our citizens and subjects the same rights of personal freedom and liberty in that country that their subjects would enjoy in ours respectively. More than twenty years ago, in 1854, we entered into a treaty with Japan which was designed to accomplish that object. That treaty provided for freedom of trade and intercourse and the security of private rights, subject to limitations; but in the treaty it was provided that two ports, Simoda and Hakodadi, should be opened, one immediately and the other one year afterward, which would be in 1855 or 1856. There was great delay and difficulty in respect of doing even that. Under a kind of two-faced policy, which seems to have characterized the government of that country, as it does indeed the governments of all Oriental peoples, without exception almost, the Japanese were disinclined, although very ready to make a treaty, to take any steps to make any one of its provisions really effectual to the purposes for which they were designed. So the thing ran along until 1857, when we made a revised treaty with that country by which it was provided that another port, Nagasaki, should be opened. Other provisions were made in respect of the rights of consuls and in respect of the rights of American ships resorting to these ports, now free, that should be opened to American commerce. The next year afterward, in 1858, we made still another treaty, the former one seeming to amount to nothing at all, under which by the third article there were to be opened the following ports:

In addition to the ports of Simoda and Hakodadi, the following ports and towns shall be opened on the dates respectively appended to them, that is to say: Kanagawa on the 4th of July, 1859; Nagasaki on the 4th of July, 1859—

Although by a previous treaty they had engaged to open that port already, but had not done it—

Nee-e-gota on the 1st of January, 1860; Hiogo on the 1st of January, 1863.

The port of Hiogo was opened in 1866 or 1868, as my honorable friend from New Jersey stated, if I correctly understood him.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Senator did correctly understand me. I so stated and I still maintain that that is the position. The treaty was made in 1863, but by a reference which I gave in my speech, and which I have not now before me, the port was not to be opened until 1868. That was afterward modified and it was opened in 1866.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend will bear in mind that I am reading from the treaty of 1858.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I know. It was agreed by the treaty of 1858 that that port should be opened. It was then extended to 1868, and was not to be opened until then.

Mr. EDMUNDS. O, Mr. President, I will come to that. This is a part of the story that my honorable friend forgot to call the attention of the Senate to. I repeat that by the treaty of 1858, the ratifications of which were exchanged at Washington on the 22d of May, 1860, before these dates, every one of these ports, including Hiogo, the last, was to be opened on or before the 1st of January, 1863; and when, in the year 1863, these difficulties took place that treaty was in force. My honorable friend says that by a subsequent arrangement it was postponed. So it was, which merely illustrates what I was endeavoring to call the attention of the Senate to, that these people did not understand and did not in fact observe any treaty. They made treaties for the purpose of obscuring and delaying rights, instead of with any intention of carrying their substantial provisions into effect. That was the situation; and they would have continued to make treaties with us year after year as often as we liked, so long as they could avoid anything under them by making a fresh one with an extension of time and other provisions to take the place of the old. That was the situation in 1863, when the first of these events took place.

The treaty of 1858 was a long one. It provided for the freedom of commerce and of trade, for international rights, the security of private and personal liberty, and the right to trade and to travel, with certain limitations which it is not necessary to refer to. We made no treaty after that until 1864, after these difficulties had commenced, and as a consequence of the fact that the United States had undertaken by force to assert the rights that by public law and by the treaty with this country it was entitled to enforce. I venture to say, and nobody who reads the history of these Oriental nations can doubt it, I believe, that, if we had not resorted to the only right there is among nations for establishing the provisions of treaties, and that is the exercise of power, not one of these ports would have been opened to this day.

Then let us see what took place in 1863 and 1864. The strait of Capellen, as it is called on the charts, anybody who will look at the maps will see is really a species of inland sea that cuts off the lower and southwestern section of the island of Japan and makes the empire of Japan really a series of two or three islands. This strait, the northwestern entrance to which is called the Straits of Simonoseki, connects the great sea of Japan, so called, and the Pacific, two oceans, and that strait according to this chart and according to the atlases, excepting at one northwestern point, averages more than twenty-five miles in width, like the English Channel and the Straits of Dover connecting the Atlantic with the North and the Arctic Seas, excepting that the Straits of Dover happen to be fifteen to eighteen miles wide at the narrowest place, while this at the narrowest place is, as my friend says, only a mile or half a mile, whatever the distance may be, much less than six, which is all that is necessary for my purpose. Therefore, as I understand the principles of public law settled by the writers on public law, it is the right of every ship that sails the seas to pass through those straits unstopped by batteries or any other order of the country that happens to lie upon the side of them. It is not like a great bay or a sea that is inclosed, entirely without exit, within the dominions of a particular government; but it is a passage-way, a highway, that connects two great public seas over which no nation individually has any exclusive jurisdiction whatever. That was the nature of this passage, and through it, to say nothing of public right, in order to enjoy the rights that the treaties gave to the citizens of the United States of trading at these various ports, it was necessary and useful as a matter of safe and convenient navigation to pass through this strait of Capellen and the Straits of Simonoseki to reach these various ports. My honorable friend says that the port of Hiogo is at the southern or southeastern outlet of this strait. At the southeastern part the strait is more than thirty miles wide. Nagasaki, another open port, is on the opposite side of the southwestern island that composes the empire of Japan, and any prudent sailor or ship-master, in reference to the particular climate and the typhoons of those seas, would naturally and always almost, certainly for half the year, in going from Hiogo to Nagasaki, over on the southwestern side, would go through those seas, the distance being but very little greater than to go around the southern end of the island, going around which he is exposed all the time to the dangers of the great ocean. That was the condition of things.

Before I leave that topic, I wish to call the attention of the Senate and of my honorable friend from New Jersey to what is said by writers on public law upon the subject of the public rights of all nations to straits of this character. Vattel, on page 130, says:

All we have said of the parts of the sea near the coast, may be said more particularly, and with much greater reason, of roads, bays, and straits, as still more capable of being possessed, and of greater importance to the safety of the country. But I speak of bays and straits of small extent, and not of those great tracts of sea to which these names are sometimes given, as Hudson's Bay and the Straits of Magellan, over which the empire cannot extend, and still less a right of property.

The Straits of Magellan, as every school-boy knows, are much shorter and much narrower, on the average, than this strait of Capellen which crosses the southern end of the empire of Japan between the Japanese sea and the Pacific Ocean.

A bay, whose entrance can be defended, may be possessed and rendered subject to the laws of the sovereign; and it is important that it should be so, since the country might be much more easily insulted in such a place than on the coast that lies exposed to the winds and the impetuosity of the waves.

I read this in order that Senators may see that I do not make an extract that may be thought to present a one-sided view of the case. I am reading the qualifications and the limitations on both sides of the rule. He proceeds:

It must be remarked with regard to straits that, when they serve for a communication between two seas the navigation of which is common to all or several nations, the nation which possesses the strait cannot refuse the others a passage through it, provided that passage be innocent and attended with no danger to herself.

That was the sort of passage that the commercial marine of the United States were entitled to make through these straits. It was the passage that they were not permitted to make.

Now, Mr. President, I call your attention and that of the Senate to the observations of Mr. Wheaton, and I read from Mr. Lawrence's Wheaton, in order that it may be authority with all sides of the Senate:

Straits are passages communicating from one sea to another. If the navigation of the two seas thus connected is free, the navigation of the channel by which they are connected ought also to be free. Even if such strait be bounded on both sides by the territory of the same sovereign, and is at the same time so narrow as to be commanded by cannon shot from both shores, the exclusive territorial jurisdiction of that sovereign over such strait is controlled by the right of other nations to communicate with the seas thus connected. Such right may, however, be modified by special compact.—Lawrence's Wheaton, page 328.

We had not made any such special compact, neither had any of the treaty powers, (the Christian nations, as they are called in Japan, I believe,) to exclude our commerce from passage through these straits. Quite the reverse; we had undertaken year after year by treaty with this empire to provide for commercial intercourse. We had not undertaken to provide for the passage through these straits, for the reason that by the settled principles of public law and the public practice of all nations we had that right without any treaty. My learned friend from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] recalls to my attention, as an illustrative instance of what I am saying, the Straits of the Dardanelles and the Straits of the Bosporus, connecting the Mediterranean with the Black Sea, which are, it is true, in respect of vessels of war, closed under certain conditions to foreign powers, but they are closed by special compact made with the Ottoman Porte, other nations having regard to the protection of the health of what the European writers have called that "sick man" in public law.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If my friend will permit me, I think the case to which he has alluded, the Dardanelles, the Sea of Marmora, the Bosporus, which connect the Black Sea with the Mediterranean, is a case in point. Russia owns the territory bordering on the Black Sea. It has, as a necessity of commercial intercourse, to have connection between the Black Sea and the Mediterranean; but it has never been claimed that ships of war had a right to pass through those straits and that sea. From immemorial usage it has been recognized and it has been confirmed by the treaties down as late as 1856, that the Ottoman Porte had the right to exclude ships of war from those straits. I presume it has never been claimed as against Japan that ships of war had a right to pass through these inland seas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President let my friend behold "how plain a tale shall put him down." It shall not be any tale of my own, but that of Wheaton:

So long as the shores of the Black Sea were exclusively possessed by Turkey, that sea might with propriety be considered a mare clausum.

Therefore, says my friend, so long as the shores of the Japanese sea bounded upon one side by the Corea and by China, and, I believe, a part of the Russian possessions of Kamtchatka, and by Japan upon the other, exclusively belonged to Japan, the Japanese sea might be a mare clausum, but it so happens that that condition never existed. Japan was never the sovereign of the shores of the Japanese sea on all sides as the Ottoman Empire at one time was of the shores of the Black Sea.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With much pleasure.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Were not both sides of the strait possessed by Japan?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly; but if my honorable friend will look at the course of history and at the law he will find that that is not the question. The question is whether the sea at the two entrances or one entrance of the strait is in the exclusive dominion of the power controlling the strait. In that case it may be considered, they say, a mare clausum; in the other case it may not; and, as Vattel says and as Wheaton says, if the seas at the two ends of the strait are of public right, the strait also is of public right.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the tale which my friend read to me——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not finished the tale.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Was no new tale to me. I had read it, and it seems to me that he does not state it with his usual clearness. I understand that Russia, not the Ottoman Porte, owns the land on a part of the Black Sea, so that the Black Sea is not exclusively within the territory of the Ottoman Porte; and notwithstanding that while Russia owns a part of the land on the Black Sea ships of war are entirely excluded from the Dardanelles and the Bosporus.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, the Senator will excuse me. He says it is not a new tale to him; it is an old one; he has read it. I am sorry he has not profited by it more largely than he appears to have done. I have not made any statement myself about the Black Sea. All that I said I read out of Wheaton, and I will read it again, because it is Wheaton that my honorable friend is contending with, and not with me. I should not venture to enter the lists with my friend on a question of this kind unless I was fortified——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is no necessity for such remarks, I think. It is a plain question of law. It is not entering into any personal contest with my friend.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend must understand that I am not entering into a personal contest with him, and I must repeat that if it were a question of personal consideration and capacity I certainly should not enter into it; but being fortified by Wheaton, and by Lawrence's Wheaton too, as I have said, I feel rather safe in reading it to him:

So long as the shores of the Black Sea were exclusively possessed by Turkey, that sea might with propriety be considered a mare clausum; and there seems no reason to question the right of the Ottoman Porte to exclude other nations from navigating the passage which connects it with the Mediterranean, both shores of this passage being at the same time—

That is, at the same time that the Black Sea was exclusively a mare clausum in her dominions—both shores of this passage being at the same time portions of the Turkish territory.

My friend is only in error, as we sometimes are, because he and I are talking about two different periods of time.

But since the territorial acquisitions made by Russia and the commercial establishments formed by her on the shores of the Euxine both that empire and the other maritime powers have become entitled—

I beg my honorable friend to mark the word—

have become entitled to participate in the commerce of the Black Sea, and consequently to the free navigation of the Dardanelles and the Bosporus.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Does not that refer entirely to the mercantile marine?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may be that it does. I do not at this present time go into the right of vessels of war of other nations to go through the Straits of Simonoseki. No such right has been brought into contest.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then there is no controversy between the honorable Senator and myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg the honorable Senator's pardon. These straits were closed by the authorities of Japan, either national or local, one or the other, either exercising national jurisdiction or exercising local jurisdiction consonant to the national jurisdiction or in opposition to it; some one of these three grounds. While they were closed, no ship of war of ours that I know anything about undertook to go through. What our treaties with her entitled us to do was to trade, and, as an incident of trade, to pass through those public passages which connected two seas; and when at last the Pembroke, having more zeal than discretion, undertook peaceably to go through the straits, that her compeers seeking commerce did not dare to do, she came to grief; and the first visit that I know of from these documents that any vessel of war of the United States made to these straits was that of the Wyoming afterward to endeavor to obtain redress. So I need not discuss the question whether the vessels of war of the United States are entitled of public right to go through or not. We did not ask an indemnity because they had been refused. I do not know that they had been refused. Certainly, so far as the documents show, they never had undertaken to do it. When they went there on two occasions, one in 1863 and the other in 1864, it was not for the purpose of peaceable passage of a vessel of war, as that of one of the nations going through the Dardanelles or the Bosporus, but it was to assert the majesty of the United States at the cannon's mouth, and that right did not depend upon the law of nations in respect of peaceable passage, but upon that law of nations which compels every nation to defend its own interests and the rights of its citizens by force. So we may dismiss the question, so far as this case is concerned, as it appears to me, whether under the particular condition of those straits vessels of war in time of peace might or might not go through.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That was my position.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then my friend and I, as we usually do by discussion, are coming to a common understanding.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I not only did not deny the right, but expressly said that merchantmen had a right by long usage to go through there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not agree with my friend when he speaks of long usage. I assert again that, according to Vattel and Wheaton and public law, the right of vessels to go through straits of this character does not depend upon usage; it is an inherent right that belongs to the public law of nations. That is my proposition. Usage is a thing that arises upon the presumption of a compact at some distant period of time upon which the parties have agreed, but the evidence of which is now lost. That is usage or prescription. Now, my point is that the right of the vessels of the United States, its merchant vessels, to pass these straits did not depend upon usage, but it was a fundamental and inherent right belonging to the ships of the United States sailing the public seas peaceably and for purposes of trade to pass through this strait connecting one great sea with another. My friend says that by long usage the right had been acquired, if I correctly understand him, and he and I in that respect differ about the law.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would submit to my friend that it is an immaterial difference inasmuch as we both agree (unless for the sake of disagreeing we shall depart from our position) that the merchantmen had a right to go through, and neither asserts that the ships of war had that right.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, I do not feel called upon to assert anything about the ships of war. I should maintain, if I were called upon, (but it is quite out of the necessary discussion of this case,) that in the situation of these straits, ships of war going through in the ordinary course of navigation, as convenient in respect of the dangers of the sea and not with any intent to disturb the peace of the inhabitants upon either shore, or to menance their safety, had just as good a right to go through as the merchant ships. That I should maintain, but I need not go into that discussion at all. We all agree now that through these straits at all times the merchant marine of the United States and of the other powers had an absolute right to pass free and unmolested; and we have seen by the treaties which I have read, three or four of them, one after another—the first one never performed by the Japanese; the second one not performed, and the third, and so on—there had been a constant frustration by this nation of the rights that it had professed to bestow upon the citizens of the United States in respect to trade, aided and supported in a most material and effective way by closing these straits to the passage of our merchant ships. That was the situation, and that situation continued, as these public documents show, which Senators can find in the diplomatic correspondence of 1863 and 1864 in all their committee-rooms and in the libraries—the closing of these straits had continued when the affair of the Pembroke took place, in 1863, for more than a year. It had continued for the purpose, I think the documents show, a part of the policy of the Japanese Empire, to avoid coming to blows with foreign powers by making fair-looking treaties that it never intended to observe and did not observe, and in aid of that disposition of frustration it had planted batteries on both sides of these straits and allowed no merchant vessels of any of the nations to go through except at its beck and pleasure.

Was not that an injury to the rights of the United States, as well as an insult to it? It was not the question of whether one vessel or two vessels should be turned away. When it came to be publicly known, as it was immediately, that these seas were closed to commerce and to passage, no wise ship-master would undertake it. No wise merchant would send a venture from any port of the United States or would dispatch a ship when he knew that when it was to reach its point of destination and to endeavor to pass through these public highways of all nations it would be turned away, and when it should endeavor to trade with the ports that the treaties had declared should be opened at a certain time, it was to find them closed. You cannot measure general damage of that kind, as we found at Geneva, on a slate with a pencil by figures. You are obliged to make a general estimate of it and take it in a lump.

Mr. MERRIMON. If it will not be disagreeable to the honorable Senator at this point, I should like to ask him a question; for I am anxious to give a just and wise vote upon this bill. There was rebellion in a locality under the dominion of the Japanese government, and the rebellious authorities fired upon an American ship, offered an insult, and damage was done. I understand from the reports, and from the speech of the honorable Senator from New Jersey, that the Japanese government, as fully and as thoroughly as they could do it, disavowed the insult and disavowed the insulting acts. Afterward, by express stipulation, they agreed that the actual damage done should be measured by $3,000,000; that is, the damage done to the four powers—the British and the French governments and our own and the Netherlands, I believe. Our share of that fund was $785,000. That was supposed to be the amount that would cover our actual damage. Afterward, however, when the account was actually taken, it turns out that our actual damage is much less than that sum, to wit, say $125,000. Now, inasmuch as the Japanese government disavowed the insult and therefore wiped that out, disavowed the hostile act, after we have received the actual indemnity, not speculative indemnity, but the actual indemnity, I submit to the honorable Senator whether we are not bound in common honesty and honor, as well as in sound policy, to return the surplus of that fund.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the honorable Senator states the question, I as of first impression should be largely inclined to agree with him; but I think if the honorable Senator will look at these two volumes of Diplomatic Correspondence, which he can do in one evening, and then at the treaty of 1864 which provided for this indemnity and at the course of historic events that I have been speaking of, he will be satisfied that the case he has stated as an inquiry does not exist here at all.

The firing upon the Pembroke and the amount claimed for it was known before; it had been figured up and submitted to the Japanese government, and I do not know but that they had paid it before. Certainly it was a very small part, if any, of this matter, and I was about coming to the point of knowing exactly how these straits came to be closed, because if they were closed by the power itself, and not by persons in rebellion whom that power by the utmost diligence could not overcome, then I should agree with the Senator from New Jersey that upon the principles of public law the power would not be responsible for it. But was that the case? These straits were opened, not by the Wyoming in 1863 when she went up after the Pembroke had been fired into. She could not do it; she was getting into trouble herself; she sunk two of their ships there easily, and she shelled their batteries, but found it quite convenient and wise to go back again to Yokohama, or wherever she started from, in a hurry. She was not strong enough to accomplish that object. She did not open the straits. The next year, the thing still hanging on, the straits still being closed, the combined powers sent an expedition, our part of it being a hired vessel because the Jamestown then in the Japanese waters was of too deep a draught to get to the proper place. Our authorities hired a vessel which did good service, and went up and all together the powers actually opened the straits. Now let us see what the fact was about how those straits came to be closed.

As in all other well-regulated dominions, there were several parties in Japan. The grand emperor was the Mikado, and his deputy, or whatever he might be called, was the Tycoon. Then he had his cabinets and departments and ministers and the Lord knows what, who carried on the government. When these treaties in respect to foreign powers and in respect to the rights of trade came to be agitated and made by the supreme authority, there was a natural jealousy against them among all the people. It was an innovation; it overturned traditional policy, and was thought to represent quite the reverse of progress. The people were restive; and then there were questions respecting the succession to the crown and the rights of their internal rulers that led to what might be called a state of rebellion, more or less sincere nobody can tell.

But when these straits were thus shut up during 1863, the Tycoon, not the Mikado, told the foreign powers, as these documents show—of course it would be tedious to read them through, but I wish every Senator would do so—and it was told them when the treaty was made, and was put in as a convenient method of easing off the Japanese, (a diplomatic lie, so to speak,) that the prince of the province of Nagato, that lay at the northern narrowest part of the strait, called the Strait of Simonoseki, or whatever it is, was a rebel, and that he was out of his relations, as President Lincoln used to say about the Southern States. He was out of his orbit in respect of the general government, and therefore he had not strength enough to open these straits as he admitted he ought to do. Our representative, Mr. Pruyn, and the English representative, and everybody believed it, and thought that they were doing the Tycoon and Mikado a grand service by going up and opening that thing and clear out this rebel. How did the truth turn out? Now listen. When they went up and opened the straits, and conquered this prince, whose name, signed to a document here, which he submitted to them publicly, and in his own hand, is too long and terrible for me to undertake to read, he said this to them, to which I beg the Senate's attention:

The instructions of the Emperor of Japan—

That is, the Mikado—

and those of the Tycoon are different. Because, in obedience to the Emperor's commands, I, at Simonoseki, fired upon foreign vessels, I have received the name of rebel.

When I appeared to be acting in opposition to the imperial orders a messenger came from the foreign nations to make it known to me and demand its discontinuance. This being the case, Nagato-no-kami (son and heir)—

His son, I suppose—went on horseback to Kioto to learn the Emperor's will. Before arriving there, an insurrection having arisen in Kioto, there was no alternative but to return without having accomplished the mission. Three days ago I heard your illustrious country's ships had come to Ituma Sima. I sent a messenger, Mr. Ama, to you by boat to say that I did not care whether you passed through the straits or not. While on his way you left the island, and the boat returned, thinking to reach you from Simonoseki. Much time having elapsed, in the interval war broke out.

That is, in the interval before he could get into communication with these hostile ships and with his Emperor, and see whether he was to carry out his orders to close the straits or not, the event took place, as often happens in war as we all know.

For this inability to prevent its breaking out I am exceedingly sorry. I have not, from the first, hated foreigners. I consider this war a great affliction to thousands of people. I desire nothing but amity. Please consider the subject well.

That is what this rebel, so called—this prince of Nagato—stated on the spur of the moment, after the straits had been opened and his batteries silenced, was his ground for having resisted, that he was acting under the express orders of the Emperor, and, as he supposed, against the wishes of the Tycoon, because by the messages that had been sent by the ships there seemed to be a misunderstanding about it. Now turn to page 561 of this volume of Diplomatic Correspondence, to the memorandum of the conference held at Yokohama on the 18th of September, 1864:

Present: Sir Rutherford Alcock, K. C. B., Her Majesty's envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary; Monsieur Léon Rocher, minister plenipotentiary of his Imperial Majesty the Emperor of the French; Robert H. Pruyn, esq., minister resident of the United States; Monsieur De Graeff van Polsbrock, his Netherland Majesty's consul-general and political agent; Takemoto Kai-no-kami, principal governor of foreign affairs and confidential agent of the Tycoon; Shibata Hinga-no-kami, governor of foreign affairs; Kolimoto Kai-no-kami, Ometske of the first class.

Then they go on to state their motive. You will observe that both parties are present, the representatives of the Tycoon and all. Now what is said?

Such being the substance of the news brought by the Perseus—

After these batteries had been silenced—and the result of the operations against the Prince of Choshu, who had held the straits closed by batteries for fifteen months, it was now necessary to advert more especially to the prince's alleged justification of this long violation of treaties. The prince not only declared that, as a daimio of Japan, he had acted under the orders both of the Mikado and of the Tycoon in all that he had done, but he further produced certified copies in Japanese of these orders. The foreign representatives, under these circumstances, desired to know what answer the Tycoon's government had to make to this direct charge of complicity.

There being the official documents.

Takemoto Kai-no-kami replied that he would shortly have something to say on this subject—

Which was a diplomatic way of putting it off—but would be glad first to hear anything which the representative might further have to communicate.

Then it goes on to state what the French minister said. I cannot take up your time to read these long things. Finally:

Takemoto Kai-no-kami had to remark:

First. That the order, such as it was, had been transmitted, not by the Tycoon, but by an act of treachery on the part of persons about the Mikado, and without competent authority.

That is to say, although this order was official, and under the great seal of the Empire of Japan, if they have such a thing, somebody had been guilty of an act of indiscretion in carrying the order to that prince, which in diplomatic language (because I have the greatest respect for the Japanese and that empire) is rather a circuitous way of getting around the truth.

Second. That it did not order the prince to fire upon foreign ships, and the proof that such was not its proper meaning might be found in the fact that although a similar order was communicated to all the other daimios, he alone had put that interpetation upon it because it suited his own designs.

To this the American minister replied that although it was true the order was not in express terms to fire, yet as it declared the intention of the Tycoon to cease all intercourse with foreigners on the 20th June, 1863—

Notwithstanding the three solemn treaties that it had made with us, to say nothing of the other powers—the prince might naturally draw the inference that he was expected to treat them as enemies.

Takemoto replied, that such acts were contrary to the Tycoon's wish was further established by his sending down an aid-de-camp at once to cause the prince to stop firing, and this emissary was murdered in the territories of Choshu.

As to the appearance of double-dealing on the part of the Tycoon's government on the one side, concerting measures for the closing of the port of Yokohama, and, on the other, for maintaining the treaties in their integrity, the Tycoon had hitherto been, as the representatives well know, in a position to make something of this kind unavoidable.

There he leaves the strait question, and goes to one of the other numerous—I might say innumerable—acts of aggression and injury to our citizens and to our trade, right in the face of these repeated treaties; and upon this strait question, I cannot do better in getting at the real truth, as I have no doubt this prince stated it, than just call attention to the very next sentence of this double-dealing people. When they come down to Yokohama and refer to the intention to close that port and the efforts made to do it in spite of the treaty, after it had been opened, and asked him what was meant by the apparent double-dealing about that, he says that the position of affairs made "something of this kind unavoidable." That is to say, it was necessary, in order to meet the views of the people of Japan, that the treaties should be skillfully dodged and put off, and that one face should be held out to the foreigner, and that face should be, "We are unable to carry these treaties into effect, because our people are so rebellious and wrong-doing;" and, turning inland, say to the princes and to the people, "Just push on and make all the disturbance you can, and we can persuade these foreigners that the government has no power to let them in, and we shall get the advantage, while they will get the loss, and nobody will be the wiser."

That was the eastern policy; it always has been the eastern policy; and I repeat that no man, as it appears to me, can read all this correspondence consecutively, from beginning to end, and the events that took place in and as a part of it, without being thoroughly satisfied that it was the steadfast policy of this people, government and all, to escape pressure from foreign nations by making these treaties, and then to have them sink like ashes into the sea without a single result coming from them; and to do that, it was a part of their policy to have an apparent rebellion in one province that commanded this great key of the passage between these seas and interfere with the commerce of the ports they had opened, not to open the ports that they had engaged to do, and in other words to absolutely discourage the enterprising merchants and ship-masters of the western nations from undertaking any intercourse or commerce with them at all.

That was the policy, and as a most important part of this policy, as everybody can see, the shutting up for fifteen months of this strait was almost an essential and indispensable step; and they did it. Then came the treaty—because I cannot weary the patience of the Senate by going more into detail in respect to these things. Now what does the treaty under which this money was paid say on its face was the ground for paying it?

The representatives of the United States of America, Great Britain, France, and the Netherlands, in view of the hostile acts of Mori Daizen, Prince of Nagato and Suwo—which were assuming such formidable proportions as to make it difficult for the Tycoon faithfully to observe the treaties.

Which is this same Choshu, for he has another name of Choshu—

That is, you will see, literally true. There is diplomatic language. Even if this Prince of Nagato was going, as is shown by the official correspondence, to stop all intercourse with foreigners on the 20th of July, 1863, under the express orders of these people, still that action would make it difficult for the Tycoon to carry out the treaties. To be sure it was the Tycoon's own act, or the act of the Mikado; but that act of closing the strait did make it difficult, not only difficult but impossible, to carry out in their real sense and their literal spirit the treaties that had been made, which by necessary implication, if this had been a mare clausum, entitled our commerce to pass in reaching Hiogo from Nagasaki, and the reverse, for by the treaty of 1858, as it stood in force when these events took place in 1863 and 1864, Hiogo long before should have been opened. So they say in this carefully-prepared language, which shall injure nobody's feelings and expose nobody to public reproach, that these hostile acts of this Prince—

Make it difficult for the Tycoon faithfully to observe the treaties—

And these powers:

having been obliged to send their combined forces to the Straits of Simonoseki in order to destroy the batteries erected by that daimio for the destruction of foreign vessels and the stoppage of trade—

Bear in mind "and the stoppage of trade"— and the government of the Tycoon, on whom devolved the duty of chastising this rebellious prince—

Acting under their own orders, exposing the document to the firelight, as the saying is, so as to bring out the words between the lines—being held responsible for any damage resulting to the interests of the treaty powers, as well as the expenses occasioned by the expedition—

What is he held responsible for? He is held responsible for the establishment of those batteries, the stoppage of trade by this rebellious prince. It does not say that he as a rebellious prince was doing it, and against the will of his government, but that he was a rebellious prince because he did not go in fully and cheerfully to support these treaties, as the Tycoon and Mikado pretended they wanted to do. That was all he was in rebellion about that anybody knows of; and at the same time that he was doing that, as I have shown, he was acting under the express orders of the Tycoon himself, that he should stop all intercourse on the 20th of July, 1863. Now then, the government of Japan says the treaty is held responsible—for any damage resulting to the interests of the treaty powers as well as the expenses occasioned by the expedition.
